"Our MUTUAL Girl"

In the eleventh issue of this incomparable picture series Margaret, who has been to see Blanche Ring in "When Claudia Smiles" at the Lyric Theatre, becomes so enthusiastic about this musical hit that she pleads with her Aunt for permission to go on the Stage herself. Of course, her Aunt refuses, much to the disappointment of who, determined to have her own way at any cost, starts out to find a position. She applies to a well-known manager with such success that she is actually rehearsing with a ballet when her Aunt finds her. Then she has to go back home and is put to bed.

Remember that none of these things would have happened if Margaret hadn't had the good fortune to be introduced to who is shown on the Screen in two of the Best Scenes of her Production.

EASTER IS COMING SOON, and the part of this reel which is NOT devoted to Margaret's experience trying to "go on the stage," shows this young devotee of fashion at one of the most famous Fifth Avenue Millinery Shops. She has a number of hats sent to her Aunt's house and tries them all on—which is shown distinctly and in the utmost detail. These hats are certainly enough to make her the envy of half of the women in America.

Don't Forget That the Greatest Modern Historical Picture, is Nearing Completion and is Going to Be the Most Important Feature of this Nature Ever Exhibited.

THE LIFE of GENERAL VILLA,

Dear Sirs:-

We beg to give you the following particulars of the trial for Projectors to be used on long throws:- In July last year, the Pinebury Park Skating Rink, London, was opened as a picture house. This hall seats three thousand people, has a 150 ft. throw and a 34 ft. picture. The Directors already had the Tottenham Skating Rink, 150 ft. throw, and the Clapton Skating Rink, 140 ft. throw, but desired to find a projector to give them better results than they were obtaining.

The trial was held at the Tottenham Rink, five or six machines taking part. The machines used were the best known American, English, French and German and in each case a projector was installed for a week running opposite the machine they were then using. After the preliminary trial two projectors were left, namely a Power's machine and the best known English make. The final trial between these two resulted in the selection of the Power's.

So pleased were the Directors with the results obtained at Pinebury Park that we have since installed Power's in the following theatres for this circuit alone:-

Tottenham Skating Rink, 150 ft. 2 machines.
Clapton Skating Rink, 140 ft. 3 cases.
Hampstead Picture Playhouse 140 ft. 3 cases.
Wolverhampton Picture Playhouse 140 ft. 3 cases.
Crouch End Hippodrome 140 ft. 3 cases.

and we have an order for a new Kilburn Palace now building (the largest existing cinema theatre in the British Isles) 240 ft. throw.

We have machines running on similar throws in other parts of the country, but we are particularly pleased with the results obtained on this circuit as the Directors had a certain prejudice against your machine owing to misunderstanding, and the repeat orders have been obtained more by the Power's machine itself than by the efforts of our Salesman.

Yours faithfully,

For the "Walturdaw" Co. Ltd.

THE
WITH WALLACE EDDINGER
and a Supporting Company of Broadway Favorites upon the Special Matinee Presentation at the American Theatre, Saturday morning last.

Moving Picture World
"A stirring six-part melodrama enacted by a fine cast. It is a good story of the sort that will interest and thrill. The settings are such as we have, a right to expect in a good or pretentious production. The situations in the play rouse the blood. It is a melodramatic triumph."

Morning Telegraph
"Daniel V. Arthur has engaged a company composed almost entirely of Broadway favorites for whom this is the first venture into the motion picture field. In picking Miss Gail Kane for the adventuress, Mr. Arthur has shown that his long experience in the 'legitimate' has given him a wizardly intuition as to the casting of a play. Wallace Eddinger as the detective-hero has a role very similar to that in 'Oliver 666,' in which he made such a hit last year, and he plays it as well as anything he has ever done on the boards. The settings are deep, solidly built and beautifully tinted; in other words they look like what they are meant to be and not merely pieces of stage scenery. When we see that the production was made under the art direction of Edward A. Morange, of 'Kismet' fame, we do not wonder at this, however. Considered from every angle, 'The Great Diamond Robbery' proved to be an unqualified photoplay triumph."

The New York Herald
"'The Great Diamond Robbery' has a love story that reaches out for the heartstrings of even the man who has been out of the love business for a score of years. There is beauty of women and constant change of scenery. Every member of the cast if called upon could play his or her part in Broadway."

Motion Picture News
"'The Great Diamond Robbery' is proof that the grand old successes of ten or twenty years ago can 'come back' and repeat their stage triumph on the screen of today. Don't get a chance to draw a full breath between the first act and the finale. Gail Kane's portrayal makes Maria a veritable Vampire, comparable to 'The Woman Who Didn't Care,' in 'A Pool There Was.' Neither Beatrice Henderson nor Katherine Kaetred could have surpassed her."

This is positively the Best Acted, Best Picturized, Most Elaborately Staged and Grippingly Interesting Photo-Play That Has Ever Been Produced.

Startling Facts from Pan-American Co.

Some Pan-American Facts
Although capitalized for but $50,000, the Pan-American Co. is controlling pictures in this country and abroad, which foot up a value of over one million dollars, including cost of production and earning capacity.

"No Axes to Grind"
It is not the secret agent of any firm or manufacturers, and does not hold any financial interest in any of the pictures exploited, therefore, all features will be offered on their just merits. Neither inflated values nor panicky sacrifices will prevail.

Successful Booking Methods Applied
The booking methods adopted by Klaw & Erlanger, Sam S. & Lee Shubert, the Shubert, Inc., and all other first-class circuits, and which placed the theatrical business on its sound financial basis, is employed in routing in the first-class legitimate and high-grade motion picture theatres in all parts of the country.

Big Features on Percentage
Multiple reel features headed by Stars of National reputation, re-productions of famous stage and popular books, or events of great International, or Historic importance may be classified as "desirable" in the "legitimate" theatres, and if managed by showmen who know their business, will generally give far greater returns than could be secured upon flat rentals. There is enough open time to keep twenty prints in constant use, provided the subjects are strong enough cards to get the bookings. The Pan-American is equipped to promote strong features upon these lines, and then place them on flat rentals afterward, when this advertising method will secure top rental prices.

Big Profits in Rentals
The last word in payments for feature pictures is from the exhibitor. If the manufacturer or importer secured this money, it would mean three and four times as great a profit. When the State right buyer comes in between he pays the lowest price possible, and rents at the top price obtainable. Anyone with enough money can buy a picture, but few know how to conduct the disposal on a safe and sane basis. Some over-price and misrepresent, and the exhibitor loses confidence, and where about $2,500 has been paid in rentals for a feature in a good State by the exhibitor, possibly less than $1,000 has been received by the original owners. The Pan-American Co. is the direct connection between the owner and the exhibitor. The advantages it offers to both are considerable.

State Right Bargains
Some owners must receive quick returns for at least a portion of their product. They are in good financial standing, but need ready money. The current dealers are kept in ignorance of these facts. We have the confidence of firms who will listen to an "inside" proposition, if they know it will mean quick business and secrecy, therefore buyers in any part of the country who can qualify will be placed in touch with special prices and sacrifice sales and all the details of screen examination, inspection of copyright, review of paper, etc., etc., can be entrusted to the Pan-American staff by parties who cannot make the trip to New York, and we can get any picture in the market that is for sale, and a great many that are not, and after the purchase is made, we are in position to exploit it in that portion of

Salaried Men Not Wanted
It is an open secret, that out of the twenty-two offices already established in different parts of the country, not one representative is working upon a salary basis. All the employees of "salaried employees" but have dignified their dealings with us and our results. If the heavy weekly expenses of executive offices, repair rooms, vault, stenographer, shipping clerk, and road men is not a part of the business done, they lose money. These representatives, all of them, are men of experience, and recognize the advantages of connecting with us upon such a basis, it is an absolute guarantee that pictures entrusted to our manipulation are going to get all the attention possible, and in the quickest order.

Cutting Up Territory
Our 22 exchanges will soon number 84. It is necessary to supply ALL the feature houses on the lists, and this cannot be done where one firm has but too great an area to cover.

Bonded and Guaranteed
Our knowledge of the standing of our various arrangements and the splendid references furnished in each case, rendered bonding unnecessary but it is mutually agreed to in every case, to satisfy the skeptical owners of pictures who have had their confidence abused in the past by "カラカラ" terms. Furthermore, all bookings are reported daily, remittances are immediate, and all books open to inspection of our traveling auditors at all times.

Manufacturers Represented
Manufacturers and importers without established headquarters in New York may make reasonable arrangements with us for local representation, and we are ready to cover all departments of the business from the acceptance of the negative to the selling of State rights, and the booking of the exhibitor, including reviews and advertisements in all trade papers, lithographing, printing, etc. Bonds in any amount furnished.

Pan-American Territory
Some of our contracts give us World's rights. A great many are for the Western Hemisphere, and others for United States and Canada only. We are arranging for representation in the West Indies, Central and South America, and all U. S. possessions.

Miniature Theater
When the night and day demand is too great upon our "Ivy" projection room we arrange for use of other rooms in the same building, 110 West 40th St. Buyers and exhibitors of feature subjects may make arrangements with us at any time for screen examination.

Fifty Features Our "Slogan"
Fifty features--each one from three reels in length to a full evening--constitute our supply, new ones being released to take the places of those who have cover the territory for first, second, and third runs.

You Can Shut Your Eyes and Pick Out a Strong Feature

If we weren’t so sure of our ground we wouldn’t be urging exhibitors to see our features before they book them. Unfortunately we cannot lug our reels around the country and show them to exhibitors in the remote sections of our territory. But exhibitors in or near New York are invited to see our latest releases at the Academy of Music, Fourteenth St. and Irving Place at 10:30 a.m. Wednesdays and Fridays of each week. And they can visit our headquarters at 130 West Forty-sixth St. any day and see as many features as they desire. We have built two beautiful little theatres on the premises for special exhibitors’ performances.

Auxiliary Exchanges In Buffalo and Boston

We are establishing exchanges in Boston for the convenience of New England exhibitors and in Buffalo for the upper part of New York State. We are proceeding as rapidly as good judgment permits, but—

In the meantime a great many ambitious, well-meaning exhibitors in New York City and State, Northern New Jersey and New England, are wasting valuable time struggling with doubt and suspicion. As a matter of fact anyone of them can shut his eyes, put his finger on any feature listed above, and secure a high class money-drawing attraction.

J. J. Kennedy and V. S. Clash in Patents Suit

General Film Head and Government Attorney Engage in Battle Royal of Wits at Hearing in the Motion Picture Litigation—Important Extracts from the Cross-Examination

The present series of hearings before a referee at the Manhattan Hotel, New York City, in the suit of the United States against the Motion Picture Patents Company and the General Film Company reached their natural climax on Friday, March 20, when Jeremiah J. Kennedy, president of the General Film Company, was cross-examined during the better part of two sessions by Special Deputy United States Attorney-General Edward P. Grosvenor.

The cross-examination soon resolved itself into a spirited battle of wits between the General Film chief and the Government lawyer. The fight was made, as has been anticipated, over the frank and unequivocal explanation Mr. Kennedy had given of the formation of the Patents Company and the General Film, of its purposes and its operations.

Mr. Kennedy not only defended his own statements with spirit, but adhered to them stoutly and for the most part consistently throughout the session. To the fusillade of questions shot at him by Mr. Grosvenor, he returned clear and careful answers, conceding facts with readiness, but not yielding an inch of debatable ground.

The legal batteries of the Government were trained in particular upon these declarations of Mr. Kennedy:
1. That the relations between the Motion Picture Patents Company and the General Film Company were solely the relations between licensor and licensee.
2. That the General Film Company was not organized for the purposes of acquiring control of all the licensed rental exchanges in the United States, and at no time had any such intention.
3. That had such been the desire of the General Film Company, its organization was not such as would permit it to handle the entire exchange business of the country.
4. That the General Film Company did not take the initiative in the purchase of such exchanges as it did acquire, but was approached with offers and even pleas by the exchange owners.
5. That the General Film Company was formed as an experiment, to furnish a remedy for the evils that then existed in connection with the distribution of films, and that it is still essentially an experiment.
6. That the General Film Company always had more exchange property offered to it than it was fitted to handle.

The most earnest debate between Attorney Grosvenor and Mr. Kennedy centered around the question of the General Film Company's intentions regarding the exchanges of the country.

After some questioning regarding the composition of the General Film Board of Directors, Mr. Grosvenor began:

"Q. On page 3467 of the printed record, on your direct examination, you testified: 'Q. At the time of the formation of the General Film Company, was it your intention, or was it the intention of your associates, so far as you know, to acquire all the rental exchanges throughout the United States? 'A. It was not, and the growth of the business was something that we were entirely unprepared for. Have you anything you wish to add to that answer? Mr. Kennedy: Nothing whatever.

'Q. Let me ask you this question: At the time of the formation of the General Film Company, was it your intention, or was it the intention of your associates, so far as you know, to acquire all the licensed rental exchanges throughout the United States? Mr. Kennedy: It was not.

'Q. What was the purpose of making up the estimate which was made up before the General Film Company started in business, of the value of the business of all the licensed rental exchanges? A. I had nothing to do with the making up of any estimate except an estimate that was made very quickly for the purpose of filing Mr. John Collier some time previously in preparing a chart to show the magnitude of the motion picture business in this country, and its importance as a factor in modern life, as he put it. More particularly, in connection with a meeting of the Playgrounds Association, which was to be held some months subsequently, and which it was expected would be attended by 1,800 delegates, who were very desirous of considering the motion picture as a new factor to be reckoned with and utilized.

'Q. I direct your attention to Petitioner's Exhibit 78, printed in Volume 1 of the record, page 251, being a letter addressed by you to Mr. William Pelzer, dated January 25, 1912, in which you say: Some time before the General Film Company was organized an estimate of the value of the business of exchanges leasing licensed motion pictures was made by men familiar with the manufacture of motion pictures, and also the business of exchanges. According to this estimate, the value of said business was $3,468,547. Did you make up that estimate? A. Mr. Collier and I made it up together at my office.

'Q. When was this made up? A. To the best of my recollection, it was about August or September, 1909.'

After some minor questions bearing on the details of this estimate, Mr. Grosvenor went on:

"Q. Exhibit 80, of the minutes of the meeting of the Board of Directors, held October 11, 1910, being in the record,
THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Volume 1, page 266, at which according to the minutes, the following were present: Messrs. Kennedy, Berst, Dyer, Kleine, Long, Lubin, Selig, Smith, Spoor and Pelzer, secretaries—state that you already had said so forth. Have you read these minutes recently? A. No.

"Q. These minutes refer to a report having been made by you on behalf of the Executive Committee, that the company desired a thirty-nine exchange. Was that report in writing? A. No. Verbal report.

"Q. How long had the General Film Company been in business on October 11, 1910? A. Since June 6, 1910.

"Q. Its first business, then, four months and five days? A. Approximately, yes.

"Q. When did the company form the intent to buy thirty-nine exchanges in four months? The Witness: It never formed such an intention.

"Q. The confirmation you testified that the company never intended to get all the licensed exchanges. What made you start out to buy the exchanges so quickly? A. They were practically forced upon—we were practically forced to do so by the attitude of a number of our Directors, and by the fact that we were urgently solicited by would-be sellers to purchase.

"Q. The Patents Company cancelled a number of licenses in April, May, June, and July, 1910, did it not? A. I know of only two that were cancelled, and I have knowledge concerning the reasons. The two I refer to are the Imperial Film Exchange and Miles Brothers.

"Q. I direct your attention to Exhibit 61, Volume 1, page 159, where it is recorded that the following licenses were cancelled: Miles Brothers, Boston, Massachusetts, April 22, 1910; Miles Brothers, New York, New York, April 29, 1910; Miles Brothers, San Francisco, California, June 23, 1910; Kay Film Exchange, Los Angeles, California, June 23, 1910; O. T. Crawford Film Exchange Company, St. Louis, Missouri, July 19, 1910; H. & H. Film Service, Chicago, Illinois, October 11, 1910. Does that refresh your recollection as to the number of exchanges whose licenses were cancelled in the period between April and October, 1910? A. Well, I was referring to the cancellations concerning which I had very definite knowledge or complete knowledge.

"Q. Returning to these minutes, Exhibit 50, page 266, may I read to you 4. "Total payments authorized for all exchanges in entire country; stock, $99,800; cash, $2,180,000." What authorization does that paragraph in the minutes refer to? A. It does not refer to any particular authorization by the Board. Those minutes are incomplete. I remember when they were read for approval. It said only part of what took place.

"Q. Were these figures named in the minutes all read by you to the Directors present? A. They were. But that is not the question.

"Q. (Interrupting): The statement is also made, "Payments authorized for exchanges owned October 10th, stock, $91,400; cash, $1,483,300." When were those payments authorized? A. Such payments were never authorized by the Board for the purpose and for that matter.

"Q. Who did authorize them? A. A number of the Directors in settling a method of computing the relative value of the property—the value of the property of Mr. Kleine's compared to other properties, agreed to a basis of computation which they would not object to, and would not criticize if carried out in any transactions that might arise later, and in that way, I used the conversation and the minutes referred to as a basis for comparison as shown there. I have got to tell you the whole story, and then it will be perfectly clear.

"Q. In any event, Mr. Kennedy, you had, at the time this meeting was held, paid $91,400 in stock, and in cash $131,000. A. Yes.

"Q. And in the purchase of those exchanges, you adopted a standard or a method for determining the value of the exchange? A. We did not.

"Q. Well, what was this basis which you have just testified to? A. It was a basis used in making comparisons between property acquired and property not acquired in connection with Mr. Kleine's stipulation that if any property should be purchased later at a relatively higher price than was paid to him for the property, such higher price should apply to the property that he sold. That forced the adoption, as I have stated before, of a basis of averaging prices according to the receipts, regardless of the volume of business, the turnover or any other property, such a property. But that did not have anything to do with what the prices paid for such property as was purchased. In each case a separate estimate was made of the property offered for sale. Its value to the General Film Company was determined. All the factors relating—or affecting such value, were carefully considered, and in that way the purchase price was arrived at.

"Q. When you bought Kleine's exchanges, you adopted some method of determining the value of the exchanges? A. There was no method adopted then or at any other time, except to fix a value upon such property, the same as a real estate expertfixes a value upon a building by examining it and considering its location, its possible earning power, future development, and the various other factors which have to do with values.

"Q. At the time you had this conversation with Kleine, you and he and other Directors all knew that the General Film Company was going to acquire other exchanges besides those acquired at the time the General Film Company started in business? A. We did not know anything of the kind.

"Q. What was the purpose, then, of this conversation with Kleine, if not the intention of the company to acquire other exchanges? A. It was a condition which should apply in the event of any additional similar property being purchased at a later time.

"Q. Didn't you expect, at the time you had this conversation with Kleine, to acquire other exchanges? A. I don't know when I expected. There was no such purpose. I do not know that I had any expectations.

"Q. You want the record to stand that you did or did not intend, at the time the General Film Company acquired the Kleine exchanges, to acquire other exchanges? A. I was about to add that that was not my intention, and I do not know of its being the intention of any other Director of the General Film Company.

"Q. In other words, had an open mind on the subject? A. Entirely open mind, and the idea was that if this method did not afford relief for the business and the evils in the business, that some other method would have to be found, some other form of relief for the exhibitor and the producer, particularly, and the house exchange.

"Q. Why in the minutes of October 11, 1910, do you refer to the cost or estimate of acquiring all the exchanges in the entire country, if it was not your intention at that time to acquire any of them? A. Yes, we were called upon or requested to purchase exchange property, and to show the magnitude of our obligations in the event of the Board of Directors insisting upon the company purchasing the properties of exchanges that were offered to us, so as to show that the favor we were opposed to the purchase of so much property so rapidly. To put the burden of responsibility entirely on the Board of Directors.

"Q. Referring to the meetings of the Board of Directors of March 13, 1911, being Petitioner's Exhibit 84, printed in the record, Volume 1, page 251 and following, that exhibit gives a list of the licensed exchanges not purchased at that time by the company. Please examine that list. A. (Witness examines list.) I have examined it.

"Q. The minutes state, page 252: 'The following statement of licensed exchanges in the United States was submitted for the information of the Board: Was that statement submitted by you? A. Every statement submitted was submitted by me.

"Q. Then that statement was submitted by you? A. Yes. If the statement was submitted. I have no recollection of it. Of course.

"Q. That statement shows: 'Total number of licensed exchanges when General Film Company commenced business, June 6, 1910, sixty-nine; number of exchange licenses transferred since June 6, 1910, eleven. Does the letter statement refresh your recollection as to the licenses of exchanges having been cancelled in the period of time that the General Film Company was acquiring these exchanges? A. I have no recollection to be refreshed. That information (Continued on page 55)

Cleveland, March 23.

The matter of multiple reels was brought up by Mr. Bullock, of Cleveland, and the result was this resolution:

"Is the multiple reel a benefit or a detriment to the business of the live and ten-cent moving picture theatre, and are the regular exchanges releasing too many or not, for daily service?"

"Resolved, That the subject be recommended for discussion by all organized bodies of exhibitors in the United States, and said subject be submitted to the convention at New York in June for final action, and be it

"Further Resolved, That the trade publications be requested to give wide publicity to the exhibitors in order to find out, if possible, a proper solution of the multiple reel problem."

CONSIDERABLE interest was manifested by all present in the coming convention and exposition, to be held in New York at the Grand Central Palace, June 8 to the 13, and everyone present gave assurances that they would attend. Among other things it was decided that this convention in New York, instead of being confined to elective delegates from the State organizations affiliated with the International Motion Picture Association, shall be open to all bona fide exhibitors of the United States, all of whom will be given a voice and vote in all matters coming before the convention.

A program is being arranged to make every session of the convention of the utmost value to the exhibitors who attended.

"Resolved, That we endorse the work of the National Board of Censorship, engaged under the jurisdiction of the People's Institute of New York City.

"Further Resolved, That we recommend to all Exhibitors' Associations that they urge their members and unattached exhibitors to refuse to exhibit any picture unless it has been approved by the National Board of Censorship.

"Further Resolved, That in order to enable the individual exhibitor to keep informed as to what eliminations are ordered by the aforesaid board, we recommend that each exhibitor be placed upon the weekly mailing list for the National Board of Censorship Weekly Bulletins."

It was decided as one of the features of the convention to have an entire day set aside as a "Trade Day" when the leading film manufacturers, exchange men, feature men, supply dealers, etc., would be invited to the convention for a general conference and discussion of trade conditions.

On Thursday evening a meeting was held in the Crystal Hall of the hotel, at which Frederick C. Howe, of the People's Institute and chairman of the National Board of Censorship, gave a lengthy address explaining in detail the workings of the Censorship Board and afterwards answered questions put to him by the exhibitors and others present.

After an informal meeting of the board on Wednesday morning, they were entertained at a luncheon by the Cleveland exhibitors, which was attended by many city officials and exhibitors from Cleveland and other cities of Northern Ohio. Fully 150 were seated at the tables.

LETTERS were received from Judge A. P. Tugwell, of California, vice-president of the International Association; Thos. Furness, of Duluth, Minn.; Otto N. Rath, of Cleveland; F. J. Rembusch, of Indiana, and Dr. J. M. Rhoades, of Indiana, and a telegram from Ernest H. Horstmann, president of the Massachusetts Association, all expressing their allegiance and best wishes. Business and personal matters made it impossible for them to be present.

Wednesday afternoon and all day Thursday were devoted to a discussion of conditions affecting the trade.
Universal City Will Move

New Site, Ten Miles from Los Angeles, Chosen for Unique Film Community—Company Will Have Its Own Railroad

Universal City is to be moved. The only incorporated moving picture city in the world will pile its effects into the moving vans in a few weeks and find a new locale.

This information came from President Carl Laemmle, of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, upon his return to New York from the Pacific Coast last week. Mr. Laemmle said that the determination to move had been crystallizing ever since his last visit to the coast.

"The remote location of the old site," remarked Mr. Laemmle, "and the difficulties of transportation involved, especially in time of flood, made it imperative that we find a more desirable location for Universal City. For several months we have been negotiating to that end, and one of the principal objects of my trip was to get this matter settled."

"On March 7, terms were finally arranged whereby the Universal comes into possession of a 750-acre ranch in the San Fernando Valley which, for accessible location and variety of natural advantages, is without a rival in America. It is our intention to spend half a million dollars immediately upon this tract, and make it the greatest moving picture community in the world."

The new site of Universal City is located about ten miles from the heart of Los Angeles on El Camino Real (the King's Highway of the old mission days), half way between the missions of San Gabriel and San Fernando, on the electric line that runs from Los Angeles to Van Nuys, making it accessible at all times.

The tract runs through to the Los Angeles River, upon which stream it has a mile frontage, finely fringed with trees and shrubbery, making an excellent background for pictures. The riverbed is filled with sand, gravel and stone, affording an abundance of cheap building materials.

It is the intention of the Universal to construct all of its buildings from reinforced concrete, rendering them strictly fireproof. The intervening mile from the Boulevard to the river will be covered by a railway that is being especially constructed with complete equipment of passenger and freight cars to haul building material and passengers. Incidentally, it will enable the company to make realistic pictures of railroad life without stirring off its own property.

The ranch is only three and one-half miles from the present Hollywood studios of the Universal, and is famous historical ground. Here, in 1846, General Fremont in his campaign against the Mexicans, made a strong entrenchment to protect his command from a flank attack by the enemy in the San Fernando Valley. A hill in the center of the ranch was the scene of a bit of strategy on Fremont's part that enabled him to win Southern California for the U. S.

Mr. Laemmle is highly pleased with the acquisition of the property, as its possession will give all the facilities required for the production of film subjects of any scope.

A star at thirteen, he is now one of the Thanhouser juvenile leads. His first appearance with that company is in "Cardinal Richelieu's Ward," as Francois.

SCENARIO COPYRIGHT LAW IN VIEW

Congressman Frank B. Willis, of Ohio, last Friday notified Congress that he had in preparation a measure to secure copyright protection to motion picture manuscripts and that he would introduce his bill within a few days. William Lord Wright, the photoplaywright and special writer, conferred with Congressman Willis recently, and the legislation begins as a result.

There is no intention to interfere with motion picture legislation in any way, it is said, but to secure protection to photoplay authors and endeavor to check all cries of "plot stealing" that are prevalent, but not merited. It is believed the manufacturers will not object to this bill, for it relieves them of much responsibility.

TWENTY-FIVE PER CENT FILM IMPORT TAX IN AUSTRALIA

Motion picture films that are imported into Australia must now pay a tax of 25 per cent of their value. Formerly the customs authorities there regarded them as photographic articles.

Now they are considered printed matter, and as such must pay the 25 per cent tax under the tariff laws of the Australian Commonwealth.
Plagiarism Question Stirs Paris

By Our Paris Correspondent

Decision Favoring Paul Hervieu, the Dramatist, Against the Gaumont Company Rouses Wide Discussion Against the Court in Ruling Reviewed—Defendant at Once Files an Appeal

The Motion Picture News

PARIS, March 15.

ALL the talk in cinematographic circles in Paris is over the victory of Paul Hervieu, the dramatist, in his suit against the Gaumont Company (Societe des Establissements Gaumont), the judgment in which was handed down on March 4, by the Tribunal Civil of the Seine.

The Gaumont Company has taken an appeal, as a matter of course, and so M. Hervieu will not enjoy the fruits of his victory at once, if indeed, he ever does.

The unusual interest manifested in the suit for damages and its outcome is due, not so much to the prominence of the parties involved, as to the fact that the Dramatists' Association has been clamoring for new and strict laws protecting their works against what they term "piracy" by the motion picture producers.

Whether the suit was meant to be a test case or not, it has, in effect, become one, for the court took occasion to give at length its views upon what constituted plagiarism in a cinematographic version of a drama or a book.

The play in question was "The Enigma" ("L'Enigme") and was produced at the Comedie Francaise. Some time after its production, the Gaumont firm put out a fotoplay entitled "Which?" ("Laquelle?"). Hervieu brought an action, declaring the film was an unauthorized screen reproduction of his drama, demanded 5,000 francs ($1,000) damages from the Societe Gaumont, and the destruction of the film.

The Civil Tribunal of the Seine found a verdict in favor of the playwright. During the trial of the suit, the Societe Des Auteurs Dramatiques, or the Dramatists' Association, carried on a propaganda in favor of severer statutes against the motion picture companies, while the trade journals entered the arena with impassioned articles, upbraiding the playwrights for their narrow and timid attitude, and accusing them of being panic-stricken, in behalf of the legitimate theatre, at the popularity of the cinemas.

Hervieu won his case in 1909. The court ordered the payment of $1,000 damages to him, and the destruction of the film in his presence within fifteen days, on pain of $100 additional fine for each day of delay. The appeal, of course, automatically stays the operation of this verdict.

The important feature of the case, however, in the opinion of the court as to what constitutes plagiarism on the screen. The digest of the opinion, as given in "Le Cinema," the Paris weekly, is so succinct and lucid as to deserve reproduction here for the benefit of The Motion Picture News readers:

"The fundamental ideas in a play, a novel or a photoplay cannot be unlawfully appropriated. They constitute the 'common fund,' as it were, from which everyone is privileged to draw ad libitum.

"It is not plagiarism to treat a theme in a new manner, for the different developments of the same theme, the different combinations of episodes and the diverse settings that may be given it, can have no connection with each other.

"WHEN the similarity arises from the fact that the fundamental idea is taken from the 'common fund' above referred to, and the individual originality of the work in question is not used in the cinematographic version, there is no plagiarism.

"The proprietary rights of an author in a novel or a play consist of the form which he gives his subject to make it an individual work by the treatment of his characters and the arrangement of events, by the harmony of its various parts and by the methods through which he counts upon arousing the interest of his readers or his audience, and awaken- ing in them different emotions.

"When the elements of the literary or dramatic work are found in a photoplay similar in theme, such a photoplay may be regarded as guilty of plagiarism.

"It is, therefore, failure to recognize an author's rights if the maker of a film reproduces the scenes of the original work in a series of pictures having the same point of departure, bringing the same persons together in the same situations, evolving these according to the same conceptions and leading them along the same lines to the final denouement, after having given the work an atmosphere which conveys the same impressions as that to which the literary original owes its individuality."

"We find that what is indisputably true of isolated incidents taken from the life around us does not apply to such scenes when they are combined for the purpose of making a work that is homogeneous and individual, which, by a special, systematic and interesting grouping of persons, events and ideas, makes of these fragments, uninteresting when they are taken separately, a work that appeals because of the form the writer gives it, the harmony of its component parts, and the skill and design with which it is conceived, to arouse interest and awaken sentiments and emotions."

The verdict against the film producing company was then pronounced by the court.

The problem of classifying motion picture dramas, whether to treat them as books or as theatrical productions, has been one that has puzzled the French courts for five years.

The Court of Paris, early in 1909, declined to regard a photoplay as a dramatic work. About the same time, the Civil Tribunal of the Seine and the Court of Paris both gravely considered the question, "Is a cinematographic film to be considered an illustrated edition of a dramatic work?"

The question was decided in the negative.

In November, 1909, some months after the earlier decision, the Court of Paris laid down the principle that the making of a film was equivalent to the publication, in book form, of a drama, and that its projection was equivalent to a production on the stage.

Less than three years later, in decisions rendered in December, 1911, and July, 1912, the Civil Tribunal of the Seine formally declared that the projection of a motion picture film was tantamount to a dramatic production, recognizing that the same illusions as were produced by a stage play were created by the film-drama, the only point of similarity lacking being the dialogue.

It is significant that both courts held, in cases decided during 1911 and 1912, that in their opinion, motion picture productions of plays accrued the same sort of benefit to the author as did the theatrical representations.

But the French playwrights have neglected to take this judicial reassurance seriously, and are still clamoring for the protection of their rights and supremacy of the theatre over what they regard as the unjust invasion of the cinema into their domain.
"Reel Fellows" Now Fifty Strong

Month's Growth Astonishes Founders—Charter Closed and Officers Elected at Meeting of March 18

WHILE the permanent organization of the Reel Fellows Club of Chicago is not more than ten days old, a membership of more than fifty is already assured. A little over a month ago, at the solicitation of the secretary, eleven Reel Fellows gathered at the Union Restaurant for the purpose of building a club in Chicago such as now exists in New York and Los Angeles. At that time it was not expected that organization work would go as rapidly as it has. At the second meeting the number was practically doubled and everyone was eager to complete the organization.

The news of this social body has spread rapidly in the film circles of the Windy City and a steady stream of applications are pouring into the secretary's office.

The charter was closed at the meeting held March 18 and was completed with the members present. George Kleine, W. N. Selig, George K. Spoor, and S. S. Hutchinson were also elected to charter membership. This gives the new organization twenty-two charter members.

While all the members have constituted themselves a committee on membership, their work is being made easy because of the eagerness of the would-be members to motion pictures in Chicago to join this club. Its need has been felt for a long time, and its possibility has been discussed when any number of film people gathered at one place.

The attempt which produced the present results seemed to have been the proper method. The original idea was to hold a dinner once a month, which it was thought might grow into a club. Things proceeded more rapidly than was anticipated, and Chicago now has its social organization the same as other film centers.

WHILE the organization will continue for the time being as a dining club, it is expected that the time is not far distant when club rooms will be secured and the Reel Fellows' Club, of Chicago, will be launched on a large scale. In fact plans are now under way that will make this possible.

By-laws were drawn up by the committee appointed for that purpose, consisting of Warren Patrick, Charles Nixon, and L. A. Boenig. These by-laws were read, discussed, amended and adopted.

They provide that every application must be signed by three members, and that these applications must be sent to the secretary, whose offices will be the headquarters of the club until such time as the club maintains its own quarters. The secretary's office is at 604 Schiller Building.

The initiation fee was fixed at ten dollars and the yearly dues at two dollars and a half. This is to take care of the expenses that will come up in conducting affairs. The monthly dinners will continue to be an individual expense. It was decided that the next dinner be held on April 15 at a place to be decided on by the executive committee.

This meeting was a splendid success from the point of enthusiasm and good fellowship. A great interest was evinced by all present and predictions were for a big and healthy success.

THE officers elected were R. R. Nehls, president; Oscar Eagle, vice-president; C. J. VerHalen, secretary, and L. A. Boenig, treasurer. The board of governors consists of Warren A. Patrick, chairman; Charles Nixon, W. R. Rothacker, D. A. Meaney, and Omer F. Doud. All officers and governors were unanimously elected.

Among those present, including the charter members, were: Charles Nixon, Oscar Eagle, and Harold Vosburgh, of the Selig Polyscope Company; O. F. Sparr, Enterprise Optical Company; L. A. Boening, American Cinematograph Company; Tom Quill, Coes Lithographing Company; Walter Early, "Morning Telegraph"; Don Meaney, Essanay Film Manufacturing Company; Frank Hough, Kleine Optical Company; Omer F. Doud, George Kleine Attractions; R. R. Nehls, American Film Manufacturing Company; W. R. Rothacker and N. Sawyer, Industrial Moving Picture Company; John Rock, Vitagraph Company; I. Eissner, Mutual Film Corporation; Charles Andress, Billboard; Warren A. Patrick, "Clipper," and C. J. VerHalen, Motion Picture News.

LUBIN'S LATEST RECRUIT A VETERAN

As "David Harum" and in a score of other roles he is known far and wide.

The union between the dramatic stage and the cinematograph studio is becoming closer every day. The ablest stage players are finding wider scope on the screen for their talents than they have behind the footlights. An instance of this condition is found in William H. Turner, who is the latest addition to the powerful Lubin organization. For sixteen years Mr. Turner played under the Frohman management, scoring in the Frohman successes, "Held by the Enemy," "The Fatal Card," "The Prisoner of Zenda," "Sowing the Wind," "Because She Loved Him So," "The Girl from Maxim's," etc.

In addition to his wide experience as a leading character actor, Mr. Turner is one of the few picture players who have starred in the spoken drama. Mr. Turner headed his own company in "David Harum," "Father and the Boys," and "The Governor and the Boss." He brings to the screen all the artistry of a man who has proven himself in hundreds of roles a master of character portrayal. Mr. Turner, while one of the latest recruits to the silent drama, was also one of the first. Seven years ago when there were fewer actors on the screen he accepted a short summer engagement. Consequently when Mr. Lubin assigned him a few months ago to the direction of Joseph Sweeney he had not the usual difficulty of adapting his technique to the demands of the camera. Mr. Turner's vigorous, finished acting will shortly be seen in coming Lubin releases, "The Root of All Evil," "The House of Darkness," "The Better Man," "The Trunk Mystery," etc.
Ask Congress for Censor Board

Clergymen and Civic Bodies Urge Federal Film Commission — Bills Provide for $3 Fee per 1,000 Feet and Barring of Uncensored Films from Inter-State Commerce—Fines and Penalties

TWO Federal Motion Picture Censorship bills, creating a commission with national-wide jurisdiction, exacting a censorship fee for every reel, prohibiting uncensored reels from shipment in interstate commerce, and fixing fines and prison penalties for violation of its provisions, are now before Congress.

Various clergymen and many civic bodies are urging their passage upon the Senate and House Committees which have the bills before their respective bodies under consideration. Congressman Hughes introduced the House bill. Senator Hoke Smith of Georgia, is the author of the Senate measure. They are substantially the same.

The film manufacturers are generally non-committal in their attitude toward the new bill. Superintendent Marvin, of the Motion Picture Patents Company, and Assistant Manager Rogers, of the Mutual Film Corporation, will say nothing for or against the measure at present.

Those who have commented upon the establishment of a federally controlled censorship board, however, declare they would welcome such a commission if it would do away with the thousand and one petty censorship boards that exist in every state, city and town of the Union.

But there is no hope held out in this bill, they say, that a Federal board will automatically put a stop to the indiscriminate war on films carried on all over the country. To their way of thinking it will mean but one more set of censors let loose upon the manufacturers’ productions.

THE Senate bill is the first comprehensive attempt on the part of the Federal Government to take cognizance of the motion picture from the censorship standpoint and as an article of interstate commerce, in new legislation.

Its provisions are:

A commission of five members, each holding office for a term of six years, and appointed by the President. Not more than three are to be of the same political party. The arrangement will be such that the terms of two members will expire every two years.

The salary of the chairman will be $3,500 a year, and that of each commissioner, $3,000. The commission will be controlled by the Commissioner of Education.

Each motion picture film, before being exhibited publicly, must be submitted to the committee for approval and receive a certificate describing its character, number of linear feet, and date of approval.

A fee of $3 for each one thousand feet of film will be charged. The commission is empowered to exclude from interstate commerce any films that are not censored and approved by its members.

Any alteration in the film after approval will result in the forfeiture of the license, and violations are punishable by a fine not exceeding $500, or a year’s imprisonment, or both.

Pictures that depict prize-fights or bull-fights, or any other matter tending to incite youth of adults to crime or to corrupt public morals are prohibited.

THE Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, head of what is known as the “Christian lobby,” appeared to urge favorable action on the Hughes bill providing for the creation of a Federal motion picture commission which is charged with the duty of passing on all films exhibited in public.

Mr. Crafts was accompanied before the House committee by the Rev. Henry H. Pringle, assistant superintendent of the Reform Bureau, and the Rev. William Chase, president of the New York State Civic League. A letter written by Samuel Trigger, of the New York Association of Moving Picture Exhibitors, endorsing Federal censorship as proposed, was read to the committee.

Mr. Crafts pointed out that Congress had imposed a censorship on motion pictures when it passed a law some time after the Jeffries-Johnson fight at Reno, prohibiting the transportation of prize films in interstate commerce. He also recalled that in the new tariff law the Secretary of the Treasury is empowered to prohibit the importation of objectionable motion pictures.

“A nationwide demand for more censorship,” said Mr. Crafts, “is seen in the fact that Ohio, Pennsylvania, Kansas and California have official State censor boards for motion pictures, and San Francisco and some other cities have official local censors. Manifestly it is fairer to motion picture makers and exhibitors, whose films cover all the country, to have one adequate censorship.

“It is also more satisfactory to those seeking to guard moral interests. Motion picture promoters and advocates of censorship laws both approve the establishment of an official national board.

“The unofficial national board of censorship of motion pictures in New York City has no power to compel submission of films for censorship, and therefore does not have opportunity to censor all films.

“This censorship board is to add nothing to the burden of government. The motion picture men, so far as we have consulted them, are entirely willing to pay a tax for the examination and certification of their films that will cover all reasonable expenses of the commission.”

JOHN COLLIER, general secretary of the National Board of Censorship, said he could not speak for that organization, but personally he doubted whether the proposed Federal commission would improve the situation. He said the big producers now accept the censorship of the National Board because they find it to their financial advantage to do so.

The National Board of Censorship is a purely voluntary organization, but its approval of a picture is an asset in the business and managers are quick to use it where they come into competition. Audiences have become so familiar with the O. K. of the National Board that managers believe it is taken as a matter of course that all pictures shown have been approved. This is the fact in all the regular houses.

If the approval sign is thrown on the canvas once during a performance, the audience may be assured that every picture has been approved, because it is a condition of censorship that all or none must be approved, and the manufacturers who ask for the censorship agree to destroy films not approved.

The official stamp of approval is not the O. K. sign thrown on the screen. It is the weekly bulletin which is sent out to 300 cities and in which are named all the approved films. The police get this bulletin and as long as managers produce only the films named there they are not concerned about letting their audiences know after every picture that it has been approved.

Mr. Collier said he couldn’t see how a commission of five would be able to censor all the films that are sent across state lines. Forty or fifty members of the National Board of Censorship, and while they serve without pay each member gives at least a day a week to censoring.
THANHOUSER SECRET IS OUT

The secret is out! Thanhouser is to produce a genuine thriller, which will have weekly releases in two reels, beginning June 21.

Harold MacGrath and Lloyd Lomergan are about to join efforts to make "The Million Dollar Mystery" to this end.

This story will follow "The Adventures of Kathlyn," in the Chicago "Tribune," and about 200 other daily newspapers throughout the country. "Florence Gray," whose mysterious disappearance was reported recently in the New York and Chicago papers, will be played by Flo La Badie. Marguerite Snow, veteran of the Thanhouser leading women, will play the "heavy" lead, that of a titled adventuress. James Cruze will portray a newspaper reporter. Sidney Bracy will play the part of an old faithful family servant, and other roles will be taken by Thanhouser veterans.

FIRST STERLING COMEDY

The first Ford Sterling comedy, built around the Vanderbilt and Grand Prix automobile races, is now in course of production at the Universal Hollywood studios. This company claims it will be one of the funniest auto comedies ever put out.

Mr. Sterling's camera man was fortunate enough to get the details of the accident that befell Marquis, when driving his "Sunbeam" car. The accident, a sensational one, will be used in conjunction with the story.

THAT CONSOLIDATED HOUSE WARMING

Managers, Exchange Men and Exhibitors Came Out in Force to Enjoy the Oldknow-Depinet Hospitality, and All Voted It Was a Real Eye-opener

WITH a reception and a dance, the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, of Dallas, Texas, gave a house-warming to their friends and competitors alike that was an eye-opener to the Southwest, and food for thought for exchange men all over the country. This was on Saturday, March 7, but Dallas isn't through talking about the affair yet, nor are any of those who were present to share Ned Depinet's hospitality.

In the suite on the second floor of 1900 Commerce street, opposite the Majestic Theatre, William Oldknow, the general manager of the company; J. B. Kelly, its general representative, and Ned Depinet received the guests Cut flowers and palms set off the solid mahogany furnishings of the offices in an attractive manner.

A five-piece orchestra dispensed music while the delighted visitors strolled through the rooms and partook of the refreshments generously provided by their hosts. Practically every exhibitor in the city accepted the Consolidated's invitation, and a great many from the surrounding towns came in.

Just to mention a few of those who were present: C. E. Ezell, manager of the General Film company; C. T. Touchon, manager of the Mutual Film Corporation; H. T. Peebles, manager of Warner's Features; Albert Russell, manager of the Southern Feature Film Program Association; J. F. Whyte, of the Dallas Seating Company; H. W. Leuthstrom, of the Texas Seating Company; O. F. Wittle and D. L. Wittle, of the Western Automatic Music Company; J. Phillips, of the Eclectic Film Company; F. M. Sanford, of the World's Special Film Company; E. T. Peter, of the Texas Feature Film Company; R. D. Thrash, of the R. D. Thrash Film Company.

Such prominent exhibitors as E. H. Hulsey, of the Queen Theatre Circuit; G. K. Jorgensen, of the Texas Crystal Theatre Circuit, and Roy F. Dalton, of the Dalton Circuit, were guests.

Is the "Nickel Show" Passing?

This and Other Burning Questions in the Motion Picture Field, Are Answered by George W. Wiley, National Secretary of the Exhibitors' League

EXHIBITORS! Here are some real words of wisdom from one of your own people. Though addressed to the ambitious who are on the point of entering the exhibiting field, they come home with equal force to the man already in it.

Not for many moons has such pertinent advice, such a far-reaching analysis of the exhibitor's problems and prospects, been given as George W. Wiley, national secretary of the Exhibitors' League, here puts into unmistakable language.

More significant than anything, perhaps, is his prediction that the "nickel show" is soon to disappear.

"In the near future," says Mr. Wiley, "I predict that the big houses showing pictures will play to a scale of 10 and 20 cents."

That may be remembered as an example of Mr. Wiley's sound optimism, if the fortune-seekers are discouraged because he does not consider every theatre a gold-mine and the exhibitor's field a "Valley of Diamonds."

"My advice," so Mr. Wiley begins, "to a prospective owner at this time is: Do not spend your money until you are fully informed about the business and have had actual figures placed before you."

"It is a cold business proposition now, and nobody is snatching a fortune out of the air. The money must be made legitimately and a proportionate outlay must be made before returns can be expected."

"The day is passing in the large cities when a crude theatre opened in an ordinary store-room, will prove a money-maker. The neighborhood theatres now vie in size and accommodations with the houses playing 82 attractions and the patrons are given so much for their money that the man who owns a show in a small room, can not compete."

"While I say that the business is still in its infancy, I must admit that great and wonderful progress has been made in the last twelve months. Improvements in photography have been marked and scientific methods have been applied in the showing of the pictures on the screens."

"Most of us can remember when it was worth half an hour's eyesight to sit through a reel of film. These defects have all been remedied and there is as much art in the motion picture studio to-day as in the artist's or the sculptor's workshop."

"The improvement in the subjects of the films in the last year also has been marked. Classic drama and the stories told in the standard books of the entire world have been turned into film subjects. The best actors, both abroad and in America, have appeared in these dramas and as we all know, the current successes in New York are now being put on the screens with the regular cast and in a manner which should appeal to any man or woman."

"In my opinion, the 'nickel show' is soon to disappear. The man who spends a quarter of a million dollars to build a theatre and pays to have the big feature films shown in his house, can not afford to charge his patrons only five cents."

"In the next few years, I predict that the big houses showing pictures will play to a scale of 10 and 20 cents and the patrons of the 'movies' will gladly pay these amounts to enjoy the luxuries of the fine theatres and see the excellent pictures. In St. Louis a new theatre has just been completed at a cost of $250,000 and the management is charging 10 and 20 cents. The business is phenomenal."

"The owner of the motion picture house knows that the public demands a great deal more these days than it did a few years ago."

"He can not give his patrons poor pictures and expect to have them return the next night. So this is another factor that must be considered and considered deeply."

According to Mr. Wiley, there are approximately 16,000 motion picture theatres in this country. The membership lists of the Exhibitors' League carries about 3,000 names. Mr. Wiley owns a string of successful houses in Kansas City, Mo.

In ran into Smith one day after his new 'find' had been with him for two or three months.

"How is your musical scheme getting along?" I asked him.

"'Immensely' was his reply. 'Some of my patrons were surprised at first at the amount of music I gave them, but they very soon came to understand it, and then to look for it."

"And say! I've got a gem in that kid organist. I dug up between him and the pictures, we have very few dry houses when there's a pathetic piece on the screen. I've gotten so now that I go into the back of the house during a sad scene and count the sobs I can hear with as much pleasure as I count the coins in the box-office. And, to tell the truth, I get things in my throat and eyes every little while, listening to that fellow. He certainly can play the heart out of your breast."

"I don't worry any more about the music. It's up to him entirely. He can put things across I never thought you could get a music picture audience to listen to, yes, and get a hand on them, too. You can't imagine what a difference it makes in the pictures. Why, films I'd had the operator run off for me, just to get the drift of them, I scarcely recognized when I watched them to the tune of his music."

"I'm for that sort of thing strong, and so are my people. I wonder why more fellows in the business don't try it."

"And so do I."

FILMS TO BOOM ST. LOUIS

St. Louis is the latest city in the United States to adopt motion pictures as a means of awakening civic pride and advertising the advantages of the city far and wide.

With this end in view, a series of films showing the principal streets, business centers and industries of St. Louis, the site of the pageant, historic buildings and spots will be shown at the Coliseum, St. Louis, during what is to be known as "Know St. Louis Week," early in April.

Frank R. Robinson, manager of the Coliseum, is the prime mover in the affair. After the Coliseum exhibition, he will send the pictures to the principal cities of the country on a "boosting St. Louis" campaign.
Making a "Dead One" Pay

How Many Lives Has a Theatre?—Here's One That "Died" Five Times, but the Right Man Performed the Commercial Miracle of Restoring It to Life for Good—This Is How He Did It

FIVE unsuccessful attempts had been made to make a paying proposition out of the Star Theatre, a motion picture house in a thriving Michigan city of twenty thousand inhabitants. Each succeeding failure had been more disastrous than the previous one and the owner, after it had been closed the fifth time, gave up all hope of ever renting it again for theatrical purposes.

The cause of the theatre's repeated failures was conceded to be its bad location. It was four blocks from the business center of the city, where the other theatres were. And, as in all cities of its size, the night crowds never strayed far from the beaten paths of the business district.

Charles Smith, assistant manager and ticket taker at one of the centrally located theatres, had for some time cherished a desire to become manager of the Star, but his limited capital had always proved an obstacle. Finally, after the house had been closed down for several months, he determined to become its manager.

Within an hour after he had reached his determination, he was at the office of J. H. Jones, owner of the building.

"Your theatre building is vacant and is liable to be for some time," argued Mr. Smith. "Now, if you will give me two months' free rent I am confident I can make the Star a paying proposition. It will take two months to try my experiment, and all the cash I can raise, but I am willing to take the chance.

Before Mr. Jones' office a two months' free rent contract for the Star Theatre had been executed. Then he started out to make good.

His first move was to have the building renovated and redecorated and a new front put in. Two flaming arcs were installed over the entrance and a large electric light sign, the shape of a star, was suspended over the sidewalk.

The theatre's location had one distinct advantage. It was on the main street between the business district and the city's largest manufacturing industry, where more than three thousand persons were employed. More than half of them passed the Star four times daily.

After his grand opening, which he advertised extensively in the newspapers and by handbills, he began experimenting with some novel advertising stunts. Through it all he kept hammering away on one thing, the high-class picture he was running.

At noon, when the factory operatives were leisurely returning to their work, he had his ushers distribute attractive programs, on the bottom of which was printed: "When they are at the Star they are high class."

Attractive posters were used in the lobby and in the evening, when the operatives were passing the theatre on their way home, the flaming arcs were always lit so as to attract attention to his lobby display.

To draw patronage from other sources than the factory, he secured several post-stands in the business district—two in front of real estate offices and two in front of restaurants. For this privilege he gave the four places free slide service. On the poster frames was painted: "When they are at the Star, they are high class."

Before six weeks had elapsed, Mr. Smith had built up a good regular patronage, which was constantly increasing. When his two months' contract expired he signed a new one which was for three years and called for a yearly rental of $900.

"How did you make it pay?" asked Mr. Jones of his tenant when the three-year lease was signed.

"I worked those flaming red arcs overtime; took advantage of the factory crowds which passed the theatre, and used four good post-stands," was the reply. "Of course I made good my slogan: 'When they are at the Star, they are high class.'"

News and Notes from Washington

The very newest theatre here is known as the Crandall, erected by the Crandall Amusement Company. It is located in the heart of the downtown district, attractive in exterior decorations and brilliant with lights. It has a seating capacity of 300, is excellently ventilated, and spacious and commodious for patrons. This is under the management of M. E. Crandall, who with his ushers, has added to the dignity of the house by wearing tuxedo suits. Features form the main part of the daily program with an admission of ten cents. The interior decorations are tasty, and the theatre has the distinction of having a gold screen which makes the pictures exceptionally clear.

The Maryland has made some improvements in the form of a closed-in lobby, which adds considerably to the attractiveness of the theatre as well as the comfort of the patrons. Manager Johnson is among the progressives, who is ever ready to do something to single out his house among its neighbors.

"The Adventures of Kathryn," which is being filmed by the Selig Company and is running serially in one of the local papers, is making quite a hit in the picture houses. With the story in the Evening Star, the screen pictures and the bold heralds, everyone in Washington is aware that Kathryn is having adventures.

The Casino has re-opened its doors under the management of Harry Gladman. This attractive theatre is in the residential section and is offering an excellent program of Universal films.

The chain of Brylawski houses are ever keeping pace with the times by offering the pick from the General Film Company's program when the releases arrive here. The picture news service forms an attractive lobby display in the downtown theatres.

PICTURES IN JAPAN

Motion pictures are being used as a means of education in Japan, especially in the lower grades. Powers Cameragraph No. 6A projection machine is being used extensively throughout that country. A recent shipment was to the Y. M. C. A at Nagasaki. Shipments of this same type of machine to Hong Kong, China and to Honolulu, Hawaii, are also reported by the Nicholas Power Company.

ACTRESS FORMER PUPIL

In Vivian Rich, of the American Film Manufacturing Company, Winifred Beckingsale, instructor in a Canadian high school, has found a former pupil. Recently Miss Beckingsale visited Santa Barbara and met Miss Rich in the studios of the company by whom she is employed. As a pupil Miss Rich had made an indelible impression upon her former instructor because of her record as having always been at the head of the class.

Austrian Patents
The Austrian patent, No. 46,346 for films by Dr. E. Brandenberger, is now public property, the last annuity due in Austria remaining unpaid. The Societe Francaise des Films and Cinematographes “Eclair” in Paris has just obtained the Austrian patent for a stencil-cutting machine intended for film coloring.

The Heubner-Bleistein Patents Company, of Buffalo, has recently obtained a patent in Austria for a camera for color photography. The patent in question bears the number, 64,091.

Editor’s Chat
Have you ever thought of the utility of a page devoted to patents in a professional paper? Perhaps only when you looked desperately for something which you could not find, and probably you will think of it again only when something arouses your interest.

Why be ignorant of what is being done in the trade and have to take action against infringers or be sued for infringement? Why use a machine without knowing the reason which causes you to prefer it to another? Why say, I wish it was made, when it already exists, or why not make it or have it made if you can be sure that it has not been made?

We receive letters every day asking if we know:
Who makes ——?
Is there a patent for the idea of ——?
Does the —— factory also make ——, etc., etc.?

Why should you not watch the “Inventions” page every week and thus be fully informed about the latest events in the patent and trade-mark world, instead of running after this information when it is too late or too expensive to get it?

In order to demonstrate that something may be overlooked by not reading closely all that appears on this page, several of the patents mentioned in last week’s issue are repeated here with explanatory notes as illustrations.

1,089,294 covers the “Utoicolor” process for rapid photographic color paper.
1,089,646, a very interesting camera, which has been patented by C. F. Jenkins, the inventor of the Phantoscope and other machines.
1,089,762 is one of a series of patents which cover a new machine having, to a certain extent, common points with several machines of other known makes and also various other features of great interest. The invention is not only on paper, but in machines which are sold in all European countries.
1,089,910 covers a plastic material. The average person has little interest in most plastic materials. He is apt to pass them over without waste of time. But in this particular case nearly everyone in the film industry is interested for this "plastic material" is nothing else than the material known as Pathé's non-inflammable film.

1,089,917 covers an apparatus for reading reversed images and belongs to the Eastman Kodak Company. Do you think that the Eastman Company have nothing else to do than to reverse images for the simple pleasure of building machines enabling them to read such reversed images? Read the patent and you will be convinced that something more useful can be done with the new idea.

Trade Notes

[As a result of a description of a new home projection machine, published in The Motion Picture News of March 21, which Mr. Schoenbaum had been invited by the manufacturers to inspect, the following letter was received from the Phantoscope Manufacturing Company, of Washington, D. C. Mr. Schoenbaum's reply is also given below.—Editor.]

March 16, 1914.
Mr. H. M. Schoenbaum,
220 West Forty-second Street,
New York City.

Dear Mr. Schoenbaum:
My attention has been called to your description of the Cosmograph which appeared in the last issue of The Motion Picture News, and I suppose I should be highly pleased, because imitation is said to be the highest form of compliment. I refer particularly to that part of your description which explains that the rheostat is inclosed in the lamp house, which feature the Patent Office has decided is original with me, as you will see by the copy of the patent which I am mailing you.
I trust that you will give this notice of infringement as prominent publicity as you have given the description of this infringing device, and beg to thank you for such courtesy.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) C. FRANCIS JENKINS,
For the Phantoscope Mfg. Co.

[Enclosure]
Claim 1. In apparatus of the class described, the combination with an electric light, a projecting lens, a rheostat in series with the light, and a casing inclosing the light, lens and rheostat, the parts being arranged to permit cooling air to pass freely through the casing upward through the interior chamber and out of the casing.

Claim 2. In apparatus of the class described, the combination with the casing or box, or a rear electric light, a front projecting lens, and an intermediate rheostat in series with the light, all inclosed by the casing, said casing having apertures to permit cooling air to pass freely through the rear end of the box and to allow the escape of cooling air entering around the lens.

Mr. Schoenbaum's reply was as follows.

Mr. C. Francis Jenkins,
Phantoscope Manufacturing Co.,
Washington Loan and Trust Bldg.,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Jenkins:
I duly received your letter of the 16th instant regarding the "Cosmograph," and beg to reply that our description of the machine in question was not in reference to a patent of any kind, while I am aware that the manufacturers are applying for patents here and in Canada.

The machine we saw and described could not at that time be considered as infringing your patent because same was unknown to the public until Tuesday last, when it appeared in the Official Gazette. We shall, nevertheless, publish your letter and the present reply in our next issue.

I should add that it was our intention to cite your first claim even before we heard from you on the subject.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) M. H. SCHONBAUM.

Five Pictures in One

The recent German patent No. 269,869 and the photographs seen lately in several places in New York City and elsewhere render the question of multiple photography interesting to all, so below is given an extract which proves that what is new in 1914 was known already 250 years ago.

The following is a translation of Baptista Porta's description of a device by which the result is attained: "A speculum is constructed, called polyphon, i.e., which shows many objects, for by opening and shutting it, it exhibits twenty and more images of the finger alone.

"You will prepare it in the following manner: Let two rectangular specula of brass or crystal be erected upon the same base, and let their length be one and a half times their width, or in any other proportion; and let two of their sides be placed together, so that they may be opened and shut like a book, and the angles varied. By presenting your face, you will see in both specula more faces the more they are shut, and the less that the angle is; but they will be diminished by opening it, and you will see fewer as you observe with a more obtuse angle. If you exhibit your finger, you will see only fingers, the right fingers being seen on the right side, and the left on the left side, which is contrary to what happens in looking-glasses, and this arises from the mutual reflection and repulsion which produce a change of the images."

Censorship in Austria

In Austria, as in Germany, there is a censorship board in each state of the Empire—at Vienna for lower Austria, at Prague for Bohemia, at Lemberg for Galicia, Budapest for Hungary, and so on. Censorship fees, as in Germany, are exacted for the licensing of a picture by the censors.

The Austrian exhibitors are extremely desirous of having one board of censors for the entire Empire, but the time is far distant when it may be looked for.

LASKY GETS EDESON

Robert Edeson, until recently a member of the all-star cast playing in "Fine Feathers," has been secured by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company for appearance in several motion picture productions of Mr. Edeson's recent successes.

Mr. Edeson is now at his country home, "Strongheart House," Sag Harbor, resting until May. At that time he will leave for Los Angeles, where the Lasky film productions are all staged.

A cast is being engaged by the Lasky Company to support Mr. Edeson, and the Eastern scenes of the production will be taken between now and May 1, the Lasky people keeping a camera man in New York for that purpose. Mr. Edeson will join Lasky's all-star company at Hollywood, which now contains Dustin Farnum, Edward Abeles, Edmund Breese, Henry B. Warner, Cecil B. DeMille, Oscar Apfel and Winifred Kingston.

Films Displace Vaudeville

With the installation of a new $30,000 Wurlitzer organ, entire re-decorations inside and out, new lighting devices, and scenery and stage settings, Proctor's Fifth Avenue Theatre opened last Monday to a good house. Vaudeville will not be used, expect on Sunday, through the spring and summer, giving way to feature pictures of five and six reels in length.
EDITOR'S NOTE.—It is the desire of "The Motion Picture News" to include under this heading novel advertising ideas, successful schemes in the management, decoration and equipment of the theatre—everything, in fact, done by the exhibitor to stimulate his trade. We invite every exhibitor to write us about any new enterprise he has; also to come to us for advice or information along any line. Address: Editor, "The Motion Picture News," 220 West Forty-second Street, New York City.

ADVERTISING WITH LIONS

TAKING a lesson from the circuses in the advertising of a multiple picture may seem somewhat startling to the average exhibitor at first blush. But the manager of the Jefferson Theatre, St. Augustine, Fla., resorted to it last month, with substantial results in the way of increased patronage.

The occasion was the appearance of "Quo Vadis?" the Kleine feature. A circus happened to be stranded in St. Augustine at the time, and very likely the noise the two lions belonging to the troupe made gave the manager his inspiration.

Be that as it may, on the morning and afternoon of the first day the picture was to be shown, the good people of the Florida city were edified by the appearance of a wagon, gaily decorated, and bearing the two "kings of the jungle" as passengers, safely behind the bars of their cage.

Along the sides of the wagon was the announcement that "Quo Vadis?" was to be seen at the Jefferson during the next two days. Streamers bore the same legend.

The motion picture fans of the city took the broad hint thus offered them, and it may be surmised that many a lukewarm patron of the pictures came and saw and was conquered during the stay of the feature in St. Augustine.

HERMAN FICHTEMBERG'S "SPOTLIGHT"

THE Fichtenberg "Spotlight," published every week in New Orleans as the official organ of the Fichtenberg enterprises in the Crescent City, is an example of what an exhibitor who controls a chain of theatres can do in the way of original and profitable advertising.

Herman Fichtenberg operates the Alamo, Dreamworld, Picto and Plaza, four of New Orleans' live motion picture theatres. Once every seven days a bulletin of events pertaining to the programs at the four houses, the actors and actresses in the pictures and like news items appears under the name of "The Spotlight."

The fifty-second number has just made its appearance, which means that "The Spotlight" has had one year of good fortune, and the manner in which it is conducted indicates that there is more success in store for it.

The whole magazine takes up but sixteen pages. It is of interest to the public who are constantly patronizing the picture houses, because the weekly program of each of the four houses is published every week. Cuts of notable players enliven its pages. Synopses of the week's features add to "The Spotlight's" attractions.

Doubtless Mr. Fichtenberg is not the only exhibitor who has sought out his public in this manner. The News will be glad to hear from other exhibitors who issue regular house organs, and publish the story of their success in this department.

$100,000 FILM HOUSE IN JACKSONVILLE

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., will be the proud possessor of a $100,000 theatre devoted to motion pictures and vaudeville in the near future.

G. N. Montgomery, otherwise "Montgomery, the motion picture man," is an active spirit in the new enterprise and the house, when completed, will be under his personal management.

The theatre will be erected by the Republic Theatre Company, composed of a group of the city's prominent professional and business men. The construction work will commence in June.

Charles A. Clark is president of the company. The board of directors is composed of G. N. Montgomery, Porcher L'Engle, Francis P. L'Engle, W. D. Barnett and Charles A. Clark.

HARD WORK COUNTS

GENERALLY speaking there are two versions of success. It is either the result of persistent endeavor or it is just a matter of pure luck.

T. W. Logan, manager of the Majestic Theatre in London, Ontario, Canada, is an example of the former class. He rose through the various stages from program boy to manager by dint of hard work and close application.

Pittsburgh Exhibitors Will Fight

High Taxes Cause Film Men to Form Organization—Make Test Case by Refusing to Pay License

Pittsburgh, Pa., March 26.

THE Moving Picture Protective Association, composed of exhibitors and film men of Pittsburgh, has formed a permanent organization for the protection of its members against legislation unjust to the interests of the industry and the exhibitor.

At the meeting held in the Columbia Theatre, when the permanent organization was made, the complaint of J. A. Wright, of Irwin, regarding the high taxes levied on movies by the council, was taken up and Attorney Joseph Thompson instructed to proceed in defense of any exhibitor in Irwin who refuses to pay the borough license. Mr. Wright said that aside from a State and borough tax the council required him to pay a license of $3 a day for every extra attraction. It was decided to make a test case by refusing to pay it.

Members of the association contend that the law permitting boroughs to tax shows was enacted before the day of the movie, and applied to the circus, which could not be taxed otherwise than by demanding the purchase of a license. Exhibitors claim they already pay property and mercantile tax and that the license should be eliminated.

H. B. Miller reported that the matter as to the amount of aisle space cannot be settled until plans for the building code have been completed. Mr. Miller resigned from the committee of six to consider legislative acts relative to the movies and W. C. Beatty was appointed.

The officers elected are: President, Lawrence W. Rittenhouse; vice-president, W. E. White; secretary, A. J. Hanna; treasurer, M. A. Ratt. The secretary is to mail a copy of the minutes to each member.

The defeated candidates were chosen to draw up a constitution for the organization. They are W. C. Beatty, H. C. Kleihm, James Delves, and Dr. Torrence.

A second meeting was held March 29 in the Columbia Theatre.

Universal Claims Priority

First to Publish Motion Picture Stories in Daily Newspapers—"Lucille Love" to Be Featured in Four Dailies

THERE question, "Who originated the idea of publishing motion picture stories in the daily newspapers?" is being as warmly debated as the question, "Who wrote Shakespeare's plays?"

The correct answer of the former puzzle appears to be the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. According to the evidence they have adduced, Joe Brandt, the advertising and publicity manager of the company, conceived the scheme and put it into effect in the columns of the Chicago "Record-Herald" on February 5. The plan was to run the story of a feature film in a daily newspaper on the day when the film was to be shown at various theatres.

Once announced, the effectiveness of the idea was so apparent that two other papers in the "Windy City" hastened to take it up. At the same time, the daily story plan was put into practice in the Detroit "Free Press," the Buffalo "Times," the Denver "News," New York "Globe," Washington "Herald," St. Louis "Post," Hartford "Post," Omaha "News," Cleveland "Leader," Indianapolis "Star," Toledo "News-Bee," Des Moines "Capital," and Cincinnati "Commercial-Tribune."

The publication of these stories in connection with the exhibition of pictures has been enthusiastically received by the exhibitors in all of these cities and the adjacent territory covered by these papers.

As a sequel to such a good beginning, the Universal has arranged to publish in forty dailies throughout the United States the story, "Lucille Love, the Girl of Mystery," which they are issuing as a film serial. The first two reels of this twentieth century romance have already been produced, and for fifteen weeks there will be a two-reel part released each week.

The spectacular is paramount in this serial. Aeroplanes will play a prominent part in the story. Battles with wild beasts will be shown. A steamer on fire at sea is one of the gripping scenes of the thirty-part picture-play. A special company has been organized for the production of "Lucille Love" and the Universal wild animal zoo has been enlarged for the purpose.

One of the well-known fiction writers of the day is the author of the story, but it is part of the Universal's plan hold back his name until the last installment is in sight.

President Carl Laemmle has just returned from the Hollywood studios, highly gratified with the first two reels of the production. The contract with the newspapers for the serialization of the picture was made through the A. P. Robyn Syndicate, of Chicago.
Realism in Sound Effects

The present time, for the use of inferior sound effects in connection with a photoplay. Too many devices are now on the market, representing the most up-to-date accomplishments in the production of sound effects, to leave the exhibitor any ground for complaining that he is compelled to use a mediocre instrument. If he does so it is because he chooses to do so.

Yet, many exhibitors are content to rely upon the drummer, with his more or less old-fashioned traps, which are generally inadequate to the task of "playing a picture" with the degree of realism that present-day audiences are sternly demanding.

What usually happens is that, where a complex series of sounds must be reproduced, the drummer's traps are equal to only a small part of them, or production of one or two of them preoccupies his hands and feet and he has to let the rest go.

Suppose, for example, that a fire scene is on the screen. The cletter of the horses' hoofs, the pealing of the engine-horn, the confused uproar attending the passage of an engine through the crowded streets of a city, the rumble of the engine over the pavement—all these must be deftly intermingled if the picture is to be accompanied at all.

No less than four devices must be worked at once, and this is out of the question with the drummer's outfit. The clatter of hoofs, requiring the use of both hands, he could express. The rest would be impossible, unless, perchance, he had some means of working the bell with his feet.

Instruments equipped with not five, or ten or twenty, but fifty or more distinct and different sound effects are to be had. Each one of the effects on these machines is more life-like than any a drummer could produce, and the operator of such a machine can work five times as many effects with ease as the drummer.

When the pictures themselves are such faithful reproductions of life, it is a matter of the highest importance that every sound effect should be equally true to life. The audience will insist upon it, or desert to some theatre where attention is paid to such details.

Among sound-effect devices that have come to the attention of this department, the "Dramagraph" and the "Excelsior Sound-Effect Cabinet" deserve the exhibitor's scrutiny. Samuel Lapin, of 1740 Gratz street, Philadelphia, is the inventor of both instruments. They are only two of the large number available to interested exhibitors.

Every musical instrument manufacturer who attempts to cater to the amusement trade—and most of them do—has something in this line to offer the motion picture house manager, from massive orchestrions to the smallest and most moderate-priced devices.

If exhibitors would spend a few of the dollars on these matters that some of them waste in profusion on superfluous details, they would find themselves well repaid in a constantly increasing and better satisfied retinue of patrons—Samuel Lapin.
Linn Goes Abroad for Eclectic

Since the Eclectic Film Company has entered the rental field on a large and comprehensive scale through branch offices of its own throughout the country, the need has become apparent to secure the widest possible variety of carefully selected films from the best offer- ings the European market affords. This will make it necessary to have someone on the ground thoroughly competent to judge a film through American eyes, as it were.

The important task has been entrusted to K. W. Linn, who will shortly sail for Europe, where he will make his headquarters in London, England. Mr. Linn opened the offices of the Eclectic Film Company in the fall of 1912, and has been manager of the concern up to the present.

His expert knowledge of the requirements of the American film market, and his long and varied experience in the business, are qualifications that will fit him pre-eminent mently for his new and responsible duties. Having lived the greater part of his life in Europe, and speaking several languages, Mr. Linn will undoubtedly quickly adjust himself to his new surroundings and contribute his share to make the Eclectic program what its name implies—one of careful selection from the best of films obtainable in the market.

Mr. Linn leaves a host of friends behind in this country, whose good wishes will speed him on to new successes in the Old World. It is understood that Mr. Linn will visit this country once or twice a year and thus keep thoroughly in touch with the business on this side of the water.

C. M. Seay Now a Writer

Charles M. Seay, one of Edison’s best known directors, and a man who has been identified with the business for a considerable length of time, has branched out as a writer. “Some Interesting Facts About the Motion Picture” is the title of a lengthy article appearing in a recent issue of “The American Boy” by Mr. Seay, in which he gives a diagnosis of what motion pictures really are.

The story is most instructive and shows a keen knowledge of how to write for the younger generation. The explanations are made in short words and sentences which no child with an ordinary education would have any trouble in transcribing.

In the introduction, Mr. Seay tells why pictures do not actually “move,” with examples. He describes the phenomena of characters apparently moving across the screen. “Static” is explained fully and a formula for avoiding it. Colored motion pictures, both those that are tinted by hand and the natural color processes, are explained.

Fire At Eclair Not Serious

The fire in the plant of the Eclair Moving Picture Company, at Fort Lee, N. J., on the afternoon of March 19, did little damage, the loss being between $6,000 and $7,000. Reports at first had it that the flames had destroyed upwards of $350,000 worth of property.

The immediate eruption of a large studio, with up-to-date equipment in every detail, that will enable them to take care of orders of any size, is one of the company’s earliest contemplated moves. The blueprints are ready for the new building and construction work will commence very soon.

The officers of the firm are at present located at Main and Plymouth avenue, Rochester. C. J. Trumeter and James Shero are its officers. “Everything in the film line” is their slogan. One feature of their business will be taking motion pictures of social functions and affairs of a private or semi-public nature.

The factory was quickly engulfed in the flames before the volunteer firemen arrived, and when they did the lack of high pressure made their presence of little use.

Alive to their business even in an hour of such excitement, the photographers of the company, under the direction of Henry Maire, manager of the plant, trained their cameras on the conflagration and took 900 feet of film depicting the progress of the fire.

Only two persons were injured in the disaster. Doubler, who tried to reach the negative vault, was overcome by smoke. Robert Klein, a factory boy, had one of his hands crushed by a falling timber.

Rochester Firm Plans Big Studio

The Rochester Motion Picture Company, Inc., has just been formed under the laws of the State of New York, and capitalized at $50,000.

The immediate erection of a large studio, with up-to-date equipment in every detail, that will enable them to take care of orders of any size, is one of the company’s earliest contemplated moves. The blueprints are ready for the new building and construction work will commence very soon.

Warning to Exhibitors

A notorious swindler has been forging the signature of Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Film Company, and passing bogus checks upon exhibitors throughout the country. Warrant for this forger is held by the Akron, Ohio, police. He has defrauded hotels in New York, Connecticut, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania. His description is as follows: Name said to be Chas. P. Saunders, aliases, C. H. Baker, Chas A. Sanders, B. W. Somers, Robt. O. Manning, A. P. Sivier; nativity, American; age, 35 years; height, 5 feet 10 inches; weight, 140 to 150 pounds; build, medium; complexion, light, sallow; hair, dark brown; eyes, blue; style of beard, clean shaven.

If this swindler defrauds you or attempts to defraud you, notify your police and cause his arrest.
The Photoplay Authors League of Los Angeles, Cal., is at last an established fact, and thirteen writers of ability have elected their officers, and voted on other writers who desire to become members. The officers elected are as follows: Frank E. ("Spec") Woods, president; Richard Willis, treasurer; Marc E. Jones, secretary; Hetty Grey Baker, vice-president. Russell E. Smith, William Wing, F. McGrew Willis form the Board of Control.

The membership is divided into two groups, active and associate. The first group must be able to show ten produced scenarios, the latter five. The League is protective and aims to improve conditions. It is neither social nor concerned in the sale of manuscripts.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors of the Bronx held a meeting on Tuesday evening, March 24th, at the Bronx Center Theatre.

A majority of the Bronx exhibitors are members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York and have recently organized a local branch of that organization, with Samuel Eckman, of the Bronx Center Theatre, as president, and Max Newman, of the Peerless Theatre, as secretary. Fully three-quarters of the motion picture men of the Bronx attended.

The Gene Gauntier Company has opened its new studio at 515 West Fifty-fourth street. There is ample space in the new quarters for the use of six sets in the production of their features. Several new productions are under the supervision of Jack J. Clark, Miss Gauntier's husband, and an old Kalem star.

The Roland Feature Film Company has just released a five-reel photodrama entitled "Trapped in the Great Metropolis." This picture has been written and produced under the sole direction of George K. Roland, late of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

The photoplay contains five hundred scenes and over four hundred characters were needed for the ensemble work for the scene of depicting police life in New York City. The Broadway stages in this picture were taken at no little expense and risk, as were the auto chases of the Great White Way. This photodrama may well prove to be one of the sensations of the season.

Katherine La Salle, a legitimate actress of decided ability, has been engaged for the title role of "The Banker's Daughter," the five-part feature which the Life Photo Film Corporation is preparing to release about April 15.

"As Lillian, in this drama of American life to-day, Miss La Salle will continue along the same line of dramatic work which she defined for herself in "The Master Mind," with Edmund Breese, in "Checkers" with Thomas W. Ross, and as understudy for Florence Reed in "The Yellow Ticket."

The World Film Corporation have just acquired the rights to "In Search of the Castaways," dramatized from Jules Verne's novel, "The Children of Captain Grant." This is the first of a series of twelve of Jules Verne's novels that will be released in the near future.

G. L. P. Vernon, who is in England, has just bought the rights for the United States and Canada for the World Film Corporation for "The Brass Bottle," which will be an early release of this concern.

The owners of the "Life of Tim Sulivan," by the Gotham Film Company, have closed with Marcus Loew's circuit, starting on April 2 at the Broadway Theatre, and then continuing throughout the other houses.

Pathé Frères has engaged Thurlow Bergen, well known on the stage as a leading man, for an engagement under the direction of Frank Powell. The latest actor to join the film forces has been prominent before the footlights for ten years. This season he appeared in "Ourseleves," at the Lyric, New York, and "The Marriage Game," at the Comedy.

The display of the Ernemann Photo-Kino Company, of Berlin, will be one of the features of the exposition at the Grand Central Palace, New York, June 8-13. In their space on the main floor they will exhibit their new Imperator Steel Projector, Moving Picture Camera, and Imperator Printing Machine. In addition to these exhibits they will also show their Home Projector, which has been such a great success all over Europe.

Phil Gleichman, vice-president of the World Film Corporation, just back from a Western trip, reports business in a flourishing condition in that section of the country. Mr. Gleichman has just opened four new offices in Los Angeles, Denver, and Seattle.

Serials of the adventures of Zingo, the hero of the twelve-reel Ambrosio being released through Warner's Features, Inc., are being booked to appear in a large number of newspapers in different parts of the country.

S. W. Bishop has resigned the presidency of the American Kineto Corporation, of 130 West Forty-third street, New York, to assume the management of a business in London. He will leave for England within a few weeks.

Though abroad, Mr. Bishop will retain a close interest in American productions, and will be glad to represent any manufacturer in Europe desirous of foreign representation.

Frank G. Kugler has taken the place of Fred Dobson as camera man with the Life Photo Film Corporation. Mr. Dobson was forced to resign on account of ill-health. Mr. Kugler was formerly head camera man with the Edison Company.
THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

The Lasky screen production of "The Squaw Man" was the cinematographic "pièce de résistance," by arrangement with the Sherry Feature Film Company, at the "Motion Picture Night," given at the Hotel Cumberland, Fifty-fourth street and Broadway, New York City. Ralph Herz, the Winter Garden star, ran the affair. A Simplex projector was used.

"C. O. D.," the farce by Frederick Chapin, which ran at the Gaiety Theatre, New York, last year, will be made into a five-reel photo-farce by the Vitagraph Company, and put on at the Vitagraph Theatre.

Sidney Drew, Etienne Girardot, and Charles Browne will play the three "C. O. D.'s."

The Gold Seal single-reeler, "In the Blood," will mark the first appearance of Eugene Ormonde on the screen, after two decades of footlight experience with Mrs. Fiske, Margaret Anglin, Blanche Bates, and other stars. Mr. Ormonde is at the Hollywood Cal, studios of the Universal, a member of Edwin August's company.

Telegram orders for "The Perils of Pauline," the Eclectic feature production, are coming in in such numbers from all parts of the country that Jule Burnstein, the manager of the Eclectic Feature Film Exchange, is beginning to fear a shortage.

Arthur F. Warde, formerly with the press department of the George Kleine attractions, is now in charge of the publicity department of the New Strand Theatre, Broadway and Forty-seventh street, New York, which will probably open Saturday, April 11.

Burgoyne Hamilton, formerly assistant advertising manager of the General Film Company, and a well-known scenario writer, has joined the producing forces of the Mutual Film Corporation. He will take part in the direction of "Our Mutual Girl" series.

The United States battle ship Vermont has been equipped with a Power's Cameragraph, No. 6A, motion picture projecting machine. The United States Government is having motion picture machines installed in practically all of their Army posts and on battle ships, for the amusement and education of the soldiers and sailors.

The Photo-Drama Motion Picture Company, of 290 West Forty-second street, New York, have sold the Ohio and Michigan rights of the "Ten Nights in a Bar-Room" to Schultz and Schultz, of Newark. Two prints were bought. The headquarters of Schultz and Schultz are in the Columbia building, Cleveland, Ohio, in care of Abe Siegel.

Under the plain, simple title of H. Winik that person has revolutionized the London film market, awakened and otherwise disturbed their lethargy, and made them imbibe the idea of territorial rights. At the present time Mr. Winik is in New York attending to the organization of the De Luxe Attractions Film Company, which will handle such films as "Sealed Orders" and "The Blue Mouse.

In 1911 Mr. Winik came to New York with the idea of establishing an Eastern chain of theatres. Taking a trip to London, he soon discovered the condition of affairs over there, and so shifted his operations, with the result set forth in the first paragraph.

He is in London to stay. When he returns to the English capital he will commence his operations of buying and selling features; buying them for the world, and selling them, a continent at a time.

The Beacon Film Company, Inc., of 145 West Forty-fifth street, New York City, are making their entry into the feature field with a powerful five-reel production taken from the French, "The Blindness of Innocence," reviewed on another page of this issue.

One subject a month will be released by this firm, and prospective buyers are always welcome to the company's projection-room and offices, to view this and other forthcoming releases.

Don't forget, by the way, that The Strand Theatre, with S. L. Rothafel at the helm, opens on April 11. Present indications are that the opening attraction will be the film production of Rex Beach's "The Spoilers," just finished by the Selig Company.

Lucius J. Henderson has just been engaged as feature producing director for the California Motion Picture Corporation by Herbert Payne, the president.

Mr. Henderson was an actor and a director on the legitimate stage before he joined the motion picture forces. He is also known as a playwright. Then he joined the Thanhouser Company as director and was later transferred to the Majestic, in Los Angeles, where he directed "Sappho," "The Reform Candidate," "Ruy Blas" and other successes of that brand.

The California Motion Picture Corporation is planning to place a number of big features on the market at once.

Charles Goetz, traveling representative of the World Film Corporation, returned to the home office last week after a trip through the West, where, he reports, business is in a flourishing condition. Exhibitors are leaning more and more towards big feature films.

John J. (Butch) McDevitt, the "millionaire for a day," visited the Lubin plant at Philadelphia last week and took much interest in the staging of photoplays and developing of the films.

A Simplex machine has been purchased by the Automobile Club of America. This is to be used for road purposes, for recording the various meets and such affairs.

J. C. Butts, manager of the Film Rental Brokers, of Denver, Colo., in an open letter to the press, replies to the published assertions of Sol L. Lesser, of San Francisco, Cal., charging Mr. Butts with laying claim to the ownership of the feature, "Arizona," and circulating fictitious letters, by declaring that Mr. Lesser's statements are without foundation.

"Mr. Lesser," writes Mr. Butts, "is merely trying to nip in the bud competition that he fears. His action is undignified and unmanly."

The Helen Gardner Picture Players announce that they will release, some time this Fall, several features of six reels length that Charles L. Gas-kill, director-manager, is the first producer of a photoplay of that length in this country. "Cleopatra," with Miss Gardner in the name part, was the title.
Dope," the thanhouser six-reeler, entered upon its second successful week at Weber's Theatre, New York City, under the auspices of the Continental Feature Film Company. Adverse press reviews ranged opposite favorable ones on the front of the theatre form a striking advertisement of the picture.

Continental features are now being shown at five New York theatres—Weber’s, The West End, McKinley Square, The Prospect and the Harlem.

Ford Richie, of the Trenton, N. J., Film Exchange, was seen around the New York exchanges this week. Among other pictures that Mr. Richie is taking back with him is "A Woman’s Heart," a four-reel Pathé. Mr. Richie has the United States rights to the picture.

C. Lang Cobb, Jr., sales and publicity manager of Ramo Films, Inc., left recently for a trip to the coast. His itinerary will be Detroit, Indianapolis, Chicago, Minneapolis, Des Moines, Kansas City, Wichita, Kan., Denver, Salt Lake City, and San Francisco.

Pathé will release on April 20, through the General Film Company’s special feature department, a four-reel production which bears the name of "The Treasure of Abbar Rahmen." There is no love story in the film. It is the intensely interesting narrative of the vicissitudes of a buried chest of treasure. The out-of-door scenes were taken in Morocco and show the quaint architecture of an old Moorish town and the burning sands of the desert.

Exhibitors in Syracuse, Rochester and Buffalo had an opportunity this past week to see "In The Line of Duty," which the William L. Sherry Feature Film Company is putting out. A private showing of the picture will be given Saturday morning, March 28, at the American Theatre, New York City. It is a four-reeler, centering about English army life in India.

R. C. Aulman is in active charge of the Manufacturers’ Motion Picture Catalog and Encyclopedia, issued by Birch-Field & Co., of 110 West Fortieth street, New York. The catalog is now on the press, and will be ready for distribution in the near future. H. A. Mackie is no longer connected with the publication.

Kennedy Features, Inc., has a new advertising manager and his name is Charles Giegerich. Mr. Giegerich is one of those who believe in making things hum from the start and keeping them moving all the time.

There are very few directors on the stage to-day who can successfully write and direct, at the same time playing the leading part in three multiple-reel subjects. O. A. C. Lund, whose picture appears on this page, is one of the few. At the present time he is directing and playing in "Snow Drift," "Regina" and "Pictures in the Fireplace." He is the author, as well, of all three.

Mr. Lund, who, it is hardly necessary to add, is with the Eclair Company, was born in Stockholm, Sweden, and before joining the Eclair, was producing for himself. He has been a newspaper correspondent and art critic. He has also sailed before the mast as a cabin boy. Hence his writings draw from a fund of personal experience.

President Tolmas, of the Gotham Film Company, is at work on a spectacular feature, based on a recent successful serial that ran in Leslie’s Weekly. The Gotham Company is also releasing a feature film based on the life of the late Senator Timothy D. ("Big Tim") Sullivan.

Simeon Greiver, formerly of the General Feature Film Company and the M. & F. Feature Film Co., has now organized his own company, to be known as the National Film Service, with offices in Chicago, and is at present in New York buying features. The Criterion Film Manufacturing Company will shortly begin the production of James Fenimore Cooper’s "The Last of the Mohicans," in five parts. C. L. Cole, secretary and treasurer of the company, has returned to the West with motion picture rights to the famous novel, after spending ten days at the New York offices of the company. Mr. Cole, it will be remembered, is general manager of the Pantages Circuit in the West.

H. B. Coles, general manager of the Precision Machine Company, is ostensibly on a vacation, but he isn’t overlooking any Simplex bets on his way to the coast, nor will he be after he gets there. Simplex projectors are easy sellers, he writes.

Earle Williams, the Vitagraph Company’s leading man, has been seriously ill at his home for several days. Though far from well last Monday, he disregarded his doctor’s advice and went to the Manhattan Opera House to see the first showing of "The Christian," in which he played John Storm. Then he hurried over to the Brooklyn Exhibitors’ Ball to lead the grand march and represent the Vitagraph there. The result was a high fever, and the actor was forced to take to his bed. He will probably rejoin the company this week.

Sidney M. Goldin, until recently a director with the Imp Universal Company, has formed "The Goldin Feature Film Company," and taken offices in the Forty-fifth Street Exchange Building, 145 West Forty-fifth Street, New York. "Joe" Gilbert, the theatrical manager, will have personal direction of the company.

Mr. Goldin plans to release about two features a month, beginning with April 7. He has directed the production of numerous features, and his ability as a director is recognized.

The Vitagraph Company is preparing to make a six-reel feature production of Cleveland Moffatt’s detective story, "Through the Wall," for presentation at the Vitagraph Theatre, Forty-fourth street and Broadway, New York.

Shep, the Vitagraph dog, is cast for the part of the "sleuth-hound" of Coquenil, the detective in the story, but the other roles have not yet been assigned. Wilfrid North will direct the production.

Carey Wilson is now the editor of the "Sherry Bulletin," the weekly news sheet issued by the William L. Sherry Feature Film Company in the interests of their features.
PHOTOPLAYS THAT DISAPPOINT

With the superior possibilities of the photoplay for rapidity of action, multiplicity of scene and with opportunities for startling effects which are quite beyond the limits of the ordinary stage, it is regrettable that so often even the biggest screen productions tell a story that is wooden, unconvincing and ill-jointed. Many of these defects are due to the haste with which some productions are put together; others are evidences of rank carelessness and gross inattention to detail. Always, of course, there is the fact that the producer must tell the story within certain definite, mechanical limits.

Yet all or any of these reasons are inadequate as an excuse for many of the productions—often in other respects of the highest class—which one sees nowadays. In the case of photoplays which are based on some famous novel or drama of the spoken stage, how often we see one which adheres with fidelity to the original plot, where the acting and the photography is above reproach, and yet which utterly fails to live up to the reputation of its original.

The story told is poorly joined together. Many of the scenes are non-essential, others do not clearly convey the message intended, or lead to a climax which is inane, ineffective or lacking in obvious connection with the story that leads up to it. Situations, too, are often forced and unreal, while true sentiment and adequate motives are so warped and twisted as to be made ludicrous, or, at best, incredible.

In other words, while the photoplay in many points resembles the novel or drama upon which it is based, the story it purports to tell is clipped and distorted till all its value is lost. Instead of being a faithful portrayal of the original, it is nothing but a poor caricature—a ghastly imitation, which disappoints if it does not disgust.

Much of this fault is due to a lack of attention to detail, coupled often with too slavish fidelity to the original text. It is true that the little things are of the utmost importance and often make or mar a scene. But they are not everything. The greatest directors to-day never lose sight of the point which they are striving to attain and to gain it find it often necessary to diverge from the scenario around which they are building the photoplay. Of course, it is difficult, when Scene 5 is set and staged ahead of Scene 1, for instance, for any director to carry in his head all the essentials of the plot's development. Necessarily, he aims to perfect the scene he has in hand, trusting to make it fit the rest of the piece as the play progresses. It is this fashion of making the construction of the photoplay secondary to the exigencies of the production which has caused so many faults to creep in.

The effect on the actors and actresses of such "cart-before-the-horse" production, inevitable as it may now be, can hardly be anything but disastrous.

How can an actor hope to rise to the true level of his powers and do justice to the scene, if he is called upon to enact the climax of a photoplay before he has fairly familiar with the preceding action?

If he must enact scenes at random and conjure up the proper mood on the spur of the moment, abandoning it within a brief space of time for the diametrically opposite mood to fit a scene in a remote part of the play, how can he give his performance any evenness or continuity, characteristics which are as important to screen acting as to acting on the stage?

The actor is one of the most adaptable persons on the face of the earth, and, chameleon-like, he can change his emotional hue to fit his scenic and dramatic surroundings.

But there is a limit even to his versatility, and though, when such extraordinary demands are made upon him, he may respond after a fashion and approximate the demand, it is only an approximation, and the requisite quality is too often lacking.

This condition of things may be one of the present necessary evils of producing photodramas.

But it is to be hoped that some day the photoplay will not be produced according to these principles. Then there will be living, breathing stories shown on the screen which will surpass the masterpieces of which they aim to be a counterpart.

There are a few such now. May they be constantly more numerous in days to come.
Every Previous Record for First Run Bookings Have Been Broken by

THE PERILS OF PAULINE

Our Branch Exchanges report the greatest enthusiasm among the exhibitors all over the country. They are ordering more reels for immediate distribution. We placed with each Branch Office more reels of the first episode of THE PERILS OF PAULINE than we ever did of any other feature film, but they have already found that their supply is not sufficient to meet the demand. You will appreciate how the exhibitors are taking hold when we tell you that

More than 400 Advance Bookings on the First Episode Were Booked in New York City and Chicago Alone in Three Days

These bookings included the Keith Circuit, Loew's Broadway and Wm. Fox Circuit, the Proctor Houses, etc.

We have had a great deal of trouble to turn out sufficient finished films. But we can supply all the demand, no matter how great. Most of the exhibitors who have booked orders have seen how great the demand is and, for their own protection, have booked orders for the whole series. We will protect you the same way. But you must get in at once. Give your patrons the whole series, from start to finish. You still can do it.

The Second Episode will be released April 6th Wire for it, and if you haven't run the first one, get it now.

The Perils of Pauline

The New York American alone received OVER 20 SACKS of answers in one day. They have special messengers making trips to the post office for the solutions. Their offices are piled to the ceiling with sacks of mail. A special force of clerks had to be put on just to open the letters. The judges had to hire a large force of assistants to help them to read and sort the tremendous number of solutions. One judge said that if he were to attempt to read all the answers himself, it would take him more than six months, reading ten hours every day.

Now, Then, Here Is Where YOU Cash In

What we have told you was at the office of one paper only. There are six others.

The Los Angeles Examiner, The San Francisco Examiner, The Boston American, The Chicago Examiner, The Atlanta American and the Deutsches Journal say that THE PERILS OF PAULINE is, without the least doubt, the most stupendous success, the most widely answered contest, they ever had anything to do with, and that more people are taking an interest in THE PERILS OF PAULINE than they even dreamed of in their most optimistic moods.

Any Exhibitor Who Lets This Chance Pass Him Is Not Alive to His Prospects

There never was anything like it before. People are discussing it in the street, on the cars and the trains, in the hotels and in their homes. Thousands have called on the phone to know if the pictures would give them the answer.

Now, with all this excitement and interest, you can coin money by acting at once. We can take care of everyone who wants an early release. You won't have to wait for several weeks, or even days, for a chance to cash in.

In the first episode you saw the mummy speak. You also saw the race track friend whisper something devilish into Owen's ear. Whatever it was, it had a lasting effect on Owen and made the probability of Harry ever marrying Pauline very remote.

The Perils of Pauline
grow more and more real every installment. In the second episode Owen sneaks into old Mr. Marvin's study and writes something to Pauline to which he signs the dead man's name. Of course it is a forgery, but neither Harry nor Pauline will know—that is one of the mysteries.

What Did Owen Write?
It was something no doubt that would put Pauline completely in his power if she takes the message as coming from the dead adopted father. This is one of the mysteries thousands and thousands of people are trying to answer so as to get part of the $25,000 in Prizes.

As the story progresses, more and more people are becoming interested. Inquiries are coming in from all over as to the names of the theatres where the pictures can be seen. This is where we help you again.

The names and addresses of the theatres showing The Perils of Pauline are printed in the Sunday newspapers.

Every one will know where to go to see them. We are doing everything to send people to the theatres showing The Perils of Pauline. They will get used to going there to see this special feature and you will have made many new patrons who will come regularly to see your programmes on other nights.

Every one of our exchanges reports the most unprecedented demand for bookings and the managers are constantly wiring us for more reels so as to insure every exhibitor an early run.

will make more money for the exhibitors than any other film or series of films ever produced. The intensely interesting story—the dramatic action—the sensational thrills—the mysteries and the prizes are going to hold the whole people right through from start to finish, and seeing one episode is going to make them more eager to see every other episode as it is shown.

Here Are Some of the Ways We Will Help You to Pack Your Theatre

Posters We have prepared one, three and six-sheet posters, window cards, photographs for lobby display, etc. If you buy the six-sheet posters we will supply them to you at 10c a sheet (60c for the complete poster) and will supply you free with one one-sheet poster for every six-sheet poster you buy. You can have the other size poster at this same price—10c per sheet.

Photographs We are having the photographs made up on large cards suitable for standing frames. We do not know just what these will cost, but we will only charge you the actual cost to us for producing. These photographs will include the actors and actresses and also several of the most thrilling scenes in the story.

Hand-Bills If you wish we will print as many hand-bills as you will distribute in the territory from which you draw your patrons. These hand-bills will contain a synopsis of the story. There will be a blank space for the date on which you are to start showing the film. This will be printed with your name, the name of your theatre and your address, and can be shipped to you within a day’s notice so that you can get them as far ahead of the date of showing as you wish. We will supply these hand-bills completely printed for $.65 per thousand.

Letters We will also, if you wish, have printed in typewriter style, a letter or series of letters on your own letterhead for you to mail to your patrons. These we will supply at $.00 per thousand.

Slides We will send you the same day we receive your order a series of slides to show between reels, so that for three or four days or a week before the date on which you show THE PERILS OF PAULINE, you can announce the big feature coming. These slides we are supplying at 15 cents each.

If there is anything else you want, let us know and we will try to get it for you, charging you just the actual cost to us

"THE MONSTER AND THE Girl"

(Solax)

REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

THE feature of this four-reel production from the Solax studios is a terrible hand-to-hand conflict waged on a swinging cable in mid-air. The story is one containing much action, with which is interwoven a romantic story of unusual excellence.

The scene of action is laid partly in New York City, and partly on the New England coast, and includes characters from both sections. The story is as follows:

Following a spectacular fire at sea a baby boy is found and adopted by a humble fisherman. The latter's daughter, a girl about the same age as the boy, keeps him company during his sojourn.

A New York banker is holding a large fortune which is really the boy's by right of inheritance. Having foolishly invested his own money, he tries to cover up his errors by getting the lad's permission to use his fortune. The boy refuses. The girl, smitten with the effete mannerisms of the banker, consents to elope with him.

The banker becomes more and more involved in debt and finally hires crooks to rob his own bank. After a fight on a swinging cable the man is killed and the boy and girl are once more reunited.

"THE CABALLERO'S WAY"

(Solar-Universal)

REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

A THREE-REEL "Western," following the story written by O. Henry. Although the three reels contain many good fighting scenes, the feature is the terrible hand-to-hand encounter in the last reel. The realism in this scene is wonderful; one could not tell that it was acting. It is stated on good authority that the two combatants, William Dunn and Jack W. Johnston, were unable to speak for several days following, because of the amount of dirt each swallowed. The latter was injured also by a knife thrust.

The production was made at the Western studio in Tucson, Arizona, which accounts for the excellent atmosphere. The staging and direction was attended to by Webster Cullison. Edna Payne and Hal Wilson assisted the two above mentioned.

The photography deserves commendation. Throughout it is most clear, and some very good "distance" work is registered. The opening is particularly effective. Some few thousand sheep are "discovered" passing through a gateway. As far as the eye can see there is nothing but a sea of these animals, following their leader.

The story of the film is as follows:

The Cisco Kid, a young Mexican desperado, is feared by all because he does not hesitate in the taking of a life, and because his aim is unerring. He loves Tonia, a coquette, who is continually teasing him. After shooting up the general store and killing one of the marshals sent to arrest him, he takes refuge in a monastery. The next day he rides into a neighboring town and shoots a young American for "eyeing" Tonia.

When laying his gun on the counter, he dares anyone to arrest him. Going out and perching himself in a tree, he shoots a member of the posse and rides off.

Lieutenant Sandridge is ordered to get him dead or alive and starts out. Hearing of Tonia, he goes to her house. A love match is immediately started between the two. She agrees to tell him when the "Cisco Kid" calls on her. The latter's girl offers to write a note to the lieutenant telling him that the "Cisco Kid" will try to escape in Tonia's clothes, and signing it "Tonia."

The lieutenant watching sees the figure leave, all bundled up, and shoots, killing the girl. He swears not to eat or drink until he shall catch the "Kid." A week later they meet and a terrible fight takes place, the lieutenant winning. He leads his captive to army quarters and the scene closes.

"TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY"

(Famous Players)

REVIEWED BY LESLEY MASON

"HEARTS ADRIFT" was Mary Pickford with little or no drama. "Tess of the Storm Country" is Mary Pickford plus a drama that permits the versatile little actress to display her dramatic abilities as well as her charming personality. If "Hearts A drift" proved popular, "Tess" will be the more so, for the added ingredient of drama there is in the play. It is no injustice to "Hearts A drift" or any of the other Pickford vehicles released by the Famous Players, nor any fulsome flattery to Mary Pickford to say that in none of them can quite so much of her talent be seen as in this production.

The production, originally planned in four reels, was lengthened to five at the last moment, and the event proves that it was an act of wisdom. It may be an illusion, but it is difficult to understand how the drama could have been adequately handled in four reels in the first instance.

"Tess of the Storm Country" is no easy work to adapt to the requirements of the silent drama. The very word "silent" implies that some of the most vital elements of Tess, as a figure in the book, must be abandoned in the screen production. Much of the great charm of Tess's character proceeds from her quaint conversation, and outbursts of unconscious philosophy and shrewd wisdom.

These cannot be so much as hinted at, except here and there in the sub-titles, so that an actress must be found who will embody these sayings, as it were, and reflect them through her personality.

To accomplish this, Mary Pickford is probably better fitted than any other screen actress of the day. Her fierce domination of the male element among the squatters on the shores of Lake Cayuga, her tender, motherly interest in those of her own sex, her womanliness and her child-likeness, her astounding wisdom, and her equally astounding ignorance, all these characteristics of Tess are exquisitely portrayed by Miss Pickford. Even though the climax of the five reels is really in the two sub-titles, "I Air Daddy's Brat." "But I Air Yer Squatter," the climax would not be complete without her pretty surrender to the Deacon's son.

This is really a series of dramatic episodes, each with its own unity and its own separate climax, but all cumulative to the one end. Tess is the sole bond of union between them. But here again the personality of the leading woman is of sufficient strength to give continuity to the separate events.

The photography is of the usual Famous Players quality. In one scene, the rain effect around the corner of a house is a little too obviously mechanical to be wholly realistic. One or two such minor defects, however, constitute all the faults that can be found with the production.
"THE SPARROW"

(Leading Players Film Corporation)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

MADAME POLAIRE assumes the leading role in this three-reel Eclair production. She has the reputation of being the ugliest actress, if not indeed, the ugliest woman, in France. Her acting in this piece proves her worthy of praise, and her homeliness is totally eclipsed by the beautifully sympathetic part she plays. The photography is good, at times appearing a little bit dark; the sub-titles are well placed and are conducive to the enjoyment of the story. Some very pretty scenes of rural France are shown, but there is a total absence of unnecessary scenery and acting.

Madame Polaire is by no means the only member of the cast worthy of mention. She is ably assisted by M. Caesar, who takes the part of the clown, and Henry Roussel, who impersonates the mayor. All the rest of the characters, though unimportant, give an adequate account of themselves.

A little girl is found by an old clown, Maffeu, who takes her back to his circus. There she grows up to be the drudge of the company. She is called "The Sparrow." One evening she collapses in the arena.

The attention of the mayor is called to her and he takes her to his home. She is very much elated, but her happiness is short-lived, for the servants take an immediate dislike to her. She is then received into the intimacy of the mayor's family.

She falls in love with the mayor, but her love is not returned; instead a banker, a close friend of the mayor, loves her. He makes things so uncomfortable for her that she leaves the mayor's home and goes back to circus work.

One day she is performing on a high trapeze when she sees her benefactor, the mayor, and his wife in the audience. The sight affects her so that she lets go the trapeze, falls, and is mortally injured. She is consolated by a last look at the face of the mayor before her death.

"LIFE OF 'BIG' TIM SULLIVAN"

(Gotham)

REVIEWED BY A. DAISON MICHIEL

I T is doubtful if any politician was more loved than "Big" Tim Sullivan was among his following. His many charities to the poor and needy are still spoken of in his district. That he was a politician was, after all, merely incidental in the opinion of his friends—the poor.

The Gotham Company undertook a large assignment when they commenced to make this picture. First the face of Sullivan is necessarily still very clear in the minds of all, due to the numerous photographs of him that were published. His life and tragic death are also well known and, unless the film were made primarily historically correct, it would be but a waste of material.

This film is accurate in every detail. It tells his life, starting with the arrival of his father and mother in this country and the celebration of "Little" Tim Sullivan at his christening.

Nothing is said of his death. The story skips from the time he was still in office to his funeral. Pictures of the latter are shown clearly. So much mystery surrounded his ending that it is much better to confine the pictures to the funeral.

Tim Sullivan as a boy certainly had his troubles. He had a light on this hands all the time to win recognition among the lads of his age. There is not a love scene in the whole picture that concerns Sullivan himself. Selling his papers on the street, shoe-shining and other minor operations which engaged the time of the East Side boy were his means of living. He was educated at the orphan school.

Probably his best-known charity was the giving away of thousands of pairs of shoes to the needy on the East Side. The origin of this beneficence is shown in his boyhood story, when he gives a poor Italian his new pair of shoes and is later rewarded by the man.

His running for office from the Whyo Club and his victory, when he gained all but four votes in his district, is an important scene in the history of the district. His many helps while in office, his daily life and friendships made are shown. From there the pictures follow him to the State Senatorship and then finally to the grave.

The film ends showing thousands of poor, unfortunate men receiving his bounty in the shape of boxes of shoes, pipes and tobacco, and finally the great Christmas dinner given in his memory this year.

"THE FLAMING DIAGRAM"

(TM)

REVIEWED BY E. C. DYWER

A NOther of King Baggot's now famous detective stories. As in the others of this series, the action is fast and of a mysterious nature. Mr. Baggot has found a vehicle in these pictures which gives him a chance to show his well-known and recognized dramatic talents.

Detective stories, whether in screen adaptations or in the original, will always have a hold over a certain large class of people. This story, told in two parts, dealing with political circles and the adventures of a detective in tracing a foreign spy, is no exception and will prove of interest to any general audience.

A new and powerful explosive is discovered by the Government. Word reaches foreign secret service bureaus and their spies are sent to try and obtain the formula. One spy in particular has a very exciting time of it, his attempts being foiled by the detective.
"THE GREAT DIAMOND ROBBERY"
(Plaegoer Film Company)
REVIEWED BY LESLEY MASON

Here is the monarch of all the venerable melodramas that used to enthral the theatregoers of a score and more years ago re-created on the screen for the younger generation, in six reels and with a cast of Broadway players, fresh from the problem plays and ultra-modern farces of the season. The camera and modern methods of production make it more plausible than its original could now be, but it still has the headlong rush of the melodrama of the days when melodrama was in its prime, and the hero, the heroine and the villain didn't get a chance to draw a full breath between the first curtain and the last.

To say that the film production is full of action is almost superfluous. It wouldn't be "The Great Diamond Robbery" if every one of the six reels did not have its full share and more of "doings." There are coincidences, of course, that make audiences of 1914 laugh. No writer would dare ask anyone to believe to-day that a detective happened along under the window of the villainess just in time to catch the wine-glass she had hurled out after poisoning her husband. And it must be admitted that Wallace Eddinger's performances as a modern "Jack-the-Giant-Killer" when confronted by half a dozen thugs amount to comedy that borders on farce. But these are all an inevitable result of faithfully following the original play.

In the entire production there are few, if any, attempts to be spectacular. Of sensations there are many, and some of them on entirely too small a scale. A better effect in Maria's death-fall down the grand staircase in the last reel would have been obtained, for instance, had there been greater depth to the scene, and the staircase had been really "grand." Right there, too, the play should have ended, instead of tapering off into a love scene.

The photography, it must be confessed, is uneven. In places it is blunted in an unexplained manner. This is notoriously true of the scenes in Maria's home, and of the first few scenes at the reception at Senator McSorbery's, in the sixth reel. In many other places, the pictures are as clear as one could wish, notably in the interiors at the home of Count Garbiadoff in St. Petersburg, and that of Mr. Bulford in New York. It is a pleasure, too, to be able to say that the action is not halted at any time, while effects that are extraordinary, but extraneous, are introduced.

Nearly everyone in the cast show at one time or another their lack of screen experience. If any of them were versed in the art of acting before the camera, they concealed the fact admirably. This is not to say that their performances were bad—the company is composed of too well-seasoned actors for that—but they could have done themselves far greater justice had they known what some of their screen contemporaries know of screen deportment.

Wallace Eddinger, as it turns out, is not the star of the production. That honor must be awarded to Gail Kane. Her portrayal of the serpentine villainess makes Maria a veritable Vampire, comparable to "The Woman Who Didn't Care" in "A Fool There Was." Neither Beatrice Henderson nor Katherine Kealred could have surpassed her. Elita Proctor is at her best as Mother Rosenbaum, the "fence." Charles J. Ross is his usual debonair self. Martin J. Alsop is, or looks, six feet of aristocratic dignity as the Count Garbiadoff. Stapleton Kent's Don Pion is forceful because it was not exaggerated. Purnell Pratt, as Maria's brother, is a dutiful tool in the hands of his domineering sister.

On the whole, "The Great Diamond Robbery" is a proof that the grand old successes of ten and twenty years ago can "come back" and repeat their stage triumphs on the screen of to-day. It is the Playgoers' first production. It will undoubtedly be a stepping-stone to greater things.

A SPECTACULAR PHOTODRAMA

Considerable interest is attached to the first presentation in this country of the spectacular photodrama, "Rome or Death!" by the Inter-Continent Film Company, for the reason that G. Cattaneo, who appears as the famous defender of liberty, Garibaldi, has already won almost universal praise for the previous work as Nero in "Quo Vadis?" and Napoleon in "For Napoleon and France." His characterization of Napoleon in the Cines-Kleine production has been viewed by critics both in this country and in Europe as astonishingly successful.

GARIBALDI ADDRESSING THE PATRIOTS
Scene from "Rome or Death!" (Inter-Continent)

Chev. Molinari, the director of "Rome or Death!" has cabled to this country, "Wait until you see Cattaneo as the great Garibaldi." The comparison will give photoplay fans an opportunity to pass judgment on a rather important question.

In the production Molinari has taken advantage of every bit of background which the Eternal City provides and the battles between the Garibaldians and the French troops at St. Sebastian and Villa Gloria are considered something exceptional.

Signora de Leonardis, the distinguished Italian emotional actress, supplies the love theme in this big five-part production in the role of Elda, daughter of the patriot-leader, Canzio.
"THE SPY"
(Universal Special Features)
REVIEWED BY MERRITT CRAWFORD

One by one, all the world's greatest novels and plays are being produced for the screen and this four-part special feature, based on J. Fenimore Cooper's famous work of the same name which has just been completed by the Universal, will be an addition to this list which will be welcomed by many.

Great fidelity has been shown in following the original story by James Dayton, who wrote the scenario, and by the former's brother, after his escape from the Continental prison, is another point which is not satisfactorily made plain.

It is to be hoped that another scene will be added or inserted in which these details are made clear, and if this is done "The Spy" will be one of the most acceptable releases of the year.

The story of the piece deals with the adventures of Harvey Birch, a spy in the service of General Washington, who, for the purpose of gaining information of the British movements, makes it appear that he is in the pay of King George. The action takes place during the first years of the Revolutionary War, while the Continental Army is encamped around Newburgh, N. Y. The spy has many thrilling escapes and there are many exciting scenes, notably one in which a regiment of Hessians are hurled from a broken bridge into a stream. Throughout the piece, the skein of a slender but none the less interesting love story is woven.

"IN THE MOON'S RAY"
(Essanay)
REVIEWED BY C. J. VERHALEN

One event follows another in this thrilling detective picture, booked for release on April 10th. The Essanay Company have worked into a series of this kind of pictures and have been exceptionally successful.

Action and plenty of it keeps up the interest of the viewer throughout the entire two reels. The scenes are well laid and the unfolding of the plot makes one wonder what the next move will be. Original and novel situations punctuate the entire production.

In the very first hundred feet a painter is seen putting a new coat of paint on a window. He doesn't do it differently from any other painter. But later on, this fresh paint gives the detective a clue. Throughout the picture little things such as these make one acknowledge the picture as exceptional.

A strong cast help tell the story. Francis X. Bushman, E. H. Calvert, Rapley Holmes, Gerda Holmes, Bryant Washburn and Charles Hitchcock play the leading roles.

Meredith Blake, a gentleman crook, learns that Mr. Hamilton has recently obtained a priceless scarab. At the same time Spider, an accomplice, by accident finds an invitation to the reception at which the scarab will be shown. This sets the way for Blake's entrance. He ally's suspicion by telling him that he is from headquarters.

When all have departed, he slips into Hamilton's sleeping room, and by the moonlight that comes through the window finds the scarab. Hamilton awakens, a tussle follows, the Spider enters and strikes Hamilton, who falls unconscious on the bed. The burglars flee and take the daughter with them. Judith in the taxi regains her wits, removes the license badge from the chauffeur's arm, pins it in her slipper and throws it out the taxi window. It falls at the feet of Richard Neal, the private investigator. He lures the Spider to his home, where he puts him through the third degree. The scene, a very strong one, shows the light from the overhanging chandelier concentrating itself on the thief. The Spider confesses. The scarab is returned and Judith is rescued.

OPERATOR INVENTS EYE SHIELD

Under the firm name of Marks Bros., two of Chicago's practical operators are marketing the Marco Eye Protector. These two gentlemen have long operated machines in Chicago and have felt the need of some protection for their eyes from the different lights that necessarily strike them while operating their projection machines.

They set their minds to solving the problem, and after months of experimenting perfected their present protector which is fully patented, and is said to overcome the light trouble for the operator.
"CHARLOTTE CORDAY"

REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

A SENSATIONAL drama of the French revolution in four reels. The personal relationship that existed between Charlotte Corday and Marat, the fiend of the strife, is clearly expounded, and if we are to believe the film to be historical it serves the good purpose of deciding several questions referring to the reason for her act.

The plot contains a love story that will please. It is the old-fashioned story, the tale of love undying.

REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

ALTHOUGH the plot of this three-reel picture, made by the Edison Company, may not be termed strictly original, the number of novelties in its makeup give the audience a treat. The story is one of Washington life. Scenes showing the White House, the Capitol and other points of interest in Washington are projected. The Edison Company claims that these are the first pictures ever taken of these places in connection with a story.

Augustus Phillips and Gertrude McCoy are the principals. They are assisted by Marc McDermott, Elizabeth Miller, Marjorie Ellison, Frank Lyon and Mr. and Mrs. William Rechtel. Miss McCoy has in this picture found an excellent vehicle.

Mary, the daughter of an actress, lives in a convent part of the time, though having several artist friends. One day one of these paints her picture and May, her girl friend, sends it to a wealthy aunt in Washington, telling the latter that it is her own likeness. The aunt thereupon sends for her. May asks Mary to go in her place.

Arriving in Washington, she is made much of and the aunt tries to marry her to some of the wealthy bachelors. May, in the meantime, keeps writing demanding money, and not receiving it she comes to Washington.

Bishop, who had painted the picture, threatens to denounce Mary to the aunt. Finally things get so warm that May owns up to her duplicity and leaves the aunt and goes to the home of a friend. A count, while seriously ill, calls for Mary and confesses that she is his daughter, explaining that her mother and he had been secretly married.

Thus is her station established and she marries the man of her choice. An excellent finale.

"GUILLOTINING THE FRENCH NOBILITY"

Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude depict the two principal roles of Charlotte Corday and Marat. The photography is very fair.

Charlotte and her lover, Barbaraux, are very happy in their love-making in Normandy, until one day Marat calls on them. The beauty of the girl takes his fancy, and he orders her lover to go to Paris. The boy is forced through fear of the man to obey.

A year later Barbaraux is arrested by Marat's order, but escapes under a pile of rubbish. He is again taken prisoner and the soldiers ordered to arrest Charlotte. They are, however, unable to find her. She journeys to Paris and hears of her lover's plight. Writing him a note, which falls into the hands of Marat, she tells of her purpose.

The next day she goes to the home of Marat, where he is in a foot bath. He writes two orders, one for the immediate release of Barbaraux, the other for his execution, telling her that she must be the price. Apparently she agrees, but a favorable moment arrives and she stabs him. Barbaraux is released.

Several days later Charlotte Corday mounts the scaffold and is beheaded.

"NAPOLEON"

REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

FIVE reels of historical drama, teeming with action. This is not the first time the life of the "man of destiny" has been filmed, in fact, there are several pictures under the general name of "Napoleon" upon the market at the present time.

His life, which up to his coronation has but little bearing upon the future history of the world, is dealt with lightly. From that time on his trials, battles, love affairs and general history are given with great care to detail. His conduct toward his soldiers, his overbearing manner when opposed and his life in court and on the field, are all depicted.
“The Barber of Seville.” (Kleine-Ambrosio. Three reels. March 24.)—This comic production is taken from Beaumarchais’ play and Rossini’s opera of the same name. Its one fault seems to be that the attention of the observer is not held throughout. Some of the scenes could easily be shortened without losing their charm; as it is, the interest seems to lag in some places. The photography is very good and the costuming is one of the strong features of the production.

The story revolves about the love of Count Almaviva for Rosina, the ward of a grumpy old doctor, who intends to marry her himself. The Count, aided by Figaro, “the Barber of Seville,” has different disguises and attempts to see Rosina. He is thwarted by the doctor a number of times before he succeeds in smuggling in a notary and a witness and marrying the girl while the doctor is out after the guards.

“The Acid Test.” (Victor. Two reels. March 16.)—J. Warren Kerri- gan and Cleo Madison in the leading parts. Mr. Kerrigan plays the part of a city attorney and presents a good moral lesson. The title is very good. The photography is better than usual. Action is fast.

The city attorney is engaged to the daughter of a railroad magnate. He realizes that the franchise the railroad wishes to get will do the city a great injury and strongly opposes it. The girl’s father tells him that unless he ceases his opposition and helps put the bill across, he will force the girl to break her engagement with him.

After much thought, the attorney decides he will do the right thing and continues to oppose the bill so that it is not passed. The father withdraws his threat and gives him his blessing, for his future son-in-law has passed the acid test.

“A Spoiled Life.” (Pathé. Two reels. March 12.)—The latter half of the second reel of this picture is devoted to an industrial called “Making Lace Fans.” It is made by the German company. The part of the hunchback is excellently played.

A playwright who is very much deformed writes a wonderful play which scores an instant success. He falls in love with his leading lady and she, out of pity, marries him. His jealousy is aroused over her feelings toward another man. He debates whether he will shoot the rival, and finally decides to end his own life instead.

But there is almost nothing new in the entire five reels; it might better have been condensed into two or three.

The plot is sturdy and strong, and still good for several more revivals, but it should have been presented without the usual care and staged with more than common beauty and realism. A city banker wins and marries the sweetheart of his college chum, a country minister, proves untrue to her, abandons her, and then pays with his life for his career of speculation. When the faithful parson has finally found the girl and brought her back to “the old home,” the letter that never reached her” is discovered in the old melodion, and—you can guess the rest.

“The Secret of the Will.” (Kalem. Two reels. March 9.)—In which after a long interval the right triumphs over a great wrong. The will conditions the beneficiary to having a natural or adopted child.

Joseph Moore adopts his poor cousin’s child, Dolly, and for a thousand dollars receives a release of any claim on the fortune. George Lane does not know the condition of the will, as the lawyer and his cousin are in guilty collusion.

Eighteen years later he finds out the truth, and amid very dramatic scenes he is reinstated.

“Golden Gate Weekly. No. 64.” (California Motion Picture Corporation.)—The scenes depicting the havoc wrought by the recent deluge near Los Angeles are the best on this release. The wreck of the Salt Lake Railroad steel and concrete bridge is particularly graphic.

A nineteen-year-old light weight, the world’s champion wrestler of his weight, appears, and promising ring lightweights are shown in action. The monument to Francis Scott Key, composer of “The Star-Spangled Banner,” erected in Golden Gate Park, and Oakland’s unique automobile police patrol are other interesting features of the weekly.

“A Passover Miracle.” (Kalem. Two reels. March 30.)—This is an excellent story of the Passover, with all the titles and inserts written in Jewish, as well as English. Henri Leone plays the part of Joseph Ratokowitz, an orthodox Jew, with Irene Boyle, as Lena, his daughter. Samuel Lowett, is Sam, his son.
Sam is educated by Lena, his sweetheart, who works in a sweatshop. His love for her is soon lost in an infatuation for Rebecca, who, after causing Sam to leave home for her, discards him for another.

Humbled, he returns to the home of his father, who is conducting the Passover ceremonies, and Lena, opening the door to "Welcome Elijah," finds Sam, ashamed to come in. Her love is still true, and the prodigal is welcomed back.

"Seven Days." (Klaw & Erlanger, March 22)—This is one of the first farce comedies to be produced by Klaw and Erlanger, and if the rest are as good their success is assured. All the action takes place in one house, but the scenes are very elaborate. The burglar is no doubt the funniest character.

Everyone knows the plot of "Seven Days." Three young men, three young women, a burglar, a cop and an unwelcome chaperone are quarantined in the same house. Their experiences are sure to draw a laugh from everybody.

The photography throughout is clear and there are a good many scenes shown in the picture which were impossible to put on the stage. Many will find the photoplay even funnier than the original farce.

"The Coming of the Real Prince." (Reliance. Two reels, March 21)—A very pretty story, absolutely unoffensive, likening a modern lover to a fairy story hero. A girl decides which is the real prince, the city sport or the country bumpkin. Needless to say, the latter gets the final choice.

A maid of all work believes she loves the city salesman and consents to elope with him, because all are so cruel to her. She does so and is followed by her lover, the butcher boy, who rescues her from the salesman.

"Diplomatic Flo" (Victor. Three parts. March 21)—A diplomatic tale which is rendered doubly attractive by the piquancy which Florence Lawrence's presence lends it.

The secret service are seeking to discover the means by which the ammunition is being sent over the line to Mexico. Bob Owen, a member of the secret service, enlists the assistance of his fiancée, Flo, to secure the evidence which will convict a suspect, Don Jose, of the filibustering.

She adroitly obtains a paper from his room, which tells Bob what the boxes at the station labeled "beans" and "shoes" really contain, and the Don is arrested. The whole disclosure is effected by the skill of Flo as a hostess, but as Bob comes in strong at the finish, he gets all the credit.

"Darkness and Dawn." (Great Northern. Four reels. April 6)—Great Northern pictures are known the world over for the superb treatment of outdoor scenes which characterizes them. This one abounds in such artistic achievements. The hero of the picture is sadly discounted, however, by his inexcusable belief in the trustworthiness of an anonymous letter, besmirching his wife. The reconciliation he accomplishes at the end, one must feel, is far beyond his deserts. Count Joachim is shot, while hunting, by Count Frederick, his cousin, and is nursed back to health by the girl whom he later takes as his bride. Exasperated at the failure of his plot, Frederick sets to work, with the aid of a dissolute gamekeeper, to blight Joachim's married life. An unsigned letter, followed by the "accidental" discovery of the sleeping Countess is enough—for the picture, though not for the audience—to cause Joachim to banish the girl and sue for divorce. He learns the truth when the gamekeeper and his wife quarrel and she betrays her husband.

"Shorty's Sacrifice." (Broncho. Two reels. April 8)—A good production, which, although possessing nothing unusual in its plot, will be sure to interest for its action, which is very fast. One inconsistency.

A number of tramps on a train decide to steal it. The caboose is attacked first and the guard overpoweredy. Shorty defends it and drives off the marauders. He obtains a position on a ranch and in gratitude to the man who is so kind to him he swears he killed another whom the ranch owner is accused of slaying. He is freed by the confession of the real slayer.

"Freckles." (Domino. Two reels. April 21)—A story of the pirates along the water front. "Freckles" is a young lame boy, the brother of a would-be member of the gang. The sub-titles are slightly mixed in their wording, leading the audience to believe that the brother has joined. This, however, may be altered.

Chuck, Freckles' brother, loses his position in a ship yard, and, after being coaxed, apparently joins the gang. He receives word that they are to rob a boat in the harbor and decides to join them, at the last moment refusing. The gang are all caught. Freckles' attempt to keep the older boy away from his bad associates is pathetic.

"The Three Shadows." (Gaumont. Three reels.)—Her father losing his money, Helené secures a position with Madame D'Erriga. Madame Ravelli drugs Helené and her mistress, and with two accomplices robs the house. Madame D'Erriga dying from the effect of the fumes, Helené flees to Amsterdam, where she marries a man who later appears as Madame D'Erriga's brother. Soon after, the police find incriminating articles among her possessions, and she is tried for the robbery. She declares herself a victim of a plot for which Madame Ravelli is responsible.

Madame Ravelli is found to have a bad record, and her guilt is easily established. Happiness once more returns to the life of Helené.
GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

“The Comrade’s Wife.” (Edition. April 1.)—Not many companies would presume to lead off in a month with a moral story, and keep up with it for two-thirds of the picture. Yet here is one that contains paths for the first one and a half hours of interest. The widow of his comrade isn’t told that her husband died two years later. Her lover nobly keeps the secret.

“The Missing $25.” (Edition. Split reel. April 1.)—Not a very logical story. A hen-pecked husband invents the excuse that business calls him to Yonkers, so that he may play cards. He loses $25 and in some way the story leaks out.

“Andy and the Hypnotist.” (Edition. April 1.)—The fifth adventure of Andy Clark, the messenger boy. He finds the poses for the hypnotist and gets so mesmerized that he stays in that way. Good comedy.

“Quarantined.” (Edition. April 12.)—Good for light amusement. The comedy is played by children who are not exceptionally stupid, or else the vehicle is not good. Edith Betty Waves, Janet Dawley, Yale Boss, Andy Clark, Edna and Arnold Hanel and Richard Peer are the principals. The troubles of a husband in getting into the threepenny medicine house for the sick babies is the theme.

“The Resurrection of Caleb Worth.” (Edition. April 14.)—How an old man, considered too old-fashioned for modern business methods, shows his predecessor how to run things is the subject of this interesting drama. Caleb was the president of a bank, but resigned when the new regime came in. His successor makes a failure of the arrangements and Caleb, after a year of want, resumes his position. A good love story.

“The Chinese Fan.” (Edition. April 11.)—The fifth of the Dolly of the Dalles series written by Aton Davie. Dolly goes to Chinatown to get an assignment. A small fan which she has given to the boy friend of the rent agent, is, to his surprise, a secret emblem of a tomb. Her adventures lead to the finding of a missing heiress and consequently a scop.

“The Cop on the Beat.” (Selig. March 18.)—Donald, the father of a poor family, is trying his hand at being a friendly cop, saves his family from the rent agent and then from a burglar, who proves to be Donald’s faithless partner. Donald comes home success-ful—a very happy ending.

“Luck in Odd Numbers.” (Essanay. March 18.)—A side-comedy in which an A. D. T. is granted the freedom of a magnifi-cent house, through the misunderstanding of a message. George, an ambitious clerk, wins the rich owner of the house in a peculiar way.

“Ghosts, or, Who’s Afraid?” (Vitagraph. March 18.)—A remarkable contemporary containing some excellent trick photography and some very pretty settings in a haunted room, walks in his sleep and buries his clothes on the beach. He finds that he can make him when he is through and have a good laugh.

“The Weaker Brother.” (Lubin. Two reels. March 18.)—An exciting civil war drama con-taining some very realistic scenes. The plot might be less complicated without detract-ing from the story. The story revolves about Dorothy, the daughter of a Southern colonel. She enters the ranks of the rebels and her story runs parallel to a line which leads to the following day. Dorothy drives him and dresses him in a Confederate uniform and sends him back to his army. In the last scene she is reading a letter from Phillips telling her to wait until the last letter in over.

“The Raid of the Red Smuggler.” (Kalem. 1½ reels. April 1.)—In this reel the natural beauty of the scenery proves a worthy back ground for a story of frontier life which, though lacking at any time in interest, holds the attention of the regiment over his daughter, and is arrested and con- fined to jail, from which she escapes. Indians attack the fort and are getting the better of it when Hal brings aid to the garrison. The Colonel forgives and con-sents to Hal’s marrying her daughter.

“Professor Oldboy’s Rejuvenator.” (Kalem. Split reel. April 1.)—A comedy which is original in its main plot. An inventor who restores youth is used on the inventor and who becomes half his age, and with permission to marry his sweetheart, before bringing him back to his normal age.

“The Confounded Count.” (Kalem. Split reel. April 2.)—An amusing comedy in which a mother brings over a Count to marry her daughter, who loves a customs inspector. Exhibit three declares duty on cut’s purchase abroad, and in the turned Elise and he escape and marry. On the same reel with “Historic Tarrytown.”

“Historic Tarrytown.” (Kalem. Split reel. April 2.)—This reel shows some very interesting comedy in a small, picturesque town and its historic settings. Good photography.

“Winnie Willy’s Private Show.” (Melies. Split reel. March 19.)—Winnie Willy is invited to a little girl’s house, because she cannot go to see him at the pictures, and he refuses his best to entertain her, not knowing his mother and his father had exposed them. So they are married.

“The Wasted Years.” (Pathé. Two reels. March 21.)—A story in which the emotions common to all human beings are brought into play. The photography is interesting. His own showing unproved worth, an old man makes his will in favor of an adopted son. The father is accidentally killed, and turns over the real son, and the scheming butler, place the blame on Henry, who is a very clever fellow, and tells of Henry’s innocence. Released from prison he meets Jack, and in a struggle Jack is accidentally killed. A fine release.

“The Family Skeleton.” (Kalem. Split reel. March 20.)—A comedy with John Brennan and Ruth Roland playing the leads. John’s wife follows him to a museum and finds that he poses as a fat lady. Their horror at seeing each other in the place is mutual, but her love overcoming her chagrin, she claps him in her arms. On the same reel with “Cypess Logging in Florida.”

“The Idler.” (Vitagraph. March 19.)—The baby of a drunken father is adopted by a wealthy family. After many failures and dis-appointment to his father, agents they set him adrift. He meets his father and see what might become of himself if he pursued the same course, so he refuses to go on. The baby’s position as a musician and he becomes a successful business man. The story is well acted and well directed. The baby’s success is the result of his own efforts. The baby’s condition is a sad commentary on the influence of adverse circumstances. The baby is well drawn and the art work is superior.

“The Restless Woman.” (Biograph. March 19.)—A reel which depicts the sorrows of a woman who is torn between two love desires, the love of her home and that of the stage. A great actor and an actress who becomes dis-satisfied with living in the theatre. The baby runs off to the city, where she is induced to return to the theatre and again and again the actress realizes that she is not losing everything.

“Lost in Mid-Ocean.” (Vitagraph. Three reels. March 23.)—The close attention of the observer is held throughout this excellent dramatic production. The tale is very well acted and directed and the art work is very superior. The spectacles of an ocean liner going headlong into a wave and then slowly sinking could not be improved.
THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

The acting of all the characters is very good. Undoubtedly the wireless rooms of the two ships are the final and the fire in New York is very realistic.

Richard, returning from Japan, is separated from his wife, Loona, through the contrivances of a Japanese, who loves Loona. Harold, a research officer, who follows her husband on another ship, the next day on which she thought she is lost. Richard's reunion with his wife in the last scene forms a touching finale.

Old Reliable. (Vitagraph. Two reels. March 21.)—A story of sacrifice and tardy reward. Dora Allen marries Tom, a young man, in May and wins his father's consent. His father, however, who was a burglar, tries to rob the newly married couple in his new house. The wife, who proves to be a very clever detective, manages to outwit the burglar.

The Love Route via Pitman. (Essanay. Mar. 21.)—A far comedy in which two graduates of business school marry after an awkward mixup.

In Remembrance. (Selig. Mar. 21.)—A happily married couple become rich with the usual unhappiness. Jack forgets his wedding anniversary for the birthday of a dancer, but things are set aright by the wife's father.

שתמךポロ. (Pathé. Mar. 21.)—A very pretty scene of India. On the same reel with "Twinchopoly" and "Strange Sea Water Creatures."

Workaday Scenes in the Flowery Land. (Pathé. Being some of the smaller (Chinese) industries. On the same reel with "Twinchopoly" and "Strange Sea Water Creatures.

Strange Sea Water Creatures. (Pathé. Mar. 21.)—Showing some of the rare sea water animals. On the same reel with "Twinchopoly" and "Workaday Scenes in the Flowery Land."

Cypress Logging in Florida. (Kalem. March 20.)—Some very descriptive views on the methods of logging, cutting, husking and sawing up the logs. On the same reel with "The Family Skeleton."

The Price. (Lubin. March 20.)—A very clever story. John Winkle, rather than tell the price of a story which his wife has lost, men's gentleman's bursar. He leaves town and stops at a hotel. He comes out of the hotel and runs to his wife, before seeing who it is.

A Model Young Man. (Vitagraph. March 20.)—A comedy with good action. Xill wishes to marry a wife who is not very sweet. He marries her and she kills him, before seeing who he is.

His Wife Wins. (Pathé. Two reels. March 21.)—A comedy with both dialogue and excellent acting. It is a story of a man who tries to dismiss his wife, who proves to be a very clever detective.

The Luck of Hog Wallow Gulch. (Joker, April 1.)—This is not a good comedy. The plot is a perfect retelling in around mud and dirt to no purpose.

The End of the Feud. (Rex. April 13.)—A drama of the South. Beautiful scenery and excellent acting. The two very poor families agree to stop their fighting. The son, however, is rather reluctant to give up the feud, and is killed, causing the feud to nearly cause the fight to start anew. A good love story with an unusual ending.

Her Moonshiner Love. (Sexton. April 10.)—A melodrama which shows the good and evil of the moonshiner. A moonshiner is caught by the officers of the law. The country officers whose death is shared by his intrusive rival.

Why Kentucky Went Dry. (Frontier. April 9.)—Conventional plot. Two boys quarrel over a girl. One is later rubbed and the other accused of it. The girl, finding the heel of a shoe, locate a heelless tramp, whom she accuses and proves that he stole the money.

Universal Animated Weekly No. 107. (Anyan.)—This shows the adventures of the United States troops on the Mexican border and some of the vagaries of the officers and men and command the most attention. By Mayer's cartoons make a good ending.

Pretzel's Baby. (Frontier. Apr. 9.)—A far comedy. The police chief goes down to the "Chief" of police finds some counterfeit money. In which two colonels become friends and Jim and Molly are allowed to marry.

Strange Evidence. (Frontier. April 4.)—A conventional plot. Two boys quarrel over a girl. One is later rubbed and the other accused of it. The girl, finding the heel of a shoe, locate a heelless tramp, whom she accuses and proves that he stole the money.

The Surgeon's Experiment. (Majestic. Two reels. March 29.)—A drama dealing with criminality that makes very good entertainment. The plot is carefully worked out so that the action is perfect continuity. The offices scenes might have been improved. A surgeon wagers he can take any criminal and by an operation make him honest. He proves his theory to be correct, although the outcome looks doubtful for some time.

The Squire's Son. (Kay-Bee. Two reels. April 1.)—The feature shows the very unusual finale, which seems to leave something to be desired. He is not as good as the atmosphere not as good as usual with the productions of this company. Barney and Barney and Barney and Barney and Barney favoring the latter. Michael strikes the wrong note of the comedy and attempt to kill Barney, which leaves the field clear for the lover.

A Parcel Post Auto. (Apollo. March 29.)—Having got the auto "bug" a farmer buys a car, but when it refuses to go gives it away to a parrot. By removing the jack from under the wheels the man finds the car is a perfectly good one.

The Certainty of Man. (American. April 1.)—A very usual story. A man elopes with a girl whom he ruins. Years later in the same village he is killed, the girl's guardian being blamed until the confession of a tramp frees them all.

Universal Animated Weekly No. 107. (Frontier. April 9.)—A far comedy. The police chief goes down to the "Chief" of police finds some counterfeit money. In which two colonels become friends and Jim and Molly are allowed to marry.

Universal Animated Weekly No. 107. (Frontier. April 9.)—A far comedy. The police chief goes down to the "Chief" of police finds some counterfeit money. In which two colonels become friends and Jim and Molly are allowed to marry.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

The 'Boob' Incognito. (Rex. April 8.)—In this comedy a "thief" is given the opportunity to take his good advantage. A banker's daughter wishes to marry a thief, and refuses her American father. The thief, suffering from his cases of the law, goes in as a janitor as the Earl Duffisland, elicits the girl entirely of her mania for the nobility.

Universal Ink Makes a Monkey of Himself. (Universal Ink Co. April 14.)—In this installment "Ike" is seen at his best. He entertains a traveling show at the circus, causing many complications. His attempt to imitate a monkey proves very disastrous. He sets himself on fire, and is obliged to dive into a pond to put himself out.

An Arizona Jol. (Mutual. March 29.)—A story of the South. A great fire that destroyed the South in St. Louis is interest. The laying of the cornerstone of the baseball park of the Federal League, the laying of the cornerstone of the court house, and the laying of the cornerstone of the Grand Central Palace are featured. There is also an air photograph of the Grand Central Palace, in the submarine style in appearance, which is non- sinkable, and a thrilling picture of an accident which the Grand Central Palace completes the most interesting events.

Forgetfulness. (Imp. March 29.)—A drama founded on the standard for women and their husbands. Mr. and Mrs. Edmond Mortimer and Charles Eldridge are the guests of "Home." The principal reason for the wife to forget to such an extent that she begins to love another. His death frees her from her legal ties.

The Mountain Pass. (Princess. March 26.)—One of the poorest productions by this company. A boy leaves home because a girl in town loves him. Years later in the same town he is killed, the social leader being blamed until the confession of a tramp frees them all.
"THE ZINGARA"
(Aetna Film Company)
REVIEWED BY EDWIN LAURENCE

THAT mysterious life led by the gypsies is faithfully portrayed in this three-reel drama. Their lives and loves are depicted in a most impressive manner. The semi-barbaric mannerisms cannot but make an impression on the average audience. The story deals with a girl who, loving another outside of her tribe, repulses her father's favorite. The adventures the two lovers go through make very interesting material for a drama.

Cynthia, the queen of the Zingara tribe, loves Robert Lorraine, an artist, whom she had nursed back to life. Her father desires her to marry Pharo, but she refuses.

Robert leaves the tribe and goes to his home where soon after he becomes engaged to Lady Maude. Just as the wedding is commencing Cynthia hears and breaks up the party. The result is a duel between Robert and Lady Maude's brother. In the fight Robert fires in the air. Some gypsies, wishing to be avenged on the brother, shoot him from ambush and Robert is convicted of it on circumstantial evidence.

Lemuel, the guilty poacher, confesses to his share of the murder and Robert is freed. He returns to his home and, finding he cannot live without Cynthia, goes to the tribe to seek her. He is captured by the gypsies, who order the girl to put him to death. Rather than do this she kills herself and Robert is freed.

"THE TRIUMPH OF RIGHT"
(Pan-American)
REVIEWED BY LESLEY MASON

THE vindication of a wife after fifteen years of exile from her home, driven thence by the machinations of an Iago-like secretary who worked upon the credulity of her husband with pitiable success, is the theme of this four-reel feature. It is a "Punchfilm" production, of German origin, and released by the Pan-American.

One of the noteworthy points about the production is the appearance in it of an actor whose resemblance to Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, the English star, is nothing less than remarkable. His acting is equally worthy of comment.

While it is of the gesticulatory sort, he manages to register every gesture clearly before the camera, without destroying the force of the gesture. His fine presence and expression make him an important factor in the strength of the picture as a whole.

Two sensational scenes, in which the effects aimed at are obtained with artistic realism, are noted to be the course of the picture. In the first, the rascally secretary, smarting under the wife's rejection of his advance, blows up her former sweetheart in his laboratory, after having taken pictures of the two while on a hunting trip and used them to besmirch the woman's character in the eyes of her husband.

In the second, which is the climax of the drama, the husband forces the secretary to fight a duel with him in the dark, each man aiming his revolver at the lighted cigar in his adversary's mouth. Right triumphs, for when the light is switched on, the secretary is stretched out, dead, across the couch before the man he had wronged.

The photography in the outdoor scenes is excellent, as is the case with most of the foreign pictures. In the interiors of "The Triumph of Right" it is generally adequate, though here and there a flaw may be noticed. The scenes in the library of Payne, the engineer, during the last reel, and in the study where the duel takes place, are all that could be desired in this respect.

Though there are obvious conventionallities, the drama is well supplied with tense situations and thrilling moments. Its powers of pleasing will be manifest to anyone who sees it.

"ZINGO AND THE WHITE ELEPHANT"
(Warner's Features)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

THE second of the series of "Zingo" pictures, two more of which are to come. The picture was originally made in twelve reels by the Ambrosio Company, and will be released by Warner's in four installments of three reels each.

In this chapter "Zingo," although preferring to rest on his laurels, is forbidden to do so by his beautiful companion, Mysoa, whom he rescued in the first chapter. She hears of a wonderful white elephant in Asia which has been stolen and suggests that the valiant company set forth to locate it.

The usual extravagant burlesque scenes are shown in this picture as in the others. From seriousness to utter foolishness the picture swings, with an absolute abandonment of precedent. Perhaps it is this that makes it such excellent entertainment. A large standing army of women (dressed in tights) does not lessen that interest.

Arriving in Bangkok, Captain Zingo and his men are captured by the lady soldiers. He is freed by their captain, who is smitten with his charms. He repays her by roping her and freeing his companions. The elephant, which has been stolen by the Chief of Police, is sold to a mandarin. Mysoa is also caught by this same mandarin, but is valiantly rescued by the sailors who climb the walls. They hide in tall vases to secure her freedom. But they are caught again themselves and placed in huge barrels. The escape from these is very humorous. Finally they catch up with the mandarin again, swim out to his boat, beat off his soldiers and obtain the white elephant. They are royally received and given much gold upon their return to Bangkok with the sacred animal.

Phil Gleichman, who has been out West, opening new offices for the World Film Corporation, has made arrangements with George Endert to handle the business of the Seattle office located at 1914, Third Avenue.

Joseph DeGrasse, veteran actor and motion picture director, who for a number of years was featured in his own production by the Pathé and Lubin companies, assumed the directorship on March 9 of the Universal Victor Company, in which J. Warren Kerrigan is featured. The first Kerrigan production to be done under the direction of Joseph de Grasse at the Universal Pacific Coast studios is entitled, "The Lion," Kerrigan plays the part of a millionaire sportsman, nicknamed "The Lion," on account of his brute strength.

According to the newspapers James K. Hackett has inherited a million and a half and promptly announces that henceforth he can afford to devote his time to motion pictures. It looks as though he was hinting at a successor to his Rudolf in "The Prisoner of Zenda."

J. G. Conner, manager of the St. Louis branch of the World Film Corporation, has moved into larger quarters and now occupies an entire floor in the Navare Building, Sixth and Chicago streets.

"Schultz, the Paperhanger," is the title of Director Allen Curtis' newest comedy. Max Asher plays the role of Schultz, who becomes a "scale" paperhanger.

The latest Nestor comedy, now being produced at the Universal Pacific Coast studios by Director Al. E. Christie, is entitled, "Their Honeymoon." The story tells of a newly married couple who set out to visit their uncle in the city and are mistaken for lunatics. The scenario was written by Mr. Christie.

In the two-part production, "The Last Supper," being put on by the Lorimer Johnston of the American Film Mfg. Company, Sydney Ayres will portray Christ. Numerous scenes are of the modern age. The representation of Christ will be allegorical. The final scene will show Christ walking on the water of the sea of Galilee.

"In the Moonlight," is the title of a coming two-part production by the American Film Mfg. Company under direction of Thomas Ricketts. This is the second of the series "In the Firelight."

Arrangements have just been completed to book the feature films of the World Film Corporation over a circuit of theatres for the summer months.

Through the Denver offices of the World Film Corporation, "Joan of Arc," was leased to the Parochial School at Rifle, Colo., where it was impossible to handle the crowds. A return engagement has been booked.

D. Mundstok, back from Chicago, reports he has done excellent business with his "On the Firing Line in Tripoli," having sold the States of Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan and Western Pennsylvania. He has also organized a new company to be known as the Players Film Manufacturing Company, of which he is president, H. Drapkik, treasurer, and H. Manheimer, secretary.

Vaudville has been making several vain efforts to lure John Bunny, Mary Goddard and James Morrison, in an endeavor to have these Vitagraph motion picture stars present, in vaudeville, the silent drama "The Honeymooners," which they are now presenting at the Vitagraph Theatre. Edith Storey, who played Glory Owsley in the Vitagraph motion picture "The Christian," now at the Manhattan Opera House, New York City, is one of the few moving picture actresses whose work compels them to move from town to town. Some of the scenes in "The Christian" were taken in England. Many were photographed on the rocky coast of New England. At present Miss Storey is in California where she is engaged in playing the principal role in Captain Alvarac, a five-reel drama.

The employees of the American Film Manufacturing Company enjoyed their first novelty dancing party at Colonial Ballroom, 20 W. Washington Street, Chicago, St. Patrick's night, Tuesday, March 17, 1914. Novelties of all descriptions were rendered throughout the evening.

The vogue of "The Adventures of Kathlyn" has become so much of a habit with the patrons of the series that they call for it as people do for books at a public library. In the case of Kathlyn theatres have been repeating the various releases over and over in conformity with request.

tion was common to everybody and it was received in the ordinary course of business.

Q. It was known, then, generally, that the licenses of certain exchanges were cancelled from time to time during that period, by the Patents Company? A. Yes. The Patents Company sent notices to that effect to all exchanges.

Mr. Kennedy's declaration, on direct examination, that the General Film Company was swamped with offers to sell by the exchange owners of the country, produced the following colloquy:

Q. At page 3,406, folio 3, you state, 'We always had more exchange property offered to us than we were fitted to handle.' In other words, in the summer of 1910, and the fall of that year, exchanges came to you to sell to you, faster than you could buy them, and handle their properties? A. Yes. And I protested to the Board against being obliged to purchase such property in advance of our having the organization to take care of it.

Q. Mr. Kingsley, on your direct examination, read to you a statement or report made by Mr. Fox on a direct examination, that you had testified that you had said at this interview, to him, 'Well, this is the finish of my work. This is the end of what I set out to do,' and you denied having made that statement. Whether you made that statement, or not, Mr. Kennedy, it is true that you had finished the task of buying up exchanges by the temporary arrangement arrived at with Mr. Fox for the purchase of his business?

A. I had not finished any task. There never was such a task, and I was involuntarily acting as an officer of the General Film Company.

Q. In other words, you did not consider this buying up of the exchanges a task, did you? A. I did not consider—no task was set forth at any time.

Q. In other words, you were just doing this along without having any set purpose or plan to do it? A. The experiment of finding out whether the providing of a source of supply of film, of motion pictures, conducted without favoritism, would relieve the business from some of the burdens and evils which were common to it, was only an experiment. It was tried with a view of finding out if it were a remedy. If not, some other remedy would be undertaken, and that was the only idea in starting the General Film Company.

Q. You started, in your judgment, as an experiment? A. As an experiment, as the means most likely to afford the relief and accomplish the objects desired.

Q. When did the General Film Company cease to be an experiment? The Witness. It is still an experiment.

Q. And is it still an experiment at the time of your interview with Mr. Fox, at which time, as you have testified, none of the licensed exchanges were then in business except his, and this Twin City Calcium Company in the West? A. It was very much of an experiment, and a doubtful one.

Q. Did you consider the other exchanges doing business, also experiments? A. I never gave any thought to whether they were experiments or not, except when their owners referred to them as such.

Q. Then, in your judgment, the General Film Company was the only experiment in the exchange business? A. No. I say other exchange owners referred to their business as probably fleeting and evanescent, or an experiment, and that was the principal reason they gave for trying to induce the General Film Company or someone else to assume the risk.

(Direct-from-Broadway Features) REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

JUST what the moral value of this picture may be it is hard to predict. Whether it will help the great crusade against this evil, if it really exists in such tremendous proportions, is hard to state. As a melodrama, as a story pure and simple, it is most interesting, although not original. It is full of exciting situations, is well acted and none of the six reels should be eliminated.

The great "punch" in the story is the fact that the wholesaler is just as much to blame for the thief as is the retailer or "runner." This point is really the whole foundation of the story. Unfortunately it is not brought out strongly in the end. It is registered, but not with such strength as to leave the impression desired on the minds of the audience. Aside from this, the story is good throughout.

Slim Rogers, the son and partner of a man engaged in the manufacture of drugs, becomes a "fiend" through the carelessness of a doctor who has given him an injection of morphine. He is disowned by his father and becomes an idiot. He disappears from sight for some time. In the meantime his sister marries his father's other partner, Binkly, and also becomes addicted to the drug.

Slim is captured by the police in a tenement raid and telephones for his sister, who bails him out. He goes with her to her home, and forces her to steal money from Binkly to aid him obtain drugs. Binkly almost catches him, and after some time Mr. and Mrs. Binkly are reconciled.

He has discovered that she used morphine and a trained nurse is put in charge of her. By a clever ruse she escapes and, taking her boy with her, flies to Chicago.

Slim, in trying to steal from his father, is caught by the latter and in the scuffle the older man is shot. Slim is sent to prison for ten years.

Eight years later, Mrs. Binkly returns to New York a prostitute. She meets her brother again, after his release from prison. Slim blackmails the husband by promising to find his wife. Binkly waits for his return and summons a messenger boy, who proves to be his son. The boy leads his father to the "home" of his mother.

Not finding her there, they go to the druggist where they locate both Mrs. Binkly and Slim, both dead—the mother from want of dope, the man from a pistol wound delivered by some thieves. The druggist is blamed by the label on the bottle, which reads, "Rogers-Binkly Company."

IN MIZZOURA

(All-Star Feature Corporation) REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

AFTER the wonderful rural drama by Augustus Thomas, Burr McIntosh, who created the original role of Jo Vernon, the village blacksmith, plays the same part in this production. The play, which scored a tremendous hit on the speaking stage, is rendered carefully and correctly by the All-Star cast.

The producer, Lawrence B. McGill, has utilized the great pains to have a likeness to the original as close as possible without spoiling the story. As so much of the beauty of the drama lies in the speaking lines and the dialect used by the country people, this production of it cannot hope wholly to equal the original. The first three reels consequently are slightly slow, catching up in the fourth, which, together with the fifth, contains the "punch."

The atmosphere is unusually good. The photography and costuming is beyond reproach. The story is as follows:

Jim Radburn, the young sheriff, loves Kate Vernon, one of the daughters of Jo Vernon, the blacksmith. His sister, Emily, and Sam Fowler are engaged to be married. Sam is an express messenger and is robbed by a man posing as an official of the company. The robbery is blamed on Sam and he is thrown in prison. Travers, the real thief, drifts into the home town of Sam and makes violent love to Jim's girl, Kate. Some time later they plan to elope.

Sam, in the meantime, is freed and, returning, discovers Travers, whom he recognizes. Jim, who has secretly resigned from his position of sheriff, learns of the truth regarding Travers and finds him in Kate's house, where she has hidden him from the posse. He forces Travers to leave the state.

The posse get wind of what Jim has done and blame him for neglect of office. The truth comes out and Kate and Jim are reconciled.
“PERILS OF PAULINE”
(Eclectic)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSOR MICHELL

JUST when our interest in this picture is at its highest, when our expectation is all worked up and we are "on our toes" with excitement, a neat little trailer appears on which the words, "This picture is continued, and will be shown at this theatre in two weeks," and all our hopes are blasted. BUT, and the word is emphasized, as we leave the theatre we plight our solemn promise to the only girl, that in two weeks' time we will be occupants of seats in that theatre, to see the second installment, even if we have to pay for our seats.

That is where the picture will be successful from an exhibitor's point of view; it assures him of return patronage, and return patronage means money, which spells success. And there is no chance of the people forgetting the picture. Even if they never heard of it again by advertising they would remember it. With the tremendous campaign the Eclectic Company are waging in the trade and daily papers, there is no chance of the date of the next installment slipping their minds. It is undoubtedly the setting of a valuable precedent.

The picture teems with mystery, which has been used to advantage in puzzle contests. The photography is better than the usual, the settings realistic. A novel idea which gives the audience a wonderful visualization of the story is worked to advantage.

Pauline as the author of a good story has shown it to her father. The story is told to the audience as the old man reads it by allowing the illustrations to come right up to the mouth of the camera and then take on animation. The sub-titles are in the story itself. The double exposures show the work of a master mind.

The story: Stanley Marvin, a retired manufacturer, lives with his son, Harry, and Pauline, his adopted daughter. His health is very weak and he is constantly dependent upon his physician. Harry and Pauline are in love with each other. The girl longs for adventure and is the author of a story, which sells to the largest magazine.

Mr. Marvin is an Egyptologist and has a mummy sent to him from Egypt. On opening it he falls in a daze and sees the mummy come to life and say something to him. She also places a bracelet on his wrist, ordering him to give it to Pauline. On awakening he does this, then dies, for the shock is too much for him. Raymond Owen, his secretary, assists in making out his will, and events forecast his blossoming out as a thorough-going villain. The third reel closes leaving him in the company of a notorious race-track gambler.

Pearl White and Crane Wilbur play the lovers, Edward Jose does some wonderful work as the father, Paul Panzer and Francis Carlyle are the villains. The picture was reviewed at Proctor's Twenty-third Street Theatre.

THE RISE AND FALL OF NAPOLEON
(Napoleon Film Company)
REVIEWED BY C. J. VER HALEN

This eight-reel production is divided into two parts, each of which makes a complete story in itself. The first four reels deal with the rise of this mighty warrior, showing his triumphs, his gloires, and his victories. The opening scenes are views of the house in which he first saw daylight.

"The Little Corporal" from the very first to the last reel holds the center of interest. The four last reels show his gradual decline, his defeats and finally St. Helena, where he passed into the great beyond.

The characters who play the main roles are flashed on the screen preceding the story. This is succeeded by a scene of the birthplace of Napoleon, Ajaccio, Corsica. The siege of Toulon follows, then Josephine's meeting with the wandering gypsy who told her that one day she would be the queen of France. Shortly after the marriage Napoleon departs at the head of his army for Italy. His Egyptian campaigns are touched upon.

Austria declares war upon France. Napoleon crosses the Alps, meets the soldiers under the command of the Austrian general, Melos, at Marergo, and defeats them. Soon after this Napoleon is crowned first emperor of France. Now at the height of his glory, he occasionally joins his wife at the fetes in the Palace of Malmaison.

War with Russia is imminent, so Napoleon gathers together his armies and defeats the enemy at Borodino, near Moscow. Napoleon triumphantly enters Moscow. The terrible retreat is portrayed with vividness.

Scenes of the emperor's decline in power are furnished by the pictures of the battle of Waterloo, showing him beating back Wellington with victory in his grasp, when Blucher arrives to vanquish the French army. Pictures of Napoleon's life on St. Helena conclude the production.

"LAST OF THE MOHICANS" SOON UNDER WAY

Aubrey M. Kennedy has left for the Pacific Coast studios of the Criterion Feature Film Mfg. Company, to take a personal part in arranging the details for the coming production of J. Fenimore Cooper's "The Last of the Mohicans," which promises to be one of the big film productions of the year.

Mr. Kennedy's ability as a film man, was made as a director of big Western productions, and his talents are well known.

"SQUAW MAN" POPULAR

The Lasky production of "The Squaw Man" is breaking records right and left, it appears. Said records have been smashed at the Strand Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., and at the Rex, Salt Lake City, Utah. At Minneapolis, the picture played to 14,000 paid admissions in two days.

In Buffalo, "The Squaw Man" is booked for sixteen different houses, after having recently played a full week there. Three days was the first engagement, but it was retained for the rest of the week.
"NATIVE LIFE IN THE PHILIPPINES"
(Pan-American)
REVIEWED BY A. Danson Michell

Twelve thousand feet of film, out of many thousand taken, divided into two parts of six thousand each, to be shown on two separate evenings, is the plan of the Pan-American Company in exhibiting these wonderful pictures. "The most wonderful pictures ever witnessed in New York City" is the expression used by one of New York’s largest dailies in describing them and although this may sound like an exaggeration, there is much truth in it.

The subject is one that can never be duplicated. Taken under the direct supervision of the Hon. Dean C. Worcester, Secretary of the Interior, by the Government photographer, it is of the greatest value as a historical masterpiece. With very few exceptions none of the scenes are posed.

Although a great number of the natives were camera shy, deeming it to be the work of the devil, some very wonderful scenes were caught. The last raid of the head hunters, now a subject only of the memory due to the giving up of that practice, is shown from beginning to end. The hunter leaving, capturing his victim, beheading him, and returning to his camp, the ceremony attendant, the killing of a chicken, the dance and the gruesome manner in which the natives kill a dog and baptized the head are all shown.

Much attention is given throughout to the women natives. They are sparsely clothed, wearing nothing above the waist. Their labor in the fields, washing their babies, their grief over their dead, are all very interesting. The reels were a full thousand feet in length, yet seemed much shorter because of the interest they aroused.

The photography is excellent, considering the difficulties of lighting. The natives would not pose for their pictures and necessitated the taking whenever possible.

The photographs clearly show the wonderful work the government is doing there. The children are no longer brought up in the wilderness, learning nothing but how to fight. They are sent to good training schools and taught many things that will later be invaluable to them. The men and boys are taught athletic sports of all sorts and are shown running and jumping, playing basketball, wrestling, and competing in three-legged races and tug-o’-war.

One native game, called "Slap," would hardly be popular among Americans. A native will sit down while another, whose duty it is to slap, will stand just behind him and with his open hand smack the other upon his bare flank, using all his strength. The idea is to make the blood leave the skin. Not a "white hope" game, at all events.

The new medicine men, as opposed to the old régime, is shown clearly. The new man, almost a doctor, is depicted vaccinating a native while the old one consults with the gods. Pictures of the first Christian marriage ever to take place between natives is also of historical value.

As an educational feature the picture has the highest possible value.

RIGHT OFF THE REEL

The World Film Corporation have made a new departure with the herald for their "Triumph of an Emperor." It is done in two colors and is different from anything of the kind attempted up to this time. It is a sample of high-class advertising and, although they cost a little more money, the value in advertising is substantial.

A Mutual Weekly camera man was fortunate in catching an accident at the South Mountain automobile race in California recently. One of the machines, in turning a bend, met with an accident and turned several complete somersaults directly in front of the Mutual Weekly operator's camera. At the last moment he was compelled to grab his camera and jump for safety. This picture forms one of the exciting views on Mutual Weekly No. 64.

The record of Lloyd F. Lonergan, production chief at the New Rochelle studio of the Life Photo Film Corporation, for four years he has written all their productions at the rate of three a week. The Brooklyn Hebrew Orphan Asylum, 274 Ralph avenue, has installed a Simplex projector to be used for instructive and amusement purposes.

The notice of a cocaine habit called "The Drug Teror" being produced at the Park Theatre, New York. The projection is furnished by Simplex projectors.

THE ILLINOIS STATE PENITENTIARY
(Abo Feature Film Company)
REVIEWED BY C. J. VERHALEN

These pictures are in four reels and were taken by the Industrial Moving Picture Company, of Chicago. They were obtained by official sanction and produced under the official direction of Warden Edmund M. Allen. Before they were offered to the public they were exhibited before all the convicts at the prison and were approved by them. The pictures are very complete and show everything from the time a prisoner arrives until he is paroled.

The photography is of a high standard, clear, and shows splendid detail. It is especially noticeable in the larger scenes where it was necessary to obtain depth.

The opening of the picture shows the exterior of the women’s prison, which was constructed in 1897. There are thirty-one white and thirty-four negro women incarcerated in this building who are employed at sewing, mending and laundry work for the men’s prison. A bird’s-eye view is given of the fifteen-acre enclosure within the walls. Then a portion of the east wall is seen, thirty feet high and five feet thick at the base and constructed of solid masonry. Warden Edmund M. Allen and Deputy Warden William Walsh, of the Joliet Prison, are shown, as well as Warden Allen’s executive office.

A flash is given of Mrs. Allen in the parlor of the Administration Building. Mrs. Allen is the principal assistant of her husband in the betterment of prison conditions. The officers and guards, a genial company, are seen at their duties. A newcomer, nicknamed by the prisoners “fresh fish,” is seen hereby of clothing and sorely in need of soap and water.

The new prisoner being photographed, and the Bertillon identification system of measurements and fingerprint prints is seen. The prisoner is given a haircut, bath and clean clothing furnished.

The prisoners are seen at work in the tailor shop, the rattan shop, the shoe factory, and the broom factory.

The chaplain gives instructions, medicine is distributed and the prison physician and assistants are seen performing surgical operations. Other interesting views are the scenes where the prisoners leave the shops at noon, entering the cell house, and the preparation for dinner for over fifteen hundred men, which consists of soup, meat, potatoes, bread and coffee. A very interesting scene is the washing and sterilizing of the dishes, which is accomplished in eighty-five minutes. The schoolroom is also shown.

“Camp Hope,” one hundred and ten miles from the prison, where the prisoners were permitted to work unguarded, but strictly on their honor, is depicted.

Armed guards patrolling the prison walls, the stone quarry with 250 prisoners entering the east gate of the penitentiary after their day’s work, the prisoners at play and at chapel, the volunteer fire department responding to an alarm of fire, and an offender against the prison discipline being placed in a punishment cell, are other vivid scenes. The prisoner’s last day, being dressed in citizen’s clothing just prior to his departure from the prison, concludes a picture that contains all the elements of a drama, and an unforgettable lesson besides.

WALLACE BERRY HAS BAD ACCIDENT

Wallace Berry, the comedian of the Essanay Company, was very seriously injured last week in the studios of the company. Mr. Berry’s part called for him to jump from a burning building into a net. It was decided that this portion of the picture be taken in the studio and that Berry jump from one of the beams that supports the roof. He made the jump, but in landing in the net he struck the roof and, as he struck him in the abdomen. A hemorrhage set in immediately and he is now in a very serious condition in the hospital.

Light on the Hickey-Urban Suit

Legal Difficulties Are Only Personal—There Is No Litigation Involving Any of the Allied Companies

The following explanation of the litigation between Charles Urban and William H. Hickey is given out by Willard Holcombe, publicity manager of the Kinemacolor Company of America. Mr. Holcombe asserts that there is no litigation between any of the allied companies, but that the legal difficulties concern only the personal accounts of the two mentioned.

Mr. Hickey formerly served as general manager of Mr. Urban's interests, the Natural Color Kinematograph Company and Kineto, Ltd., and being an American, decided to resign from the English companies and devote his time to Kinemacolor on this side of the water.

Mr. Urban allegedly objected to this move so strongly that Mr. Hickey was forced to sue for salary and expenses amounting to $15,000. McKean, Brewster & Morgan, Mr. Hickey's attorneys, secured personal service on Mr. Urban on his recent trip here.

Thereupon the latter started a counter-suit, the purpose of which is to obtain information on the actual amount of expenses incurred by Mr. Hickey. When this is determined by judicial referees, the suits will practically be closed.

It is said there is no personal animosity between the two litigants, but merely a desire to have their differences settled legally beyond any possibility of cavil on the part of stockholders.

BIG PLANS FOR DAYTON CONVENTION

The coming exposition in Dayton, Ohio, is very likely to prove the largest thing of its kind ever held, if all the current reports are to be credited. Every state in the Union and many representatives from Canada will be present.

Visitors wearing a M. P. E. L. badge will receive the greatest consideration from the residents of the city. Theaters will be open to them, as will also other places of amusement. As the hotels will be filled to capacity, one thousand tents will be pitched to take care of the surplus crowds. These will be in the park opposite Memorial Hall.

The convention is under the direct supervision of the national committee and a sub-committee is in Dayton making the arrangements.

REPUTATION vs. DOLLARS

NOT CONTENT with our star being made of tool steel and hardened, we are now grinding the star in a specially designed machine and hardening and grinding the cam, and all the bushing in the Framing Device.

We could have used brittle die cast parts made of zinc and lead in our Mechanism and after our guarantee expired we could have made lots of money furnishing repair parts that were moulded in dies as others have done, but this is not the REPUTATION which is behind the MOTIOGRAPH. We have stood for QUALITY REGARDLESS OF COST.

Our 1914 Model MOTIOGRAPH is now ready for delivery, and has many changes, such as Lamp-house brace, new model Arc-lamp, new Framing-Device, hardened and ground star and cam. All these changes have been expensive, but the price remains the same.

Besides ROCK STEADY PICTURES, THE LIFE OF THE MOTIOGRAPH HAS BEEN FIVE TIMES THAT OF ANY OTHER MACHINE.

Order a 1914 MOTIOGRAPH, and you will have a machine of QUALITY with a small up-keep.

MR. OPERATOR

How would you feel if an oculist told you, you had to give up the operating business?

We positively do not know how much harm 15 years of operating is going to do to any operator, but we do know, that if you will examine the eyes of the men who have been operating an arc lamp for the past 7 years, you will find that 90% of them have bloodshot eyes!

"The Old Curiosity Shop" will be one of the coming productions of the American Film Manufacturing Company, under the direction of Mr. Johnston, who has produced film adaptations of some of Charles Dickens' other works, will direct this feature. "The Picture on the Hearth" was the last one from the American. The Suffolk Street Street of Duffield and Fulton Street Theatre is noted for the quality of its projection and the latest features and Kinecolor and their project is done with Simons machine.

The National Theatre at Milwaukee, through its manager, complements the American Cinema Manufacturing Company on the merit of "The Picture on the Hearth." In part he says, "With this picture we played to more people than we have on any other Monday since my connection with the Buttercup." The William L. Whitty Feature Film Company is much gratified by the success of the booking through their "Famous Players Week" at Marcus Loew's Broadway Theatre, New York. The boxoffice receipts were such that another big feature week is being run this week.

The Precision Machine Company reports the sale of two Simplex projectors to the Real Life Picture Company, Inc. These are to be used for show purposes by them through Germany in connection with their synchronizing device for use in the movie picture industry.

C. L. Fuller, traveling representative for Critier and Kennedy Mfg. Co., has again taken the road for a whirlwind trip through Canada and the Middle West.

When described the "American Beauty" subject, is on-shoot a production in which Margaret Fisher, as the young lady, is expected to make her first appearance. In order to escape an unbearable matrimonial connection, she becomes a fashion novelist. This capacity introduces many novel features. The title of this subject will be announced later.

RAILROADS MAY USE MOTION PICTURES

News comes from Paris that the establishment of free motion picture performances in the waiting-rooms of the main stations on the Western State Railway system of France is being considered by Fernand David, Minister of Public Works. The films would represent picturesque scenery and resorts on the state system, announce trains and give other useful information to travelers.

Film Quality

Quality in the film—quality from a technical photographic standpoint is as important to the Exhibitor as is interest in the story that the film tells.

There's one film that's recognized the world over as the standard of quality—that is always used by those whose effort it is to give the Exhibitors the very best goods and the very best service—Eastman film.

And it is identifiable. Look for "Eastman" on the perforated margin.

"VAMPIRES OF THE NIGHT"
(Greene Features)
REVIEWED BY LESLEY MASON

WALTER E. GREENE has chosen a powerful picture in this five-reel production of the Aquila brand with which to make his debut as a dispenser of features to the exhibitors of the country.

The basic theme—the life of two women, one of noble birth, the other base-born, changed in the cradle by a nurse, so that the criminal’s daughter becomes a duchess and the heiress to the duchy a street-singer—is a favorite one with European producers, and not by any means new to American audiences.

But the development of this theme is powerful enough, though devoid of any real originality, to make the spectator follow the pictures with well-rewarded interest. Undoubtedly the photography would not have suffered by being a reel shorter than it is. The same criticism may be made of five-reel screen plays in general that are made of five-act stage dramas—the fifth act rarely ever is more useful than a “fifth wheel” is to a coach.

What the first two reels lack in sensation, as compared with the last three, they make up in “spectacles and outdoor scenic effects.” Two fine panoramas of a racetrack with the field in full swing down the course, half a dozen interior scenes in the castle of Burville, and some beautiful river and lake-shore views are introduced to adorn the exposition of the plot while the climax is preparing. Amid these surroundings the false Duchess of Burville spreads her nets to catch Lord Norman, the poet, and the true Duchess, a poor street-singer, charms, all unconsciously, with her voice and beauty, the aristocratic interloper whose heart is proof to the blandishments of his supposedly noble hostess.

Sooner or later, of course, the false Duchess, Judith, learns of the existence of her rival, Edna. Roxana, the nurse who stole Edna twenty years before, and substituted her own granddaughter, goes to Judith to escape the persecutions of the rascal who lived on her earnings in an humble tavern she had set up, and reveals to her her true origin. Judith, true to her criminal parentage, decides to rid herself of both Edna and her grandmother.

Edna, by arrangement, goes to Burville Castle, and is buried by Judith into the sewers of the city through a trap-door. Roxana, prevented from accompanying her, narrowly escapes perishing in a fire that destroys her inn by the timely arrival of Norman. With her dying breath she reveals to him the state of affairs, and he goes to Burville, wrests from Judith the secret of the fate of Edna, and plunges into the sewers to save her. Norman’s struggle to the river-gate, like Jean Valjean in “Les Miserables,” with Edna on his shoulders, is splendidly portrayed by camera and actor alike. Judith, in an agony of remorse, kills herself.

Bible Stories Make Stirring Picture

To List of Feature Plays Two More Come to the Fifth Avenue Theatre This Week.

"Samson" starts upon its second showing at the Republic tomorrow.

Samson, which depicts the life of the mighty hero of the Old Testament, is one of the most popular features of the season.

The story, which is based on the Bible, has been made into a dramatic spectacle and is presented with great skill and fidelity.

The acting is superb, and the scenes are beautifully staged.

The story of Samson is one of the most well-known in the Bible, and it is said to be one of the most inspiring.

Samson is a man of great strength and courage, but he is also a man of great faith and devotion.

He is willing to make any sacrifice to do what is right, and he never fails to respond to the call of duty.

The story of Samson is a reminder to us all that we should never give up on our faith, no matter how difficult the situation may seem.

Samson is a great hero, and his story is one that we should all strive to emulate.

Four reels—Released April 16th.

"The Redemption of David Corson" is one of the greatest subjects ever secured for the screen—a pictorial inspiration! William Farnum attains a distinct histrionic triumph. The spiritual appeal of the drama is difficult to suggest in words, and the inner conflict of David Corson is so humanly pathetic as to take a place in the hearts of all who behold it.
BROADWAY

Recognized as the home of Opera, Musical Comedy, Vaudeville and all things theatrical, has responded to the call of the "Movies."

A number of theatres on the Great White Way are now showing Motion Pictures in conjunction with their regular programmes.

Motion Pictures to be shown on this wonderful thoroughfare must conform to the well-known Broadway standard, i.e.—the very best.

It naturally follows that these high-class pictures must be shown the critical Broadway public through the medium of the projecting apparatus accepted as the standard in the Motion Picture world.

The Palace, Hammerstein's, Casino, Garrick, Vitagraph, Circle and Lincoln Square Theatres are a few Broadway houses using Power's Cameragraph No. 6A, the Motion Picture Projecting Machine with the Broadway reputation.

Correspondence with our Department D is invited regarding the patented exclusive intermittent movement and other distinctive features of this perfect machine.

Get in Line Now and Reap the Benefits that are Sure to Follow

It won't be long before you'll hear a lot of exhibitors say they had a chance to book the sterling, house-packing features of the Box Office Attraction Film Rental Company, but that they thought they'd wait awhile. And then they'll lament because they didn't act—because one of their competitors got in ahead of them.

That's the history of all good things. Hundreds of men have stubbed their toes on gold mines, but didn't have enough gumption to stick a pick in the ground and turn up the yellow metal. Someone came along with a little more initiative and captured the prize.

It is impossible for everybody in New York City and State, Northern New Jersey and New England, to do business with the Box Office Attraction Film Rental Company, but it will have the best of them, and they will be protected—they will control its features in their particular territories and can keep them just as long as they want them.

There is only one price. That price is low considering the quality of the pictures and the character of the plays. No exhibitor can get them for less, nor can one exhibitor take them from another by paying more. In fact the question of price cannot be argued. It is absolutely settled on fair basis—fair to the exhibitor and fair to the Box Office Attraction Film Rental Company.

It has been demonstrated that these features are sure-fire money getters—
That they draw larger crowds—
That they build business and create good will—
That they are the best obtainable, and—
That those exhibitors who get in line now are the exhibitors who will wind up the year with the biggest profits.

If you are located in New York City or State, Northern New Jersey or either of the New England States, get in touch with us at once.

MARGARET MEETS
BRUCE McRAE

Nobody ever had such a jolly time all the time as

"Our MUTUAL Girl"

And the jolliest times of all are shown in the twelfth reel of this epoch-making serial film.

Lucky, pretty Margaret is always revelling in more beautiful clothes, meeting all the prominent people of the day, and literally having no wish that is not immediately gratified by her indulgent aunt. No wonder that all the girls from Boston to Los Angeles are envious of this young lady! No wonder they all wish they could live like

"Our MUTUAL Girl"

What does Margaret do this week? First and foremost, she meets Bruce McRae, the leading man in that great current theatrical hit, "Nearly Married," who is one of the favorite matinee idols of the gay metropolis. Also, she is introduced to Commander Evans, who was second in command on Captain Scott's famous but ill-fated Antarctic expedition; and she visits such points of interest as Grant's Tomb, the Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument and Old Trinity Church. In addition to all this, she meets the champion markswoman of the world at the Sportsman's Show. But nothing ever appeals to Margaret more strongly than which seems to her to be the one never-ceasing, always-changing novelty of New York.

Meanwhile, the Battle of Torreon, which has developed into the greatest conflict on North American Soil since the Days of 1865, is actually being photographed in detail by Mutual Camera Men for which will be rushed to completion the moment that this greatest event of Villa's career has passed into history.

A New Department

IN a previous editorial on this page, in which the new technical department under the editorship of M. H. Schoenbaum was announced, we forecasted another department.

THIS new department is now fully under way. It is that of "Theatre Construction" and the editor in full charge is Nathan Myers, the well-known architect and specialist in motion picture theatre construction. Mr. Myers introduces his department in this issue.

NOTICE of the new department has been sent to every exhibitor in the country and to many about to become exhibitors. Its progress, we believe, will be followed closely and will stamp its influence upon the exhibiting industry.

IT is difficult to say that any one feature of a trade-journal is of more importance than another to the trade in general. But certainly for the exhibitor, in a large and practical way, no information can be more profitable than that which concerns the satisfactory housing of his patrons.

SPECIALISTS in theatre construction say that hundreds of thousands of dollars have been lost and an enormous waste even now is going on because of faulty theatre construction.

Many an exhibitor is searching about for the cause of poor patronage and blaming it on the film or machine, or what not, when that cause lies right in the theatre itself.

THERE are many points to be considered—which quite generally are not considered. An architect called recently to a city in Pennsylvania to look over the plans for a theatre and four different sites selected for its location, found the plans impossible and each site inadvisable.

Yet, without consulting him, this theatre would have been built—and perhaps made a failure.

THERE are some exhibitors well qualified by experience to plan their theatres. But these are few. There are just as few local architects, who understand the requirements of picture theatre construction—of those centering about projection, for instance.

In either case, whether he relies upon his own efforts or the assistance of the local architect, the exhibitor is taking a great chance.

IT will be the function of the "Theatre Construction Department" to fill this need for expert advice, and where plans are demanded, Mr. Myers will be ready to render direct assistance to local architects and builders.

The need of the services of such a department is especially indicated at the present time.

THIS is the day of the modern motion picture theatre. A definite and new era of theatre construction is on—the greatest in the history of amusement enterprise.

THERE is scarcely a town of any consequence throughout the country but already has, or is expecting, the building of at least one pretentious theatre devoted exclusively to motion pictures.

It is not too much to say that fully thirty-five per cent of the exhibitors of the United States and Canada are either planning to erect new theatres or to remodel old ones—all in an effort to meet the demands for accommodations equal to modern day pictures and the higher public taste for them.

Of Mr. Nathan Myers we need only say that which is widely known of him and which can readily be ascertained by inquiry—that he is one of the leading picture theatre architects in this country, whose work speaks for itself.

We have been holding this department for him to take charge of it.

Its services are now open to exhibitors and all concerned in this trade.

Schenectady Exhibitors' Problem

Teachers' Committee Complains of Character of Pictures to Mayor—Fear Local Censorship—Report Ordinance Violated

Schenectady, N. Y., March 31.

Federal censorship of motion pictures will receive an enthusiastic welcome in this city, if the recent action of the Journal Club, backed by Mayor J. Teller Schoolcraft, is an indication of popular feeling on this subject. This club, composed of principals and teachers of the city schools, admitting the immense influence for good the pictures wield, is determined to stamp out all the tendencies to evil they may reveal.

The club about two months ago, appointed a committee to investigate the motion picture theatres of Schenectady and report their findings to the mayor. These findings were recently submitted. The committee's chief complaint was that too many children under sixteen and unaccompanied, were admitted to the theatre in violation of the law. They pointed out that a number of the houses were "badly lighted and poorly ventilated."

"Motion pictures," said the report, "may be used to great advantage, both for educational purposes and for amusement, if proper pictures are shown."

A large number of the pictures seen during our investigation were valueless, vulgar, immoral or un-moral, representing such scenes as silly love affairs, incidents making light of crime, highly sensational scenes, infidelity and social impurity."

The information that the sixteen-year ordinance was not strictly observed at many of the motion picture theatres has aroused Mayor Schoolcraft to a determination to see that this statute is rigidly enforced. The temper of the various societies interested in social welfare in Schenectady, it would not be surprising if a movement to establish a local censorship, by police or otherwise, were started. Committees representing the Y. M. C. A., the Humane Society, the Ministerial Association and the Welfare Department of the General Elkhart Company have already conferred with the Journal Club board, but without announcing the results of the conference.

1. C. Smith, of the Crescent Theatre, and president of the Moving Picture Association of the district, declares that the flood of sex plays that have poured into the city during the last half year has brought matters to this crisis. There is every disposition on the part of the exhibitors to meet the authorities half way and do all in their power to eliminate the objectionable play.

Eastman-Goodwin Suit Settled

Kodak Company Reaches Understanding with Rector's Widow and Twenty-Seven Years of Film Patent Litigation Are Ended

The litigation between the Eastman Kodak Company and the Goodwin Film and Camera Company has at last come to an end by an ex parte settlement. Just what the figures are has not been made public, but both sides declare their satisfaction.

This controversy marks the ending of one of the longest and hardest fought battles in patent law history. The patent was applied for by the Rev. Nathaniel Goodwin in 1887 but was not granted until 1898. The infringement action was commenced in 1902, but no decision was reached until last September.

Though the Eastman interests appealed the case, the primary decision was upheld. By this the Eastman Company was placed under a temporary injunction.

Mr. Goodwin's widow and daughter still live in Newark, N. J., in a small cottage. When asked about the compromise they said, "The settlement is positively satisfactory to us," and refused to discuss the matter further.

FILM MEN RESCUE INJURED

H. T. Peebles, the Dallas manager of Warner's Features, in company with Messrs. Bishop of the Dallas Seating Company, McCormack of the Mutual Company, Kennedy of the Big Four, and two exhibitors, while riding in an automobile, on March 26, came upon the wreck of another automobile. Investigating further, they discovered six people pinned underneath, three of whom were bound to be dead. The remainder of the party were rushed to the hospital.

The Dallas papers were in one accord in their praise of the work of rescue.

FAMOUS PLAYERS' HEAD RETURNS

After a month's absence from town, during which he visited the Los Angeles studios to confer with Edwin S. Porter on some big plans contemplated for his company, Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players, returned last Sunday to New York.

Among other subjects considered at this conference were the order of releases of the stage successes controlled by Charles Frohman and Henry W. Savage, Inc., secured by the Famous Players' recent alliance with those managers, the forthcoming trip to Europe with James K. Hackett for a production of "Monsieur Beaucaire" in the exact locality of the story, the erection and construction of the new studio in a studio City exclusively for the production of the Charles Frohman plays, and many other important matters.

Mr. Zukor was accompanied on this western trip by Marcus Loew, Aaron Joffe and Joseph Schenck, with whom he covered the Sullivan-Conside circuit of theaters, including thirty-seven houses from Chicago to Los Angeles, which the Loew Company has just secured by a purchase involving nearly $5,000,000. As a big stockholder in the Loew theatrical enterprises, this transaction incidentally commanded some of Mr. Zukor's attention on this recent trip.

"SAMSON" AND KING BAGGOTT SCORE

If the size of the crowd at the Republic Theatre, New York, on Monday night may be taken as a criterion, King Baggott and his "The Baited Trap" company are due to have a very successful run. From eight o'clock on the crowds surged around Times Square in a vain attempt to get into the most crowded theatre. The house was filled to the doors; even the newspaper men could not get in.

Flashlights were taken from every available position that a camera could be tilted in, fire-escapes being especially utilized. Mr. Baggott was slated to appear at nine o'clock, but the house did not know this. "Samson," the other attraction, was shown twice, but the popularity of King was such that none moved, sitting through the picture again. Even Mr. Baggott's short speech was not sufficient.

As an innovation, this "stunt" was must successful. Ten actors appeared in the production and all acted their parts well. Two hundred feet of film was first photographed and acted just as in a studio. Then "Samson" was shown and after that the film, which had meanwhile been developed, was exhibited, met with instant success.
Why Exchanges Lose Business

BY E. J. HUDSON

Indifference Is Often the Answer—Co-operation with the Exhibitor Is the Remedy—It Requires Diplomacy but It Can Be Done—Here's How One Western Exchange Manager Saved an Account

THAT the interest of the exhibitor and the exchange are, to an important degree, identical, and that it is to their mutual advantage to co-operate instead of maintaining a lamb-and-wolf attitude toward each other, is becoming more and more thoroughly realized. It is also being more generally admitted that the exchange should define itself as the friend and ally of the exhibitor, and make his prosperity its own.

From the point of view of one exchange man—a successful manager in a Middle Western city—the exchange that does not do this, will lose business because of its indifference or mercenary selfishness. As his own experience proves, many a customer who is on the point of giving up the service of a particular exchange through dissatisfaction, can be made a firm friend, an enthusiastic patron, by prompt and judicious action on the part of the exchange man.

Here is this manager's story in his own words:

"I received the following letter in my mail some time ago:"

"Dear Sir: You told me two weeks ago that your service was as good as any other, and better than some. You know that I was just opening my house, and that if I didn't give the people what they wanted I would lose my investment. Well, the stuff you have selected is rotten. The people won't come to the theatre. They laughed at everything, particularly the dramas. So this is to let you know that I will not accept any more films from you, nor will I pay this week's rental."

"The signature was that of a man who had walked into my office two weeks before, and told me that he wanted to take our film. He said he had just finished building a theatre in a town about one hundred miles from our office. I went over the situation with him as carefully as I could, but he had never had previous experience, and wasn't sure just what he wanted to do. I argued the wisdom of taking five-day, fifteen-day, twenty-five-day and one commercial, but the price was too high. He said he could not afford it. So it was at last decided that he would run twenty-day, one thirty-day, one sixty-day, and two commercials. The rental was $35 a week.

"After reading the letter I decided to make a trip out there. I don't like to lose a customer. Experience has shown me that nine-tenths of the fault-finding among exhibitors is not due to the exchange alone. I walked into his theatre shortly after 7 o'clock that night."

"I don't want to see you,' he shouted. 'Your stuff has ruined me. Look! Only ten people in here. My matinee was less than $2. Your service is rotten. Get out of here.'"

"If you walked into the business office of one of your patrons some morning and asked him why he didn't like last night's show, and he got mad and there, you out without answering what would you think? I asked."

"What has that got to do with me?" he retorted.

"Just this. I have come out here to try and help you. If you don't want to give me service from me any more, all right. But give me a chance to help you."

"I took more argument to pacify him, but finally we went up into the booth. I already had spotted trouble. The operator was a quiet, clean-cut chap, who apparently knew his business."

"This machine is second hand, isn't it?" I asked.

"Yes, it is,' the proprietor answered. 'A supply man in Chicago told me it had been used but a week. It looks all right. And besides, the price was low, so why should I pay for a new one?"

"There was hardly a screw in the head that was tight. The side shake, particularly when the operator was turning the crank, was almost as bad as bushes in a wind storm. Well, I argued with the proprietor and the operator attested to the correctness of my assertions. Afterwards I learned that the young fellow had just about decided to quit from discouragement. Good projection was his hobby."

"We went down to the front of the house. The entrance, built like a dome, was unlitghted. The only illumination it received was from the two incandescent lights in the box office, and an arc projecting out over the sidewalk."

"I WATCHED the people who were passing by the theatre. They were well-dressed, and of refined appearance. Every few moments an automobile would pass. I walked out and inspected the neighborhood for three blocks on either side of the theatre. It was decidedly aristocratic in a mild way."

"Plenty of people were on the streets for the night was warm. Finally, I returned to the theatre. The house, inside, was beautifully decorated, and excelled in appointment many theatres of much larger seating capacity. This accommodated six hundred and twelve persons. It was less than one-third full when I walked in. It was then a little after 8 o'clock. I had fully determined to go over every inch of the situation, and give the exhibitor some plain truths."

"You've got one of the finest neighborhood locations I ever saw,' I told him. 'People out here have got money, and they are willing to spend it. Your theatre is fitted out inside to conform with their taste. But that is as far as you have gone. You are charging only five cents admission, which, in itself, is, to them, an objectionable feature. People will pay ten, fifteen and twenty-five cents. The trouble does not rest entirely with the service. You should have better film, and you've got to have it to succeed. But you've got to do lots of other things."

"To make a long story short, I remained there until early the next day, after spending half the night in argument. But when I left it was with his promise, and the operator's endorsement, to get a new machine; to book a better service, at an increase of almost one hundred per cent in rental; to divide his house and charge ten and fifteen cents."

"FOR three weeks I had to write to that fellow every day to help him keep up courage. But gradually the people began to note the change in the quality of the film, the improvements in projection, the new and attractive lobby decorations and lighting, and then business began to increase. To-day he is one of my best customers, and strongest boosters."

"I have heard exchange managers argue that exhibitors will not stand for any interference with their affairs. That is true, principally because the method of approach and interference is not clear to them, nor is the purpose behind it. An exhibitor naturally believes that he knows more about his business than any one else—and he is right.

"But every exchange manager has it within his power to be of untold assistance to his accounts. The minute anything goes wrong, the exhibitor as a rule will blame the exchange. We do make lots of mistakes, it is true, but who doesn’t in any branch of the film business? One thing to our credit is that we are not making as many as in the past.

"I have had numerous instances of the kind described above. They vary in detail, of course, but I am convinced that an outsider will often pick a business flaw quicker than the man whom it bothers. Some of my customers cater to peculiar classes of people, who want certain kinds of film. One man will need lots of Western material; another will need society stories to hold his patronage; some have patrons who prefer feature films; others cannot use anything longer than a two-reel, and very few of these.

"We have one road representative, who, in addition to soliciting new business, visits all of the exhibitors to whom we supply service to study their theatres for ways and means by which we can help to improve their patronage.

"We have received so much encouragement through the working out of this service problem, that we intend shortly to put another man out whose only duties will be to visit our accounts, help them in their advertising, in meeting competition with suggestions for unique business-pulling schemes, and in combating strenuous local censorship.

"There was one instance that netted us three new accounts in a city of more than one hundred thousand population. The council took a sudden notion to enforce police censorship of all films. This was a year ago, when the quality was not up to its present standard. We sent a representative to the town, and he employed one of the most able attorneys there to represent us. This lawyer went before the council and made a splendid address. His work was backed up by a local advertising campaign, to which we contributed fifty per cent of the cost. The other half was paid by the more progressive of the local exhibitors.

"We ran a coupon in the ad, asking for a straw vote on the censorship. The results were overwhelmingly in our favor. The results we obtained through publicity in the reading pages of the newspapers, as well as in the advertisements, and among the exhibitors brought three new high-rental customers to our service, and so firmly established us that we could have taken on three more, if we had been able to supply them with what they wanted.

"We will stop at nothing to help one of our accounts, or one from another exchange for that matter, but we have found that diplomacy is needed. The average exhibitor resents intrusion into his affairs, and particularly from an exchange, because he suspects that it is a ruse to increase the rental, or otherwise change his service.

"I T is only by the indirect method of approach that we have been able to accomplish our object—the establishment of a personal service bureau. Instead of direct statement, we often resort to slight deceptions, such as writing a letter to an exhibitor who believes in the exchange. SHOW "BREWSTER'S MILLIONS" TUESDAY

New Lasky Five-Reel Production, with Edward Abeles Leading the Cast, Will Have Private Presentation at Carnegie Lyceum

BREWSTER'S MILLIONS," the new five-reel feature of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Company, will be seen for the first time at a private showing in Carnegie Lyceum, production within the five-reel limit would have to be abandoned. Exciting situations and sensational incidents began to pile up at such an alarming rate that the alternative of extending it to six reels was seriously entertained. But the directors finally found their way out of the difficulty, and the result promises to be five reels closely crowded with rapid and exciting action.

The photodrama, unlike the play, goes back of the time of the stage drama, and begins with Brewster's babyhood and boyhood. Without further ado, the play then plunges the spectator right into the laughable experiences attendant upon Brewster's attempts to spend $3,000 a day for a year.

Censorship News from Everywhere

THE censorship "lid" is on in Pittsburgh, Pa., Charles S. Ford, director of the Department of Public Safety, has appointed four policewomen whose special duty will be to censor all films that are to be exhibited in the city. Special provision is made for such a board in the year's budget. Mayor Joseph G. Armstrong announced in his statement recently on the progress of the administration, that the policy will be "censoring, even to the point of overcautiousness."

"The first work of the policewomen," said the mayor, "will be to visit, in company with secret service men, all of the picture show-houses in the city, and bring to the attention of the management what are the ideas of censorship as to the manner in which they should conduct these places of amusement."

"My own idea of the matter," went on Mayor Armstrong, "is that no picture which depicts crime should be permitted to be spread upon the canvas. There is a vast amount of good in the world, and these places, which I regard as 'children's theaters,' should be made places of education and pure amusement."

Censorship for Capital

A censorship board with power to review all plays and motion pictures that are destined for exhibition in the national capital is being demanded by various organizations in Washington, D. C.

It is the purpose of those at the head of the movement to induce, if possible, the commissioners to appoint a competent board of censorship, which board is to be charged with the duty of censorship all plays are motion picture films intended for presentation before Washington audiences. The plan contemplates the elimination from the stage and the screen of all portrayals, either dramatic or in films, of caricatures or burlesque, so-called "types," of any race or people, Jews or otherwise, and to bar from local theatres all plays or pictures containing lines or other features derogatory to religion or religious observances.

About three years ago the appointment of a board of dramatic censors in the District of Columbia was sought, but the commissioners at that time, acting on the opinion of the then corporation counsel, held they had not the power or authority to appoint such a board. The National Anti-Defamation League, through its Washington branch, has asked the cooperation of other similar organizations in the effort.

The league, whose local officers include Simon Wolf, president, and Rabbi Abram Simon, secretary, has enlisted the aid of the Young Men's Christian Association and the Washington Truth Society in the effort to bring about the appointment of such a board. Committees representing the league and the Washington Truth Society have been named to wait on the commissioners of the District of Columbia, and the appointment of a similar committee by the Y. M. C. A. is expected.

Houston Wants Paid Censors

Houston, Texas, is now threatened with a paid motion picture censor. The present advisory board of censors have found the problem of looking after all the pictures in the city and keeping a watch on all the theatres too big for them. There are twenty motion picture theatres in the city, and Mr. Stude, the chairman, has estimated that to visit them all and see the programs would require ten hours work a day. D. S. Gage and J. J. Settegast are his assistants on the board.

He suggests the appointment of a police official to act as censor, with power to call for their advice whenever he deemed it necessary. Complaints that come in to them from time to time regarding pictures at the various theatres have induced the present censors to "call for help."

A Dangerous Censorship Law

The exhibitors of the Argentine Republic, as well as buyers and importers of films in the South American state, are threatened with a law now under consideration by the Buenos Ayres authorities that carries with it imprisonment, the destruction of films, a fine and the closing of their places of business, if violated.

All pictures that are immoral, subsersive of patriotism, or public order, or that represent crimes or acts of cruelty are forbidden. Importers, exchange men, or exhibitors who show them are subject to a fine of from $100 to $500, the destruction of the offending picture, and a possible imprisonment of from 15 to 30 days.

The worst feature of the totally unjust bill, however, is that it offers one-half of the fines collected in each case to the theatre employee or person in the audience who gives the government information of such a violation.

This puts a premium on graft and blackmail. That it emanates from "The Legion of Honor," a society for the protection of public morality, is a disgrace to the society. It is to be hoped the Argentine legislators will promptly reject it, as it should be rejected.

Gadsden, Ala., Wants Censors

The censorship fever has spread to the little town of Gadsden, Ala. After much effort, the society women of the community have persuaded the town council to consider a petition for the establishment of a board of censors, who shall have authority over the motion pictures shown in the town, and the vaudeville as well. The town council, for some reason, is reluctant to act on the petition, and Gadsden is still pining for a censorship board.

Spanish Exhibitors Up in Arms

Film censorship in Spain, and particularly in the province of Catalonia, of which Barcelona is the capital, has become so strong that exhibitors and manufacturers are preparing to take energetic measures to resist it. Acting, apparently, on the request of the Society for the Protection of Children and the clergy, Andrade, the governor of the province, says "El Mundo Cinematografico," issued a formal warning to the manufacturers and exhibitors against making or showing films treating divorce, marital infidelity, theft, murder, ridicule of authority, and such themes, in any way, even when the aim and end of the picture was a moral one.

The governor's manner was so impious that the film men became convinced that their interests were in grave danger. They have already issued a statement reminding the government that the motion picture industry is an important one and materially adds to the revenues of the state, and declaring that they propose to defend their rights.

Hamburg Exhibitors' Petition

The Exhibitors' Association of Hamburg, Germany, have addressed a petition to the senate asking that the municipal censorship of films at Hamburg be made more lenient, or that the decisions of the General Censor at Berlin be extended to cover their city.

Oppose Indiana Board

The Socialist party organization in Indiana has come out strongly against the proposal to establish a state censorship of motion pictures. The ball was started rolling by the Indianapolis branch, following which branches throughout the state began holding meetings of protest. The platform adopted in Indianapolis protest against the censorship on the ground that it would tend to keep out films which go to expose the present industrial evils, and that the board, instead of merely ruling out films that are objectionable from a moral standpoint, would go a step further and place the ban on pictures either of a political or religious nature which are not sympathetic to the personal opinion of the censors.

British Censors vs. Chicago

The British Board of Censors would never do for Chicago. They're a trifle too lenient. Ninety-three per cent of the films they examined during the year 1913 they passed. 7,488 photoplays were shown them; of this number they admitted 6,961. Not without some eliminations, to be sure. These varied from six feet to 100 feet for each cut. Only twenty-two films were forbidden in their entirety.

And yet they say old Mrs. Grundy is a daughter of John Bull!

PICTURES TO AID CHARITY

The Thirty-ninth Street Theatre, New York, will be utilized on April 5 by the Brooklyn Federation of Jewish Charities, in an attempt to educate the people through motion pictures, to what the society is doing. The pictures were shown at a recent banquet of the federation and met with instant approval.

"How the Jews Care for Their Poor," made by the Universal Company, and given to the federation, will be the most prominent film. This picture shows plainly the work done by this organization. It has been requested by other societies throughout the country.

LUBIN OFF FOR EUROPE

Siegmund Lubin, president of the Lubin Manufacturing Company, sailed for Europe on Tuesday for a stay of at least six weeks. His daughter accompanied him.

Most of this time will be spent in Paris, where Mr. Lubin is interested in real estate. It is also reported that he is completing a deal for a number of large photoplays.

VOTES FOR BUSHMAN

Francis Xavier Bushman, leading man for the Essanay Company, and one of the contestants in the "Ladies' World" popularity contest, is making great efforts to win. An attractive folder with his face and autograph, and the reasons for his wishing to be the typical American film hero, has been printed and is receiving attention. If he does not win it will not be for lack of trying.

$50,000 Fire Sweeps Edison Studio

But All Productions Were Saved—Company Accepts Courtesy of the Biograph Studio—Heroic Work at Bedford Park Blaze

For the second time within ten days a motion picture plant was the scene of a spectacular blaze. On March 28, the studio of the Edison Company at Bedford Park, the Bronx, New York, was attacked by a fire that wrecked a great portion of the interior of the concrete building and did damage that is estimated at $50,000.

By the heroic work of the company's employees, everything of value in the film-assembling and store rooms, together with a quantity of books, papers and scenarios, was saved. At the height of the fire, the immense glass roof of the studio crashed in, but this was fortunate rather than otherwise, for had not the flames found this outlet, they would have eaten their way from end to end of the structure.

The work of reconstruction will begin at once, and within a month the company hopes to have restored the building to its former state.

Through the courtesy of the Biograph Company, their Fourteenth street studio is at the disposal of the Edison directors. Besides this, two of the stages at the Bedford Park studio were saved, and ordinary interiors can be taken on these after some of the surrounding wreckage has been cleared away. The fire will in no way interrupt the transaction of the company's business.

Daniel Clifford, the night watchman, discovered the blaze soon after its outbreak near the big switchboard over the main stage. He turned in an alarm, and then fought the fire single-handed with extinguishers, with the flames singing his face and hair, until he was nearly suffocated.

When the firemen arrived the studio was filled with thick black smoke and the heat was beginning to break the glass roofing over the stages. The firemen smashed great quantities of glass to let out the smoke, which made it impossible to get within fighting distance of the flames.

The Edison players and other employees who live in the immediate neighborhood of the studio, aroused by the arrival of the fire apparatus, hastily dressed and rushed to the smoke-filled building. Under the direction of Stage Manager Collins, they removed many valuable articles. Collins himself succeeded in rescuing every camera from the building. They were taken to Mrs. Jack Reade's home. Mr. and Mrs. William Behr, who have direct control of the studio, were among the first on the scene and their house became a veritable thesaurus of rescued valuables.

Charles Seay and George Lessey, also near neighbors, aroused MacDermott, Wilson and Phillips, who live close by, and they all joined the force at work at removing valuables.

B. S. Dawley, in charge of the film-assembling-room and the film storerooms, directed the work of removing positives and negatives to a place of safety. Mary Fuller, Miriam Nesbitt and Miss Milford arrived soon afterward. With Miss Bannon, Mr. Plimpton's secretary, who was bearing an armful of scenarios and valuable papers to safety, they turned their attention to helping in the removal of important papers.

The fight against the flames seemed for a while to be a losing one until a second alarm was turned in. While the players were at work in the front of the building, the firemen and stage hands were battling against the dense smoke in the rear. Dan Hyam, one of the stage hands, was overcome by smoke, and Mark Durling, despite the rain of falling glass and choking smoke, went into the building and dragged him to safety.

The fire occurred at a particularly unfortunate time, because of Manager Plimpton's contemplated trip to Europe. He and Mrs. Plimpton were to have sailed on the "Olympic" at ten o'clock on the morning of the fire. When notified by telephone, he was on the point of leaving his home for the pier, but drove at top speed to the studio, together with the other officials of the company, who had made a dash from Orange immediately upon receipt of news of the fire. Their European trip has been indefinitely postponed.

TAKE EXPOSITION VIEWS

The Knickerbocker Film Company has been invited to take charge of the motion picture display at the National Efficiency Exposition and Conference to be held at the Grand Central Palace, New York, April 4-11. Industrial films will be shown and pictures of the floor of the convention will be taken in a booth fully equipped with lighting facilities.

ADE'S WORKS TO BE FILMED

The Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, through George K. Spoor, have contracted with George Ade for the exclusive rights to his writings. "Napoleon and the Bumps" will be the first to be released, on May 13, followed by one each week. Each picture will contain a moral, though not in slang.
A NEW film manufacturing company has filed its certificate of incorporation with the secretary of state at Albany, N. Y., and will be known as the Smallwood Film Corporation. It is incorporated for $100,000. The new company will take over the business of the United States Film Company, of which Arthur N. Smallwood was general manager.

It will specialize in the making and distribution of industrial and educational subjects, a line of endeavor in which the United States Film Company was a pioneer. A sky-light studio and a well-equipped factory are now under way. The company will, in addition to making industrial and educational subjects, produce features, but only upon special order from State rights sellers.

Every facility will be offered, so that all that the State rights men need do is to furnish his scenario and producing expenses. The company will not release features of its own make, but will rest content with making industrial and dramatic subjects to order.

The original United States Film Company, with which Mr. Smallwood has been identified since its inception, was organized early in 1908 at Cincinnati, Ohio, and was a member of the old Motion Picture Alliance. Mr. Smallwood will be treasurer and general manager of the new corporation.

California School Plan

The California State Board of Education has approved of a plan to install motion picture projection machines in the schools of California and make the screen a medium of instruction. Lawrence E. Chenoweth, a member of the board from Bakersfield, Cal., is the author of the plan.

The expense of the outfits will in all probability be borne by the individual districts. The subjects for use will be selected by the state board and distributed to the schools.

As soon as the plan has been worked out in all its details, arrangements will be made for the installation of machines, so that next fall will undoubtedly see every school in California equipped with facilities for teaching through motion pictures.

Pictures Supplant Textbooks

Motion pictures will be substituted at once for some of the textbooks now in use in the Fannin School, at Houston, Texas. The introduction of films into the schools of the city has met with the approval of the school board, and orders have been given for the immediate wiring of Fannin School for a projection machine.

Films Fight White Plague

The war against tuberculosis is being carried on in Brooklyn, N. Y., in a spirited fashion with the aid of motion pictures. Four theatres in the “City of Churches”—Loew’s Royal, the Oxford, the Hanover and the Arena—are now showing reels, in connection with the Committee for the Prevention of Tuberculosis of the Brooklyn Bureau of Charities.

These are “The Price of Human Lives,” “Hope,” “A Curable Disease” and the “Awakening of John Bond.” The committee is making arrangements to introduct these into several other Brooklyn theatres, until the lessons of the reels have been taught to every motion picture patron in the borough. To fight fake cures is one object of the campaign.

Children’s Matinees in Omaha

“Children’s Matinees” are now a feature of the Omaha, Neb. motion picture houses. The new feature was agreed upon by a committee of exhibitors, S. H. Goldberg, G. S. Weaver, A. R. Pramer and O. S. Finch, and the Social Service Board of the city.

At these matinees pictures that are of especial interest to the boy and girl will dominate the program. They will not necessarily be educational or solely instructive, but entertaining as well. The producing firms of the country have landed the plan, and it seems probable that many other cities will follow Omaha’s lead in the institution of “Children’s Matinees.”

Filming an Operation

Six hundred and thirty-five feet of film was recently taken by the Sterling Camera and Film Company in a sanatorium in New York City showing an operation for appendicitis. The camera was placed at a distance of eight feet and caught the seven doctors and nurses at work, although the actual incision is concealed. The main idea of the operation was to show a number of skeptical doctors that a camera in such a place will in no way interfere with the operation. The time consumed was eighteen minutes.

More Dancing Pictures

A picture called “The Five Modern Dances,” has been made by the American Photo Corporation and consists of two reels showing the correct and incorrect ways of dancing the new steps. They are taken under the auspices of the Castles, Professor Ain and Quentin Tod.

These pictures are to be shown at clubs, hotels and dancing schools, but will not be released on the open market. The tangos, castle walk, one-step, half and half, and maxixe are all demonstrated.

Approves Children’s Theatres

The idea of using motion pictures as textbooks for teaching children has found a warm advocate in Louis J. Breitinger, chairman of the newly appointed Pennsylvania State Censors.

The Social Workers’ Club of the Quaker City is ardently agitating the erection of children’s motion picture theatres. Mr. Breitinger heartily approves and is inclined to doubt their financial success.

He urged that arrangements be made with the large industrial plants of the country to have educational films made of their buildings and processes for the instruction of children. This could be done very easily, he thought, if the manufacturers could be convinced that the proposition would be a paying one.

Plan Big Children’s Theatre

New York and Chicago are soon to have motion picture theatres exclusively for children, if reports now in circulation are true.

The proposition now on foot in Chicago contemplates the erection of a theatre that will hold 4,400 spectators, at a cost of $52,000. The admission will be limited to children under sixteen.

No details are obtainable of the children’s theatre that is being urged for New York City, but it is said that one of the well-known theatrical managers is seriously contemplating the construction of such a theatre in the near future.

Japan’s Schools Use Films

The motion picture and projection machine are now recognized accessories of education in all the schools of Japan. They are being used with especial success in the lower grades.

Circulating Film Library Ready

The new Bureau of Visual Instruction, University Extension Division, Madison, Wis., created for the purpose of distributing films to the schools and other educational bodies in the state, has just issued a list of films now available to their subscribers.

The list includes pictures of lumbering operations, cotton growing, concrete making, historic pageants, plant growth,
THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

"The Littlest Rebel" to Be Filmed

Civil War Success Will Be First Offering of the Photoplays Production Company—Tichenor at Helm of New Firm

With the announcement that "The Littlest Rebel," in which Dustin and William Farnum starred two years ago, is to be filmed by the Photoplays Production Company of 220 West Forty-second street, New York City, that company may be said to have fairly opened its career.

The number of the men associated with the company and the coming production are well known throughout the filmdom. Frank A. Tichenor is the general manager and treasurer. Edgar Lewis, the producer, directed the Reliance pictures for Mutual Movies for some time. Philip Rosen, the chief camera-man, has seen service under the Edison, Mutual and Universal banners, and is one of the best-known camera-men in the country.

More than one of the dramas of Edward Peplow's "The Littlest Rebel" will be produced for the screen by the Photoplays Production Company.

In the first, a Civil War drama, E. K. Lincoln, who played the lead in the Vitagraph feature, "A Million Bid," and has played numerous other parts in Vitagraph features, will, in all probability have the role created by Dustin Farnum. A prominent motion picture actress has been engaged for the feminine lead in the Photoplays productions. Her name will be announced later.

William J. Sorelle, the first leading man the Edison Company had and a screen favorite, will play opposite Lincoln. Wherever possible the historic locale of the scenes in "The Littlest Rebel" will be used in the screen production. Officers who served in the war will collaborate with the producers.

The rights to the costumes and properties of the original production have been acquired from A. H. Woods, the theatrical manager. Mr. Peplow, the author of the play, will assist the production as consulting director.

Attention to detail, dramatic strength and spectacular battle scenes are promised characteristics of the photoplay by the producers.

Filming Gas Production

One of the most interesting series of commercial pictures produced during the year 1913 was a three-thousand-foot subject entitled "Building a Twenty-inch Gas Main." This film was contracted for by the East Ohio Gas Company and produced by the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company.

The scenes were taken in the mountainous regions of West Virginia, and show the drilling of a gas well, surveying for the pipe line, panoramic views of the hills and mountains necessary to be crossed with their pipe line, which is to supply gas for the principal cities of Eastern Ohio, the making of the couplings, the hauling of the pipe by narrow-gage railroad up the mountains and by six-horse teams, digging trenches, and the final laying of the pipe.

At present the pictures are being shown to the public by a lecturer, who gives an interesting talk on the advantages of natural gas as compared to coal and wood. The pictures are for public service companies and are not for sale, and the result secured by the East Ohio Gas Company has been so gratifying that six other natural gas companies in the Middle West have purchased copies of this film for use in their communities.

Warning to Exhibitors

The Famous Players Film Company has sent out notice that C. A. Beach is booking the Famous Players production, "The Prisoner of Zenda," throughout New Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania George M. Krupa, Hippodrome Theatre, Lancaster, Pa., controls the rights to this production in Pennsylvania, and the Famous Players Exchange, 1331 Vine street, Philadelphia, controls the rights for New Jersey. These concerns are the only ones authorized to book this production in this territory.

Exhibitors who book this print of "The Prisoner of Zenda" from C. A. Beach will be held equally responsible with him in such legal action as may be taken by the Famous Players Film Company.

"Sterling" Will Be Brand Name

"Sterling" is the brand name adopted by the Sterling Motion Picture Company after perusing some three thousand letters. The reward of $25, which was promised by the Universal Company, was awarded to Mrs. Frieda Decker, of Brooklyn, who was the first to suggest the winning title. Ninety per cent of the letters received also suggested the name "Sterling," but Mrs. Decker's was the first.

Fred J. Balshofer, president of the company, which will star Ford Sterling, writes that he wishes he might give each of the "Sterlingites" $25, but that that would be impossible.
FOREWORD

The increase in the number of pages of The Motion Picture News has made it possible for the management to revitalize the Construction Department, which was temporarily sacrificed because of the unusual demand for column space by other departments and by advertisers.

It is regretted that this was necessary, for there was every evidence of interest upon the part of exhibitors, manufacturers and builders alike in the spreading of knowledge relative to the proper housing of the motion picture, and it is hoped that the temporary absence of these articles has but more greatly whetted the appetite for such food.

Exhibitors are urged to feel that this is their department and that they shall be at all times at liberty to consult the editor about their difficulties and needs, present or prospective. Where inquiries are of a personal nature they will be treated confidentially and answered directly by the editor, but where of general interest, they will be answered through the columns of The Motion Picture News for the benefit of all readers.

There will appear a series of articles by the editor, which we trust will be valuable on the one hand to those that might contemplate building new structures, and on the other to those already provided for and who must battle against possible new competition by improving their old quarters.

A COMPLETE list of these articles has not yet been formulated. The reader may however, gain a comprehensive idea of their general scope by the following: The selection of a proper site; the selection of the architect and contractors; the factors determining the size and type of the theatre; the design of the auditorium, its decorations, seating, acoustics and optics and fire and panic preventative; the stage and its equipment and its relation to the motion picture production; the operator's booth, its size, equipment, ventilation, safety of the operators and provisions therein to safeguard against cause of panic; the illumination and electrical equipment of the theatre; the heating and ventilating of the small theatre; the picture screen, from its first crude stages to its modern development; and the remodeling of old structures for the housing of the motion picture and the betterment of existing picture houses.

These articles will be written so that the layman may derive every possible benefit from them. They will not be burdened with scientific facts, but with business and practicable ideas resulting from experience and careful study of the details entering into the successful houses.

There will also appear articles illustrating theatre aberrations, that the exhibitors may not follow in the same path, and others showing model show houses in general of the smaller size, trusting that illustrating the difference will cause the desire for better things.

Exhibitors are always alert to study what is being done about them. They will watch very closely the next-door competitor, they will seek personal knowledge of the doings of places for a few miles around, let them as a rule have not the time to travel to gain such knowledge.

We shall bring such information to your doors through the columns of this journal. Various cities will be written up, selected distant from one another. The peculiar conditions surrounding each will be studied and fully described and illustrated.

The closest co-operation between the Construction Editor and the exhibitor will inevitably be helpful to both.

Construction Notes

California

A $60,000 motion picture theatre is to be built in Pasadena, on East Colorado street near Euclid avenue. Frank Dale is at the head of the enterprise. The structure will be of reinforced concrete with an ornamental front of pressed brick. Contracts will be let within a few days.

Florida

Another large motion picture house—the third of its size—is to be erected in Jacksonville, at the southwest corner of Main and Monroe streets, directly opposite the Duval. The promoters of the new theatre are not prepared to disclose their identity as yet, and will give no details of the new enterprise. It is said, however, the theatre will be about 105 feet square. The other two theatres in course of construction are Montgomery's on Adams street and Clark's on Forsyth.

Massachusetts

P. D. Murphy and P. O'Shea are building a one-story frame motion picture theatre, 90 by 40 feet, on Milberry street, Worcester. E. P. Fitzgerald is the architect.

Maplewood, near Fall River, is to have a new motion picture theatre on Peckham street, near Stafford road. Work on the interior will begin shortly. The outer shell of the building is up.

Middleboro, Mass., has only one motion picture house at the present time, but petitions are before the town council asking for permits for the erection of two more theatres. Dr. F. L. Rounds is seeking to enter the field as an exhibitor with a theatre in Thatcher's Row, while Edward and Gordon Shaw are anxious to open one in one of the buildings on the business street.

The Grafton, Mass., municipal authorities have granted a motion picture license to Louis Paley, of that town, to conduct a motion picture theatre in North Grafton. Mr. Paley will erect a three-story block on Main street, North Grafton, in which there will be provision for a motion picture theatre, 40x70 feet.

New York City and Brooklyn

Plans for a one-story brick nickelodeon on the west side of Melrose avenue, south of 149th street, the Bronx, have been filed by the Yorktown Realty Company, of which Milton M. Silverman is president. Gross & Klemberger are the architects. The theatre will cost, it is estimated, $15,000. The same company are to open an open-air theatre, 57x100, on the same site, to cost $5,000. Plans have been filed by the same architects.

To New York City's hundreds of motion picture theatres must now be added The Pictorium, recently opened on East 150th street, the Bronx, between Vyse and Daly avenues, in the heart of the Tremont district. The Pictorium is a first-run motion picture theatre, of concrete construction, and a seating capacity of 600. An open-air annex, where pictures will be shown by the management during the summer months, seats 1,000. Samuel H. Harris is the manager.

A distinctive feature of this new uptown playhouse is a Wurlitzer Hope-Jones Unit Orchestra, which assures the excellent quality of music that is being demanded more strongly every day by a critical public. The interior wall decorations are in plaster relief. The ceilings are of metal. Leather upholstered opera chairs are provided for the patrons' comfort. Two projection machines are employed and, to make them absolutely stationary, they are sunk into a bed of concrete.

A three-story motion picture theatre, with offices on the upper floors, will be erected at Second avenue and Ninth street, for Philip and B. Menschel, of 142 Fourth avenue. The building will cost $5,000. L. A. Sheinart, of 194 Bowery, the architect, filed plans on March 27.

The same architects, Messrs. Altman, have been awarded the contract for the Picture Theatre, at 30x130, at No. 3154 Locust street, Philadelphia, which will be erected on the southwest corner of Ninth and Locust streets, for John and Wilfred Koch. They are expected to be erected in the near future.

Alterations will be made on the motion picture theatre at the southeast corner of Bridge and Concord streets, Brooklyn, according to plans filed by Koch & Wagner, architects, of 26 Court street, for Wilfred Mulvaney, the owner.

Plans for alterations that will cost about $5,000 have been filed, in connection with the one-story brick theatre on the east side of Brook avenue, in the north of the St. Paul's place. Herman Lederer, 1,341 Southern boulevard, is the architect.

New York State

George Cohen, of Newburgh, will open a motion picture theatre next door to his opera house on Broadway, within two weeks. An attractive entrance on the Broadway side of the theatre is being built and will be finished within a few days.

North Carolina

The Amuse-U, Charlotte, owned and operated by Frank Harris, is closed while undergoing substantial alterations. The building will be lengthened to increase the seating capacity, and a new front is being built. The improvements will cost about $3,000.

South Carolina

Florence, S. C., is to have another motion picture theatre—the fifth that the little Southern town will be able to boast. The newcomer will be known as "The Imp," and will be opened in the Williamson building in East Evans street, Florence, next door to the Hotel Florence, and across from the Central Hotel.

Ohio

A $25,000 fire-proof theatre building will be erected on Market street, Steubenville, Ohio, by the Athenian Amusement Company. Contracts have just been awarded for the construction of the theatre.

Pennsylvania

A one-story brick and terra-cotta motion picture theatre will be built at the corner of Marshall and Market streets, Philadelphia. Builders' estimates are practically all in. Hoffman Company are the architects.

Contracts for the picture theatre at Kensington and Lehgh avenues, Philadelphia, have been awarded to H. P. Schneider, York road and Erie avenue. John Knoe, 3154 North Broad avenue, will operate the theatre. Herman Miller is the architect.

The new three-story club building of the Elks, at Mahanoy City, will also house a motion picture theatre. Edward Z. Scholl, of Reading, is the architect. Estimates are being invited.

Revised plans for a new motion picture theatre on Ardmore avenue, Ardmore, have been filed by John C. Norton, the architect of Bryn Mawr.

The motion picture theatre at 4817-4821 North Broad street has been conveyed by Jacob H. Mayer- son to Luciano A. Magazzu for a nominal consideration, subject to a mortgage of $23,566. The theatre is on a lot 60x136.5, and is assessed for $20,000.

Margolin & Bloch are about to erect a motion picture theatre on the east side of Hope street, north of Sixth avenue, Philadelphia, at a cost of $30,000. The theatre will be a one-story brick building, 176 feet 6 inches by 35 feet 6 inches.

A motion picture theatre will stand in the near future at 2640 Kensington avenue, Philadelphia, owned by John Knoell. Herman Miller is the architect and the estimated cost will be $20,000.

A fire-proof steel and terra cotta motion picture theatre that will cost, with the ground, $100,000, is to be built at the northwest corner of Fifty-second and Locust streets, Philadel- phia, Pa. The Felt Amusement Company will operate the theatre. The lot, 90 feet 3 inches by 70 feet, has been recently purchased and the construc- tion of the theatre will begin at once. The house will have a capacity of 800. Stacy, Reeves & Sons will be the builders. It is expected that the theatre will be ready for an opening in September, under the name of "The Locust."

The Star Amusement Company, of Philadelphia, have filed plans for a one-story motion picture theatre to be erected on the west side of Thirty-first street, south of Wharton street. Bids will be opened shortly.

The building will be 42x60 feet, of brick and terra-cotta construction.

A one-story motion picture theatre, to seat 400 persons, is to be erected in North Philadelphia, by Durham Brothers. The dimensions are to be 30x120 feet.

Rhode Island

Ground is being broken for a motion picture theatre in Cranston at the corner of Fairlane and Gin- ter avenues, near the city line of Provi- dence. The promoters are Eugene Simonetti and Carmine Vendituoli, 26 Bond street, Providence.

A large motion picture theatre is now in course of construction on Mathewson street, Providence, R. I. Emery Brothers, of that city, are under- taking the new enterprise. Work on the project was commenced on April 1.

West Virginia

The improvements on the motion picture theatre of C. D. Thompson, at 1135 Market street, Wheeling, will shortly be completed. The enlargement of the house will involve a brick and tile front and a ground floor 16x32.
EDITOR'S NOTE.—It is the desire of "The Motion Picture News" to include under this heading novel advertising ideas, successful schemes in the management, decoration and equipment of the theatre—everything, in fact, done by the exhibitor to stimulate his trade. We invite every exhibitor to write us about any new enterprise he has; also to come to us for advice or information along any line.

Address: Editor, "The Motion Picture News," 220 West Forty-second Street, New York City.

A WELL-BALANCED HOUSE

THAT attention to details which, when combined with a broad general grasp of the essentials in a modern motion picture theatre, makes for success to an exhibitor, is well exemplified in the Duffield Street Theatre, Brooklyn, and its manager, H. B. Arden.

The big features of a well-appointed theatre are there. So are numerous little conveniences whose importance the patron might not recognize, but which he would miss at once were they lacking.

The Duffield Street Theatre is situated on Duffield Street at Fulton, Brooklyn, N. Y., directly across the street from the Hoyt street Subway station. The front of this theatre is composed of tapestry brick with tile trim; an elaborate electric sign at the side lends distinction without being garish.

The lobby is finished in mission effect. The patron procures a ticket from an automatic ticket seller and enters the theatre.

The last row in the orchestra is distant at least sixteen feet from the entrance. The management has sacrificed all this seating space to make it a comfortable lounging place where one may stroll while viewing the pictures.

The house is about 74 feet each way. Its seating capacity is 412. The orchestra is sixteen rows deep that the columns supporting the balcony are so arranged that in no instance are they in line of screen vision. The slant is a decided one, so that a clear view is always possible. There is an excellent orchestra, composed of five pieces with piano and organ, which is placed below the stage well out of the line of vision. They play consistent music, which quite often is classic.

Aisle space has been given careful consideration; there are four on the orchestra floor, all of which are wider than required by law.

There is no cellar and all flooring is of concrete. The house is surrounded by alleys upon which fourteen exits open; there are two more fire doors than are required by law, and a full house can be emptied in one minute without undue crowding.

Consideration of patrons is shown on every side. The retiring rooms are models of cleanliness: the thick, rich carpets yield gratefully to the feet; there is a counter where a desire for souvenirs may be gratified, though candy is not hawked through the audience.

The theatre is owned and operated by the Imperial Manhattan Corporation. The property (including ground) cost over $90,000.

Mr. Arden, who is managing director, while he claims to be a novice in the business, possesses the art of knowing what the public wants, and giving it to them without ostentation. Programs and souvenirs containing the weekly bill are distributed to all patrons.

The "screen" service is of the highest order. "Features" are a feature. The projection booth contains 132 square feet and is built of concrete, steel and masonry. Extreme cleanliness prevails, the machines are thoroughly cleaned every day and the booth carefully scrubbed twice a week. The throw is about 50 feet up the white plaster wall screen tastefully draped; the size of the picture is about 11x14 feet.

The quality of projection is furnished by three Simplex projectors and is in keeping with the high standard of the house.
A LIVE WIRE IN LYNCHBURG

The Majestic Theatre, Lynchburg, Va., will be opened and started on a new career within the next month or six weeks, it is expected, under the management of J. B. Cravier, of Charlotte, N. C. Mr. Cravier's policy will be to give close personal attention to the comfort of his patrons, and he intends to show only the highest class film productions possible.

Extensive improvements on all sides are going on. The seating capacity will be nearly doubled. The front of the house is to be made even more attractive, and the final cost of these operations will probably exceed $5,000.

An additional innovation, which should arouse the interest of music lovers, is the installation of a $2,500 orchestra piano.

Until recently the house was operated and owned by the firm of Bellard & Shelton, but on March 6 it was purchased by the Piedmont Amusement Company, chartered under the laws of North Carolina. The Piedmont Company's capital is $86,000, and it has as its president a Philadelphia manufacturer, Frank H. Fleer.

CHANGE IN MANAGEMENT

The Arris Theatre, in Mansfield, Ohio, has undergone a change of management after five years. William Georgiou has purchased a large motion picture theatre in Lima, Ohio, and he has been succeeded at the Arris by H. W. Thomas.

Mr. Thomas, an exhibitor of ample experience in the silent drama field, assumed the management and part ownership of the Arris fresh from success in Washington, D. C. Mr. Georgiou, at the time of his departure for Lima, sold his interest to Mr. Thomas, who also purchased that held by Mrs. Lersch, C. C. Beck, one of the original company, still retain the theatre.

The continued success of the Arris under the direction of Mr. Thomas, who recognizes the value of quality in pictures for giving satisfaction to the critical audiences of the present day, is assured. His predecessor, Mr. Georgiou, was one of the first to introduce motion pictures to the Mansfieldians, and leaves behind as a legacy to the Arris the good-will of a large coterie of friends, whose allegiance to the Arris is unalterable.

HAS NO COMPETITION

In Union, S. C., a town of small population, there is but one motion picture theatre. The reason for this, apparently, is that the theatre, which is owned and conducted by Mrs. E. C. Storm, with her son as assistant manager, is so well managed as to discourage competition.

PERILS PAULINE Didn't Foresee

There Were Enough of Them to Keep Arthur Roussel Guessing Up to the Last Moment—A New Release Plan

Verily, the way of the producer is hard. If any one of a thousand and one details goes wrong, there is no telling what may happen before the matter can be righted. All this has been said before, but it applies with peculiar force to "The Perils of Pauline," the Eclectic serial feature, which encountered nearly as many perils on its way to becoming a finished product as Pauline will before she reaches the finale of the photoplay.

Trouble began while the interior scenes were being taken in Pathé's big Jersey City studio. Just as everything was working smoothly, along came one of the winter's now historic blizzards, wrecked the glass roof of the building and ruined part of the scenery.

Then the entire company was dispatched to Florida for the outdoor scenes, which required the best of summer weather. When they arrived the first snowstorm Florida had experienced for seventeen years was on hand to welcome them and make them feel at home.

But the snow quickly disappeared, and Arthur Roussel, general agent of the Eclectic, settled back to wait for the negatives to be shipped up from the South. The next he heard of the messenger bringing them north was that he and his train were stalled between New York and Philadelphia.

The time when the first instalment of the story was to be published in the columns of the newspapers in various parts of the country was drawing dangerously near, and the prints must be ready for delivery to catch the first signs of interest in the serial. Mr. Roussel, with four men armed with snow-shovels, set out in an automobile, dug their way to the train and rescued the negatives and their bearer.

Such are a few of the difficulties encountered in getting "The Perils of Pauline" ready for the screen. But the pictures were delivered on time and in keeping his dates Mr. Roussel set a new precedent in releasing methods.

It had been the custom to put out as few films of a picture as possible and work them from house to house as long as they stood the wear and tear. This is what Mr. Roussel did.

He shipped twenty prints to Chicago for the exclusive use of that one branch. He made up thirty for New York City, ten for Atlanta, fifteen for Boston and twenty-five for the Coast.

The sales force was reorganized. New branch exchanges were opened. Wide publicity was used with the result that more than two hundred theatres in Chicago placed orders in three days for privileges to run the first episode. In New York City more than two hundred and fifty theatres were secured in the same time. Chicago wired for five more films. Atlanta, Boston and the Coast joined in. This was four days before the film was due to be released.

So the new policy of distribution succeeded. Exhibitors, who were customers of the Eclectic Film Company will no longer have to wait for weeks to get a chance to show a film. Enough originals will be on hand at the different exchanges to guarantee every man a chance for an early run.

TO REPRESENT EXPOSITION

The following men have been appointed by the Second International Exposition of Motion Picture Art to sell space for the Grand Central Palace in their respective states. William Sweeney 338 South State street, Chicago, Ill.; S. A. Lustig, 701 Columbus Building, Cleveland, Ohio, and Fred Herrington, 23 Knox avenue, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Any contracts made by them will be honored at the New York office. The exposition will take place from June 8 to 13, inclusive.
QUAKERS TO HAVE NEWS WEEKLY

Pictorial Periodical for Philadelphia and Vicinity Will Begin in a Week or Ten Days—$500,000 Theatre Deal by Stanley Company—Exhibitors Will Fight Segregation Bill as Unconstitutional

Philadelphia, April 1.

A "PHILADELPHIA NEWS FILM" will very shortly be one of the features of motion picture theatre programs in this city and elsewhere. The first number may be looked for within a week or ten days, according to present promises of the producers, the H. B. B. Motion Picture Company.

The scope of the "Philadelphia News Film" will be similar to that of the New York Weekly, and the Washington, Baltimore & Annapolis Weekly, both of which have met with gratifying success in their respective cities and throughout the country, the former being particularly popular in distant localities.

Philadelphia news will form the bulk of the pictures, but events in the neighboring towns will be chron-icled and Atlantic City will have a generous representation during the season when that resort is a social and recreation center.

The News film will be issued in connection with the Philadelphia "Public Ledger." The "Ledger" will publish each week in its supplement a digest of the pictorial news to be found in the new weekly, and still pictures of the principal events treated.

A $500,000 deal in motion picture theatres, recently consummated, has shifted four of the largest houses in Philadelphia into the hands of the Stanley Company, of which Jules Mastbaum is president. The four theatres were purchased from the Springer interests, and the purchase gives the Stanley Company fourteen theatres in the Quaker City, two of which are new buildings, to be opened to the public within a month or six weeks.

The four houses just purchased are the Plaza, Broad and Ritner, seating 1,500; the Park, Thirty-third street and Ridge avenue, seating 1,500; the Imperial, Sixteenth and Market, seating 1,500; and the Century, at Sixth and Erie avenue, seating 1,500.

The theatres already under the direction of the Stanley Company are the Market Street Theatre, 212 Market; Auditorium, 219 North Eighth; Casino, 923 Market; Palace, 1214 Market Victoria, 915 Market; Savoy, 1211 Market; Princess, 1018 Market.

The Stanley Theatre, at Sixteenth and Market streets, and the Globe, at Juniper and Market, are the houses whose opening will take place late this month or early next month. Besides these, the company controls the Stanley and North Star theatres in New York City, several in Reading, Pa., and two in Atlantic City.

Julian M. Solomon, Jr., the manager of the Susquehanna Theatre since its opening last November, has become affiliated with the World Film Corporation, to take charge of its road bookings. Joel A. Levy is the new manager of the Philadelphia branch.

SUNDAY openings of motion picture theatres is a lost cause in Reading, Pa., for the present, at least. Benjamin H. Zerr, state treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and president of Reading Local No. 3, together with Julius G. Hansen, appeared before Mayor Ira W. Stratton and the council, with an offer to give a series of Sunday motion picture entertainments for the benefit of the hospitals.

The mayor and the council were disposed to lend a favorable ear to the proposition, until the exhibitors reminded them that it would be necessary to charge a regular admission rate to meet expenses and provide a substantial offering for the hospital. "We could not meet expenses by merely taking up a collection," was Mr. Zerr's admonition.

The council, even then, might have wavered in the direction of the exhibitors, but the mayor was adamant. Although the proposition was in a worthy cause, he admitted, he could not countenance the opening of the theatres on Sunday. The exhibitors, seeing that there was no hope of success, withdrew and the matter was dropped.

If Mayor Blankenburg, of Philadelphia, attempts to enforce the ordinance that has been proposed to segregate the sexes in the motion picture theatres, and provide separate sections for unescorted women, he will find himself opposed by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

It was announced at a recent meeting that an attorney had been consulted in regard to such an ordinance and had assured the exhibitors that, in his opinion, such a law would be unconstitutional.

It will be opposed on these grounds in the courts if the ordinance is passed by the City Council.

THEATRE TAX READY

An ordinance fixing the tax on motion picture theatres in Omaha, Nebraska, at from $75 to $150 a year and at ten cents per seat annually, was recommended for passage by the council in committee of the whole.

OUR CORRESPONDENTS' FORUM

Blind Film Criticism

The following letter, written in answer to an editorial in the Philadelphia “Press,” has been sent to The Motion Picture News, with the request that it be given publicity. To acquaint our readers with both sides of the controversy, the original editorial is here reprinted, following the letter which it called forth:

Editor, Philadelphia “Press,”

Sir:

I have read your paper for eighteen years, but when I saw your editorial in to-day’s issue headed, “Clean Moving Pictures,” I was astounded. You are, as a rule, so well-informed and correct in your survey of men and things, however diverse, that it was hard to believe you could have been so misled as to print such an article.

I had read what Warden McKenty was reported to have said, but did not consider it worthy of notice. A penitentiary warden is generally a man of little education, leading a narrow life within prison walls, full of prejudice, cynical—a low type.

But when a paper like the “Press” comes out with a statement that “There is no disputing the fact that reel after reel of films, depicting the most reprehensible forms of crime and villainy, are daily exhibited to audiences, including a large percentage of young and impressionable boys and girls,” a protest is demanded and justified.

I am willing to wager that the author of your editorial has not attended two moving picture theatres in the last six months. I challenge him to name one single reel released by the General Film Company during that period that his description above could be applied to. On the contrary, whatever effect the pictures have, outside of entertainment and amusement is distinctly educational and moral.

Among our regular daily patrons, we have judges, college professors, and ministers of the gospel. Furthermore, over two-thirds of our attendants are ladies. Could this be true if our films were objectionable or immoral?

I enclose our program for the past few weeks, and would ask the writer of the editorial to point out one picture in the list whose exhibition would warrant him in his statements.

Respectfully yours,

CHAS. F. O'DOT,
Treasurer, Third Street Theatre,
Easton, Pa.

The editorial in the “Press” was as follows:

In declaring that moving pictures are an evil influence leading to crime, Warden McKenty voices no new opinion on this much-discussed subject; but his views should command respectfull attention because his long experience with criminals at the various institutions with which he has been connected has doubtless made him a keen judge of the causes that lead to crime.

There is no disputing the fact that reel after reel of moving picture films depicting the most reprehensible forms of crime and villainy are daily exhibited to audiences that include a large percentage of young and impressionable boys and girls. Hence it is safe to permit young people to view such spectacles is a question that the authorities of the penitentiary are later undertake to answer.

It is a question that the newly-created Board of Moving Picture Censors cannot afford to overlook when the warden of the Eastern Penitentiary publicly declares that moving pictures are more reprehensible than any other cause for filling the prisons.

In New York the Court of Criminals recently prohibited the exhibition of pictures depicting a certain form of crime and the prohibition was generally acknowledged as upon unqualified public approval. But it is doubtful whether if this class of pictures is any more dangerous to the realistic display of burglary and highway robbery that are nightly flashed upon many screens in every part of the city and state.

Blunders to Be Avoided

The Editor
The Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

From the point of view of those who patronize the moving picture industry, I would like to ask if there is any real need for the contradictory “breaks” or errors frequently appearing in these plays?

For instance, one representing a party of overland pioneers, in 1845-50, have a fight with the Indians along their route. It was evidently “staged” at expense, and most of it was very good; but the pioneers were armed with Winchester repeating rifles and magazine pistols.

Another, a high-class French “detective” story, where both sides turned on finely drawn features, the victim of an attack, where some chemical was forced to his nose, to render him unconscious, laid all night and until found by the maid in the morning, his head resting on nothing and the man straight. Also in this play one of these attacks was made on a live, keen-witted woman, directly in line of the mirror before which she was sitting. Again, in this same play, a taxicab was used twice, the second time before it could possibly have finished the first “fare.”

In another picture, where an Indian legend was being played out, the presentation was certainly beautiful, only to be made ridiculous at the very last by a useless bit of stage trap-door play.

In another instance, where a party of men returning from a club late at night find an abandoned baby, it would have been quite impossible for them to see or hear so small an infant at the point from which they hurried toward the area where the child was hidden, tightly rolled up in a blanket. In this play, too, they used the same automobile twice before the first service could have been performed.

I could give a long list of smaller ones, such as a United States naval officer wearing an infantry sword on duty, but the above are samples enough to show what I refer.

When so much money, and time, and trouble are expended on some features of these plays, why do they allow such “breaks” to get in and stay there?

I have noticed, with much interest, that where American Indians are in the plays as actors, they seldom fail to act out the very last touch on realism. They, unlettered as they are, grasp the spirit of silent acting as few whites seem able to do.

It seems to me there is need, right now, for a few keen-eyed critics whose work would be to purge these plays (as they are being acted) of these contradictions.

This is offered in a spirit of making so gigantic an influence as the motion picture a true work of art.

Respectfully,
ROSS WILLIAMS.
Los Angeles, Calif.

PROGRESSIVE STARTS WORK

Offices have been opened by the Progressive Motion Picture Corporation in the “Times” Building in New York City. Fred L. Bennage is general manager. Studios have been established on City Island, New York, and in Los Angeles, California.

Harry Cary, formerly a Biograph leading man, is working on the first release entitled “The Master Cracksman” at the City Island studio.

The second release will be a comedy named “Busy Issy,” with George Sidney leading. “St. Elmo” will be the third picture.

Branches are being established in Philadelphia and Boston, as well as Ohio and California.
C. B. Price, who recently resigned from the General Film Company as manager of their Los Angeles branch, is now special representative for the World Film Corporation for the Pacific coast, in charge of their branches at Seattle, Portland, Los Angeles, Salt Lake and San Francisco, and making his headquarters at 104 Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco.

While with the General Film Company, Mr. Price has covered the country from coast to coast, doing special office and outside work in their branches at St. John, Montreal, Albany, Bangor, Boston, New York, Wilkesbarre, Pittsburgh, Chicago, Minneapolis, Phoenix, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

The Beacon Feature Film Company have moved into their new offices at 110 West Forty third street, where they will be found on the third floor. An excellent projection-room is one of the features of the attractive suite of offices in which the company is now housed.

Burglars singled out the Chicago home of Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Manufacturing Company, on the evening of Thursday, March 19, and ransacked the house from roof to cellar. The Hutchisons are in California at present, where Mr. Hutchinson recently repaired to look after business interests, and the extent of the family’s loss cannot be determined until their return. Detectives are working on the case and endeavoring to round up the housebreakers.

Ben P. Schulberg, publicity manager of the Famous Players, has joined “The Happy Father’s Club.” Master Schulberg became a member of the household late on the night of March 27, and is already delighting his proud parents by emulating his father’s fearlessness in meeting strangers. The belief that he will make the elder Schulberg look to his laurels as an advertising manager when he reaches years of discretion is strong in many quarters.

Pearl White, who develops into an aviatrix during her adventures as Pauline in the the Eclectic feature, “The Perils of Pauline,” very nearly sent the production up into the air as well as her aeroplane by stepping on some broken glass in the studio while the last few scenes were being taken.

Concerns reigned among the directors until Miss White solved the situation by announcing that she would go ahead, regardless of the injury. She played the rest of the scenes with two silver tubes in the injured foot.

Arrangements for the serialization in the Chicago “Tribune” and other newspapers of the new Thanhouser serial thriller, “The Million Dollar Mystery” will be perfected on April 10, at a conference between C. J. Hite, president of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, Harold MacGrath, the novelist, who is to write the story, and J. Medill Patterson, of the Chicago “Tribune.” Mr. MacGrath is on his way from Italy to attend the conference.

Lloyd Lonergran is at work on the scenario, from which the novelist will write the serial that is to be published in connection with the picture. Mar-gerite Snow, Flo La Badie, James Cruze and Sidney Bracy have the principal roles.

George Baker, the Vitagraph director, has just returned from a two or three weeks’ absence necessitated by the illness and subsequent death of his father in Nebraska. During his absence Mr. Baker’s place was filled by Lee Beggs.

St. Louis is to have a new motion picture theatre on or very soon after April 15. It will be located at 4118-20 Shaw avenue, with a seating capacity of one thousand, and promises to be up to date in every respect.

Bottinelli and Ferreris, well-known exhibitors in St. Louis, will be its owners and operators. Two Simplex machines will be installed, and a $630 light reducer, among other efficient equipment.

“Two-reel dramas suited to Florence Lawrence” is now the Universal appeal. Scenarios from writers who are familiar with Miss Lawrence’s style will be welcomed at the scenario department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, 1600 Broadway, New York. Two-reel and three-reel plays suitable to Leah Baird are also in demand. “These,” says the scenario editor, “should be strongly dramatic stories of modern life or society stories with a new twist.” The emphasis, be it noted, is on one and two reel melodramas just now.

Sydney Ayres succeeds Lorimer Johnson, who has resigned, as director of the “Flying A” Company at the Santa Barbara studios of the American Manufacturing Company. His place as leading man will be filled by Billy Garwood, who will play opposite Vivian Rich.

Dick Broderick, in charge of the Detroit office of Warner’s Features, Inc., is making friends fast among the exhibitors of that city and vicinity. Mr. Broderick, though a graduate of the vaudeville field, is finding it difficult to make himself at home in the film world.

The Chariot Film Company have opened offices at 110 West Forty third street, New York, and are preparing to launch their first release, “The God of Vengeance.” The scenario was written by President Yokel, of the Charlot Company, and produced in Northern Germany and East Africa by a German company.

"Our Mutual Girl's" latest adventure, and one that followers of the series will soon witness, was taking possession of the battleship "Arkansas" in the name of the Mutual Film Corporation.

"The Redemption of David Corson," in which William Farnum will make his debut as a Famous Players' star, is being produced under the direction of Francis Powers.

Mr. Powers, though only recently become a member of the Famous Players' organization, has already to his credit the productions, "Clothes" and "The Day of Days," in which Cyril Scott appeared.

H. M. Warner, of Warner's Features, Inc., is away on a business trip that will take him to the Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Detroit offices of the company before his return to New York.

The Eclair Film Company have taken temporary quarters for their manufacturing department at Bayonne, N. J., where all developing, printing, drying negatives and mechanical work will be done under the direction of their own managers until the completion of their new factory building at Fort Lee, N. J., on the site of the structure burned down on March 19. Ground was broken and work begun on the new building on Monday, March 22. The newest machinery will be installed there and the new factory will be in all possible respects an improvement over the old. The production and delivery of Eclair films will go on meanwhile without any delay or interruption.

It is no longer Jennie Goetz, but Benedict Goetz. The young, hustling manager of the Crystal Film Company disengaged himself from his business activities on Thursday, March 19, long enough to make Miss Goldie Felstein his bride, and spend a brief honeymoon with her along the boardwalk of Atlantic City. The marriage took place at the bride's home, in the presence of many friends of both the fortunate parties.

A Pathé camera-man recently enjoyed the sensation of being appointed by Huerta to the command of his army in the City of Mexico for the space of a day. Twenty thousand men, horse, foot and artillery, paradied before the camera-man. As a result 3,000 feet of film have been received by the "Weekly."

The Rolands Feature Film Company, of 145 West Forty-fifth street, New York City, one of the youngest firms in the motion picture business, is meeting with success. In the case of their first release, "Trapped in the Great Metropolis," an interesting New York police picture, State rights for much of the choice territory in the country have been sold, and offers for the remaining States are being received daily.

Inspired by this success George K. Rolands, the managing director of the Rolands Feature Film Company, is busily engaged in planning a new production.

The title of this picture might be "Put Yourself in Her Place." But it isn't. Its official moniker is "The Baboon Kiss." Miss Louise Glaum is the heroine of the scene, which transpired during the production of the latest Universal Ike comedy, "Universal Ike Makes a Monkey of Himself." Miss Glaum is supposed (in the play) to be an actress who loves her pet baboon better than anything else. Hence the picture.

The baboon, by the way, answers to the name of Charley. He is the property of the Universal and the particular pet of Isidore Bernstein, manager of the company's Pacific Coast studios. Incidentally, he is a great favorite with the girls.

Irving Cummings is again with Mutual. This time he wears the Thanhouser livery. The New Rochelle company have engaged him for a long term, and he will be seen in a series of important leading roles. When last with the Mutual Mr. Cummings played under the Reliance brand, when Oscar Apfel was director.

After a long stay with Reliance Mr. Cummings rejoined Pathé Frères (he had been with them earlier in his career) and played many of the leads in that company's features. His screen career was prefaced by twelve years on the legitimate stage, where he appeared with William H. Crane, Lillian Russell and other stars. He made his photoplay debut with the Powers M. P. Company.

The Inter-State Film Company, of Philadelphia, have opened a cleansing and re-softening department for their chief office, and their Baltimore, Washington and Wilkes-Barre branches.

Albert Teitel, of the Multicolor Film Improving Company, will have charge of this work. Mr. Lesser, of the Philadelphia Film Exchange, is the first to close a contract with Mr. Teitel.

Grinnell Blake Garrison is a very proud grandfather. Anyone entering the offices of Midgar Features will soon find out that fact. His daughter, Mrs. Walter Vincent Combs, and Walter Vincent Combs, Jr., are doing excellently.
Nicholas Power, now engaged in circling the globe, reported "All’s Well" from Luxor, Egypt, on March 8, by plane. He has not already passed through the Suez, headed for the Far East, he will bid farewell to the Mediterranean countries very soon.

Mr. Bodine, of the Raw Film Company, of 15 East Twenty-sixth street, New York City, has recently returned from a hurried trip to Chicago, where he represented his company at the dealers' convention. Mr. Bodine reports the general condition of business in the Middle West as excellent.

"Escaped from Siberia," the coming release of the Great Players Feature Film Company, is a feature of "grip, punch and thrill," in the words of Mr. Manheimer who, with Mr. Mundenstuk, is producing the picture. Sidney Goldin, late of the Imp Company, is the director, and it is said to be one of his best efforts.

Motion pictures is the topic of the day at the Shubert offices, 233 West Forty-fourth street, New York, and the selection of past stage successes for screening in the near future, with reference to their drawing power both here and abroad, is going forward rapidly.

The Lee Lash studios in Mount Vernon, New York, have been purchased by the All-Star and will soon be remodeled and made into an ideal motion picture studio. The east and south walls will be of solid glass, the officers being on the west. A small office will be kept in New York City, the remainder of the employees going to Mount Vernon. May 15 is set as the day for moving.

Buffalo has a new feature exchange in the C. F. Garbe Feature Photo Film Company, Inc. which has recently opened offices in the Lake Erie city, in the Mutual Life Building. C. F. Garbe is secretary and treasurer of the new concern. New York State rights for several current multiples are being advertised by them.

H. M. Best, formerly with Selig and Essanay, is Thomas H. Ince's latest accession to his Santa Monica, Cal., company, where he is making Broncho, Kay-Bee and Domino pictures for the New York Motion Picture Corporation.

A six-reel production of Richard Henry Savage's novel, "My Official Wife," has just been completed by the Vitagraph Company. This novel of Russian mithril life, was once a dramatic vehicle for Robert Hilliard. Jack Young directed the picture. Clara Kimball Young and Earle Williams play the parts of Helene Marie and Major Sasha Welets, respectively. Dancers of the Czar's ballet appear in the ball-room scenes.

One of the leading parts in "The Banker's Daughter," which the Life Photo Film Corporation is preparing for release in the very near future, is taken by David Wall.

Mr. Wall was formerly with the After Easter Sunday "A Million Bid" and "Goodness Gracious!" will be replaced at the Vitagraph Theatre, New York, by "Lucille of New York," a six-reel production made from the play and novel by Archibald Clavering Gunter. Maurice Costello is featured in the production. "Love, Luck and Gasoline," a three-reel comedy, will be under the direction of "The Banker's Daughter," will complete the new program.

On March 24, a delegation of the New York Picture News Association visited the studios of the Vitagraph Company of America. They were received by Messrs. Blackton and Smith. The tour was given in the interest of pictures and at the same time look into the possibilities of the art as a means of showing the workings of the banking system and its benefits to the general public.

The Vitagraph Company has contracted with Col. Jasper Ewing Brady for a series of six plays to be presented at the Vitagraph theatre under the title of "The Regular Army Man," Col. Brady is an ex-U.S. Army officer. Having personally secured permission from the Secretary of War, whereby the commands of Gen. Tasker H. Bliss, with headquarters in San Antonio and Brig. Gen. Frederick Funston, located in Galveston, will be utilized in the making of these pictures, Col. Brady and a staff of Vitagraph Players will go to Texas.

John Bunty, the Vitagraph motion picture comedian, has received an interesting publication from Moscow, Russia. It is a full page advertisement concerning himself and all interest centers in the herald translations, In the Russian language, his name is Pobson.

Oscar Sage, the Selig producer, returned last week from an interesting trip, which embraced the Bermudas and the Canal Zone of Panama, thoroughly restored to health.

Lois Weber, Phillips Smalley and their troupe of Universal Rex players will leave the studio at Hollywood, Calif., shortly for Laguna beach, along the southern coast of California, where they will remain two weeks and produce two Rex dramas. Miss Weber and "Puck," also in four reels, will be supported by Rupert Julian, Fred Wood, William Hurst and Ella Hall.

Cleo Madson, who was attacked and badly beaten by a kangaroo, is rapidly recovering. Fortunately, there are no disfiguring cuts on her face or shoulders, although her face was terribly swollen and both her eyes blackened. It is an experience she will never forget.

Charlie Murray, who recently made a success with the "Biograph," received a call to go back to New York with his company, but sunny California and the Photoplays Club were too much for him, so he is now making feature films at the Keystone studios.

One ingress is assisting director Wilfred Lucas at the Universal.

Arthur Masee, who is producing pictures on the Coast for the Kennedy Features, has been Constance Crawley and himself are featured in his last completed "The Manace of Saint Bartholomew," in four reels, and is working on "That," also in four reels.

John Stepping, the comedian, is going to the American studios at Santa Barbara, Calif., on April 1st. He was recently with the Universal and before that with the Famous Players and Essanay.

William Garwood started with the American last Monday.

Edward August has a capable company with him which includes Edna Mason, Hal August and Eugene Ormond. Miss Mason has been associated with the Universal for a long time now. Mr. Ormond has acted opposite Blanche Bates in "The Darling of the Gods." Mrs. Finke and others.

Cleo Madson takes a double part in the next photoplay directed by Wilfred Lucas and written by Bess Meredith. It is called "The Hills of Silence," and is Western in character. As a matter of fact, she gets killed in an Indian raid and later appears as the daughter.

Ernest Shields, who sank in a rock which crumbled beneath him and fell twenty-five feet whilst working in the "Lucille" series at San Diego, Cal., lies in the hospital with concussion of the brain. He fell down the rocks and slid into the water. Grace Curam defenses, it is serious ill.

DAVID V. WALL

Famous Players, and while in their companies played in "In the Bishop's Carriage." He was also a member of Cyril Scott's company in the production of "The Day of Days.

Heavy parts are his specialty.

The first public showing of the four-part photoplay delineating the life of "Big Tim" Sullivan took place at Marcus Loew's Broadway Theatre, New York, Wednesday, April 1st. It will be shown at the Delancey Street Theatre, Thursday, Friday, Saturday, and at the Avenue B Theatre next Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday.

Joe Sullivan, almost identical with "Big Tim" in size and general appearance, plays the lead in the photodrama.
A PANORAMIC survey of the censorship situation throughout the world is enough to convince an impartial observer that chaos and conflict are the ruling features. The same results might be obtained with vastly less effort, and the just relief to the exhibitor and the manufacturer would be almost immeasurable. Twenty censorship boards are trying to do what one central commission, clothed with the necessary powers and equipped with the requisite knowledge, could better accomplish.

In other words, the censorship situation needs regulation as much as the motion picture industry is said to need it by its would-be regulators. The hopeful side of the case is that world governments, where they have not already done so, are beginning to consider the regulation of motion pictures as a national matter, and are showing signs of taking it out of the hands of the local and provincial authorities.

The United States and Germany are the two countries where local censorship of films has developed to the greatest proportions. Chicago, Detroit, Kansas City, Boston, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Memphis have specific ordinances on the subject. Voluntary censorship exists in as many other cities of the country, in some cases through the police, in others through self-constituted censors who are members of social welfare bodies. Washington, Schenectady, N. Y., Milwaukee, Pittsburgh, Houston, Texas, are on the verge of adopting censorship legislation. **

GREAT BRITAIN has a film censorship no less renowned than its dramatic censorship, which has provoked the wrath of every living playwright in the island empire, and city, town and village boards too numerous to mention pounce upon all films that come within their jurisdiction.

Canada has emulated the mother country in this matter. Quebec and Winnipeg both have strict laws regarding motion pictures, and the disposition of the authorities in other Canadian municipalities is to maintain a watchful supervision over the films.

France alone, where there is more actual freedom in artistic literary and theatrical affairs than in any other country of the globe, has escaped the elsewhere epidemic demand for censorship. Now and then, in some provincial city, the mayor or head of police will issue a specific order against a picture to curb the Gallic fondness for situations and scenes that, to say the least, are broad. But, in general, the film receives the benefit of the doubt, and there is no reason to suppose that the younger generation of France is suffering from indiscriminate exposure to uncensored motion pictures.

The censorship situation is in a state of transition. And, as before observed, the apparent tendency is toward a centralization of the power in the commission of national jurisdiction. While censorship exists and so long as, in the opinion of the authorities, it should exist, this solution of the problem is the fairest to those whose means and welfare are bound up with the prosperity of the industry.

THE SPOILERS
(Selig Polyscope Company)
REVIEWED BY C. J. VER HALEN

There are so many things to praise in "The Spoilers" that it is difficult to know where to start. This stupendous nine-reel picture is thoroughly American. The real red blood of American action runs through every inch of it. And to use a real American phrase, there is a kick in every foot.

It takes hold of you, grabs your attention with the same kind of whole-hearted grip that one American would extend another, tells you its story, and makes you like it, because it has "some" story to tell. It is not one of those pictures where one treachery is used to offset another, but where real men with clean minds and clean methods use the means with which God endowed them and overcame the schemings of their fellow humans. It is built on a large scale, big in principle and wholesome in theme.

One is likely to feel about this picture as one would feel about some favorite dish. It cannot be served too often. In fact, one does not feel that he has done the work justice by viewing it only once. It becomes an obsession to see it again.

Before many hundred feet of the picture have passed you imagine yourself in the character of Glenister and under your breath you say, "Bully," every time he scores a victory. You step right up to his elbow, help raise him on his associates' shoulders, and add your cheers to the other followers as they parade him through the town before his departure. When he shields his sweetheart from the flying bullets you can hear whistling noises go by your ears and the wind of the bullets on your cheeks.

When good old "Slap Jack," as McNamara steals the mine, says to Glenister: "Step aside, lad. I got the big 'un covered," you know just as well as you know your own name that when "Slap Jack" threw his gun down and walked up the water way, he said "Hells!" as only thoroughly disgusted men can.

That big fight surely makes you sit on the end of your seat as the contestants sway fore and back, on furniture and over it, with no regard for the damage they are doing, breaking chairs, tables and bookcases as though they were junk.

The last scene, with the setting sun throwing its golden rays over the lovers, makes the spectator feel as though he were an eavesdropper, and the moment should be Glenister's and Helen's alone to enjoy.

Just a word of credit for the projection on this special event when it was shown privately to a circle of friends and newspaper men at Orchestra Hall in Chicago. The picture was put on the screen with as much perfection as is possible. That the light was splendid was attested by men present whose business it is to know good projection and good light. The musical selections on the pipe organ were an excellent aid in interpreting the emotions of the photoplay.

William Farnum looms up big in the character of Glenister. There is a personality about him that is appealing. Bessie Eyton as Helen Chester, is splendid in the role. A better actress than Kathlyn Williams to play the part of Cherry Malotte could not have been picked. Detry was played by Frank Clark in a convincing way, and Jack McDonald, as Slap Jack, carried off the lion's share of laughs. Wheeler Oakman, as Broncho Kid, carried his role well. Thomas Santschi, in the part of McNamara, played a good part. N. MacGregor, as Judge Stillman, and W. H. Ryno, as Struve, commanded attention in their respective roles.

To William N. Selig, the manufacturer, Rex Beach, the author, and to Colin Campbell, the producer, hearty praise and congratulations are due for "The Spoilers."

"The Spoilers" will receive its first public presentation at the new Strand Theatre, New York, under the management of S. L. Rothapfel. A full orchestra, headed by John Philip Sousa, will accompany the picture.

ZINGO'S WAR IN THE CLOUDS
(Warner's Features)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

This is the fourth and last of the "Zingo" series, the review of the third part being in the Special Reviews for this week. The picture was made originally in thirteen parts by the Ambrosio Company but is marketed by the Warner's Features in four parts of three reels each.

Zingo is tired of globe-trotting and desires to rest in Paris, but his large crew are unwilling to have him do so. He therefore sets out for Mexico, where he is to work a mine. Arriving, he hears of the former director of the mine, Philip Fogg, who, he also discovers, has been doing things in a very crooked manner. The man obtains the aid of the Indians and attacks Zingo and his wife, capturing them.

He is freed by an Indian girl and becomes general of the Federal army, with whom he attacks Fogg's cohorts. Deep water divers, submarine troopers, chloroform bomb-throwers all form a part of the "army." Fogg's troops are taken.

Vanquished under the sea Fogg takes to the air in a large dirigible, taking Zingo's wife with him. A chase follows in which he is beaten and Zingo and his friends return to their native land.
"DANGERS OF THE VELDT"
(101 Biue)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

The scene of this pathetic drama is laid in South Africa, and except for a few minor details, one would think the film had been made in that distant land instead of in western America. There is not one uninteresting scene in the whole three reels, and aside from a few inconsistencies that are easily overlooked, the action is perfect. The photography is clear.

A good battle scene between natives and English soldiers is produced. The natives might have been imported from Africa especially for the purpose. Wild animals are introduced, too, with sensational results. Two leopards are seen devouring an ox, and a lion is shown tearing at the body of a man. Both these scenes are so realistic that the observer truly shudders at the sight.

The plot may be an old one, but it is enlarged upon to such an extent and so well carried out that it appears quite new. Hans, the foreman of a Boer farm, marries Frieda against his will, but to please her mother. They are given a farm fifty miles across the veldt.

Six years later, Frieda being sick, Gretchen, the girl Hans really loves, comes to keep house for them. Hans and Gretchen act in a disgraceful manner before the eyes of Frieda. She sets out for home with her little boy and a farm hand. At night their oxen are killed by leopards.

Hans, relenting, starts after his wife, leaving Gretchen alone. The house catches fire and when she starts to go out she is met by two leopards. Her fate is left to supposition. Hans is pursued and killed by a lion, while Frieda is rescued from the natives by some English soldiers. She finds the man she loves in their captain.

"OUT OF THE FAR EAST" (Im)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

The very name of this two-reel picture suggests mysticism. The plot is suggestive of that Oriental fantasy that is so common to fiction. It is one of the very few pictures containing "spooky" ghostly scenes which really impress one as being well done. By a clever use of double exposure the director has gained that effect—the power of making the audience believe it is real.

The main plot is not new in any sense of the word, except that it is handled in such an efficient manner. The story has been utilized for both pictures and fiction, not of course in this exact form, but in varying degrees.

Ward, a young man, obtains some rubies which had been stolen from an idol in the Far East. He is tracked and haunted by "watchful eyes" which he sees everywhere. His vengeance is also carefully watched by the Indians.

She is finally captured and hypnotized, and a mark placed on her chest, which is to stay there until she tells where the stone is.

A friend of Ward's steals the stones. Ward is captured and frees himself by shooting the receiver of the telephone and thus calling the police through central. The stone is recovered from the friend by the Indians and restored, whereupon the mark leaves the girl's breast immediately.

"THE PRICE OF TREACHERY"
(World Film Corporation)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

The last half of the title of this picture is "The Lighthouse-keeper's Daughter" and the story is woven around this character.

The one feature that stands out in this picture more prominently than any other is the wonderful photography. There are a large number of water scenes, and these are enriched in splendor by natural beauty of the tints. The plot is good, although slightly shop-worn, but the photography is perfect enough to be a sufficient excuse for exhibiting the film anywhere.

The story is of the usual melodramatic type dealing with the good and wicked brothers, one opposed to the other. There are several unusual twists and situations which change the sub-plots enough to warrant its use.

Henry and Robert are brothers. The former forges a check; the blame for which is assumed by Robert on his being taken ill. The lad is driven from home and becomes a sailor. Henry has become enamored of the lighthouse-keeper's daughter.

A terrible storm breaks out at sea and both the brothers are forced to seek shelter in the lighthouse, but they do not meet. Later the girl, who loves Robert, is insulted by Henry, and Robert hearing of it, yet not knowing who the man is, gives chase to him. He catches up with him just in time to see him sink into the quick sand.

The Great Northern Film Company have made a wonderful release in this five-reel picture, of which they may well be proud.

The British Patent No. 26,892 covers a screen for use in color cinematography, which is provided with more than two colors, in which every alternate color is a shade of red.

Anti-Halation

Silvio Cocamari has recently filed a patent for "Anti-Halation" coatings for films, which corresponds to his patent filed in Belgium on December 3, 1913.

Culpable Ignorance

Did you ever rescue a drowning man, and, instead of receiving thanks, hear the rescued one say, "Why don't you mind your own business?"

Something similar happened to me recently. An inventor to whom I was introduced complimented me greatly on behalf of the News, saying that the paper was steadily becoming more interesting and valuable to its readers.

"But what I cannot understand," said he, "is why you take so much pains in citing the foreign patents. Don't you think we have plenty to do to keep abreast of our own?"

When I essayed to explain, it was with difficulty that I made my acquaintance see the point at first, and I then made up my mind to warn readers of the News against this common error, so that others may avoid it and thus prevent consequences which at best may be discouraging.

There are at least thirty different countries in which an inventor may apply for a patent and still be entitled to claim priority in the United States during eleven months and thirty days thereafter. You may thus actually obtain a United States patent and establish a factory to manufacture the invention and then be forced to close unless you can make arrangements with the foreign inventor for a license. In any case, you will have to pay the price asked for without discussion, and all because another has applied for a patent similar to yours in one of the thirty countries referred to, prior to your application here.

The following extracts of the regulations of the International Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property will do more to convince the reader of the importance of this fact than anything I could write:

"The subjects or citizens of each of the contracting states of the union, in matters concerning patents for inventions, utility models, designs, or industrial models, marks of manufacture or trade and commercial names, indications of origin, repressions of unfair competition, shall have all the advantages which the respective laws accord in the future to natives."

"They will, in consequence, have the same protection as the latter and the same legal recourse against all infringement of their rights, subject to the fulfillment of the formalities and conditions imposed on natives by the home legislation of each state. No obligation of domicile or establishment in the country in which the protection is claimed to be imposed on persons within the jurisdiction of the union."

"There are assimilated to the subjects or citizens of the contracting states, the subjects or citizens of states not forming part of the union, who are domiciled or have effective and serious industrial or commercial establishment in the territory of one of the states of the union.

“A person who has duly made the deposit of an application for a patent of invention of a utility model, of a design or industrial model, of a mark or manufacture or trade, in one of the contracting states, or his legal personal representative shall enjoy for effecting the deposit in the other states, and reserving the rights of third parties, a right of priority during the terms hereinafter stated.

“Consequently a deposit subsequently made in one of the other states of the union before the expiration of these terms will not be able to be invalidated by acts accomplished in the interval, whether notably, by another deposit, by the publication of the invention, of its exploitation, by the placing on sale of examples of the design or model, by the employment of the mark.

“The terms of priority mentioned above shall be twelve months for patents of the invention or utility models, and four months for designs, industrial models and marks of manufacture or trade.”

The following is a list of countries included in the convention: Belgium, Brazil, France, Great Britain, Italy, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal (including Azores and madeira), Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Tunis and United States of America (only since May 30, 1887).

The following countries later joined the above mentioned: Dutch Indies, Surinam and Curacao, Dominican Republic, New Zealand, Denmark, Japan, Germany, Mexico, Cuba, Ceylon, Australian Commonwealth, Trinidad and Tobago, Austria, and Hungary.

When all these important facts are considered the question is not why so much pains are taken to set forth all the foreign patents obtainable, in addition to those of the United States, but why more of them are not given.

FILMS ENTERTAIN MILITIA

A number of interesting pictures were exhibited on Monday night at the Twenty-Second Regiment Armory, N. G. N. Y. A large audience was present.

Pictures showing the comparison between the Russian Cossacks and the United States Cavalry were first shown. These were followed by illustrations of the working of the dynamite squad. The five-reel drama, "The Battle of Gettysburg," followed by two military comedies, were very well received.

Luncheon to Trade-Journal Men a Success—Engagement of William Gillette in "Secret Service" Announced

On March 26, the Life Photo Film Corporation gave a luncheon to the representatives of the various trade and theatrical papers, who give all or part of their attention to the motion picture business. It enabled the representatives present to learn of the fine work which Edward M. Roskam, the president; Leonard Abrahams, vice-president; Bernard Loewenthal, treasurer, and Jesse J. Goldberg, secretary, are doing.

A demonstration was given of how a motion picture should be put on and the care and attention which is being given to productions by the Life Photo Film Corporation were clearly brought out. Two scenes were photographed during the morning from "The Banker's Daughter," which will soon be ready for state rights purchasers, and should go like wild fire.

Mr. Roskam gave a personally conducted tour through their large developing and printing factory, which is one of the most up-to-date in the city. Aside from the actual production of pictures the Life Photo Film Corporation is doing an enormous business in developing and printing for some of the largest film interests in the East.

At the luncheon, the members of the company went into detail as to their plans and aims which, if carried out, should land them in the front rank of producers.

It was announced that William Gillette has signed a contract to act in "Secret Service" for them, which is a foundation for future development which could not be improved. This Southern war story is the greatest of all the plays in which this great actor has ever taken part, and should make a new reputation for him, besides placing the Life Photo Film Corporation in a most enviable and advantageous position.

With William Haddock, late of the Edison and Imp studios, directing, and Frank Kugler, late of the Edison studio, as photographer, "Secret Service" should go over with a bang.

This is only a beginning of the great things which are to come.

EFFICIENCY PRINCIPLES SHOWN BY FILMS

The principle of efficiency, made comprehensible by motion pictures and physical exhibits, will be shown April 4 to 11, when the first Efficiency Exposition and Conference is held in Grand Central Palace, New York City.

There will be an efficient kitchen, in which every inch of space will be used to the best advantage. "Efficiency in production should begin at home," say the promoters. An office and a laundry equally efficient will be on view.

Although the management has pointed out this is not to be a business show, many of the largest corporations in the city will lend their aid to it. Industrial motion pictures will be displayed.

The exposition will be under the auspices of the Efficiency Society, Inc.
Advertising the Picture

By Frank D. Webb

[Editor's Note.—Mr. Webb is the advertising manager of the "Baltimore News," and in that capacity is qualified to speak with authority of advertising methods and their values. He has made a special study of theatrical and motion picture advertising, and his views on that subject, as here given, will be of more than ordinary interest to exhibitors.]

There are unquestionably many ways in which the owners of motion picture theatres can advertise their houses to the general public. Success would be run to by using many ways, no doubt, as there are ways open to business men in other lines, but one of the best of all these ways is systematic and not necessarily large use of local newspaper space,—particularly in newspapers which find this type of advertising interesting to their readers, and which are accordingly willing to give it more or less support.

Here in Baltimore, on "The News," we have felt for four or five years that there ought to be advertising possibilities in the rapidly increasing number of motion picture theatres which, at the present time, are to be found in every section of the town, but until a year ago it seemed impossible to get at this situation in the right way, and to make any headway at all with it.

At that time a member of our staff, who had taken the greatest interest in motion picture places and who had succeeded in developing some small showing of these local houses in our columns, for the most part in very small space, asked me one day if it would not be possible to run a general story in connection with motion pictures, in addition to the small advance notice which was given each prominent house—just as such notices are given to the regular theatres.

The matter was taken up with the editorial department and was favorably, if not enthusiastically, received. Using the fact that at least one general story of this type would run the "Baltimore Sunday," in addition to the notices which had been appearing for some little time already, the member of the "News" staff who had been working this type of advertising, then made a determined canvass among all of the better class houses to see if anything in the way of a representative showing from them could be developed.

It was not easy work, but his efforts met with better response than any of us had any reason to anticipate, and instead of being given one general story, the advertising bulking up to pretty close to a half page, the editorial department decided to allow the other half of the page for the advance notices and several general stories, with the result that the whole page was devoted exclusively to motion picture news, and the advertising which had been developed to go with the one general story.

The effect upon the motion picture houses was almost instantaneous. The effect upon the circulation of the Sunday "News" was equally pronounced.

The motion picture men stuck and the page stuck.

It is a regular feature and has been, since the day of our Sunday paper, and one of the best, we think, that has ever been put into it.

This paper, by the way, is published Sunday afternoon. This motion picture page has undoubtedly been one of the strongest contributing factors to an increase of several thousand circulation over the year before this feature was added to our Sunday issue, and its effect on the motion picture places has been equally emphatic.

From something like sixty-five, the number in Baltimore has increased to over a hundred, and the patronage, which was never particularly niggardly, has nevertheless increased until all the better houses are doing a business pretty much on a par with that done by the big downtown ones during the early days in motion pictures, when they were still such a novelty that everybody in every class was going to them, simply to see what they were like.

The "News" can have four pages devoted to motion pictures and made necessary by the volumes of advertising, at the time of the Motion Picture Convention held here in June, 1915.

One reason the motion picture advertising in Baltimore, even though most of it has been done in very small space, has been so effectual, we feel, has been that the motion picture people have always had something specific and definite to advertise, and they have never injected into their advertising anything of the bargain counter spirit.

It has been straight, clean, creative copy to bring people to definite, specific places, at a definite time, to see definite things, and the titles of those things themselves, of course, are pretty nearly descriptive enough to make people want to see them or decide that they don't want to see them.

Consequently, the motion picture advertising, even though most of it has been very small, has always been good, and the response has been remarkable to it. We have packed five-cent houses twenty blocks out of the center of the city, to see productions which appeal to the people of Baltimore as worth while, while the downtown people feel practically every piece of copy they run, whether the production is especially noteworthy or not.

From seventeen to twenty of the local exhibitors use the columns of the "Sunday News" practically every week and the number lately has had a tendency to increase. What we have done in this direction we believe any paper can do with similar effort and similar support, and any paper which develops this form of business will find it immensely worth while, and the motion picture theatres in any town where any newspaper offers this type of co-operation will find it immensely worth while to support that paper.

Co-operation at this particular point, as in everything else in modern life, is the secret formula for making the good thing which both sides of the co-operation already have immensely big and worth while.

This development has been so important with us that we found it worth our while to attend the New York Motion Picture Convention last summer and have an exhibit not only at the Palace, but four framed exhibits at the Hotel Imperial, the Motion Picture Men's headquarters—this, in spite of the fact that up to that time we had never had, practically speaking, a line of advertising from the manufacturers of films.

At the present time the film situation is looking better, but even until this time the bulk of our support has come from the local exhibitors themselves, and with or without the support of the film producers, it is our belief that this development is worth the while of any live, wide-awake newspaper.

"Drumona" Easily Worked

The "Drumona," a mechanical orchestra which can be used easily by the pianist, thus eliminating the expense of a trap drummer, was invented by Samuel Lapin, who also made the first "Dramagraph" and "Excelsior" machines.

The machine is small and compact, and can be used either with or without the piano. Large claims have been made for it by its manufacturers, who state that it can produce all effects, musical or otherwise.
Archbishop's Ban Puzzles Exhibitors

Winnipeg Theatre Men Can't Understand Charges of Immorality Against Pictures—Point to Severe Censorship

Winnipeg, Manitoba, Mar. 28.

WESTERN Canada is apparently not quite so broadminded as one would expect if one is to judge by the rather startling steps taken by His Grace Archbishop Langevin, who has placed a ban, not only on dancing and theatres, but on moving picture houses in the archdiocese over which he has spiritual charge.

There was recently read at the cathedral in St. Boniface, the cathedral city just across the river from Winnipeg, a letter from His Grace, which was addressed to his clergy, secular and regular, as well as to the laity. In this letter His Grace forbids his clergy and Roman Catholic citizens in his archdiocese to go to theatres and dances, and above all, to moving picture theatres.

The step has been taken because the Archbishop "has the testimony of worthy witnesses, both Catholic and non-Catholic, that the pieces presented at the theatres and in the moving pictures are contrary to morals." His Grace adds: "We hope that the abuses which have occurred in certain parishes of Winnipeg will not be repeated to the scandal of the whole archdiocese."

The very fact that the Archbishop has taken this step on hearsay evidence makes the letter of less value than had such not been the case. Winnipeg to-day is operated under a severe system of motion picture censorship, and one which has long been a thorn in the sides of the theatre managers, and it is safe to assume that the programs in this city of the West are as clean in every respect as in any other city in the world.

The Protestant clergy of Winnipeg have been long keeping an eye on them for this very reason, and the narrowest-minded parent or clergyman could not find ought to look askance at in the houses of this city. What His Grace refers to is a mystery to the managers as well as to the censors. There is a vast amount of capital invested in Winnipeg, and not a little in St. Boniface, in handsome motion picture houses, and such an arbitrary order, which threatens suspension from sacerdotal functions for the member of the clergy who overrides it, must seem little short of preposterous.

Whether it will affect the receipts of the motion picture houses is a questionable point. It may, however, be deemed a very doubtful one. Nevertheless, the fiat has gone forth—a hat which is unprecedented in the history of the west of Canada—and one which must affect the right of every Roman Catholic citizen.

GEO. M. CASE, the popular manager of the Victoria Theatre, which until March 9 was operated as a combination motion picture and vaudeville house, has changed the policy of the theatre to a combination stock musical comedy and picture house. Pictures will play a prominent part in the bill.

This is somewhat of an unusual combination and opens up a new field. It would be interesting to know how many houses are combination stock musical comedy houses and motion picture palaces. Two shows a night are given and one matinee, and the pictures run all day. Two reels follow and precede each musical comedy show and the bill is changed twice each week.

The Mutual program is making steady inroads into the theatres in Winnipeg, and the houses using the Mutual Girl series are speaking highly of them. The novel idea is attracting Winnipeg's femininity by the score.

The Province Theatre has made a stride in the right direction towards the comfort of its patrons in widening the space between the rows of seats. This was done at a sacrifice of quite a large number of rows of seats, but the widened space makes a remarkable improvement. One can now walk in and out with great comfort, and sit with even greater comfort.

It is unusual to see a manager sacrifice money which might be taken in at the door to make his audiences more comfortable, but such has certainly been done at this house. Handsome as are some of the Winnipeg houses, they all suffer from the narrow aisle disease.

There is no more uncomfortable arrangement than narrow spaces between seats. Managers would do well to realize that they not only lose patrons but also lose time in filling and emptying a house where the rows of seats are set so close together as to blister the knees of those who are trying to enjoy an otherwise good show.

INSTAL MODEL PRINTING PLANT

At an outlay of $80,000 the Balboa Amusement Producing Company is rapidly installing a thoroughly complete and up-to-date film printing department in its studios at Long Beach, California, and the new annex will be the largest establishment of its kind west of Chicago. Almost all the film negatives made in California by motion picture firms are shipped to Chicago and New York for the printing of the positive copies, at the companies' big laboratories in those cities. The Balboa Company will hereafter not only stage and produce big feature films, but will also operate its own printing department and thus be able to make its own releases by individually delivering to exchanges throughout the country the finished product, ready for projection on any screen.
Editor's Note.—This department is prepared to answer all questions from exhibitors relating to the use of music in connection with photoplays, and to suggest suitable music for current pictures. Correspondence will be welcomed.

A n exhibitor in one of the larger cities of the West, himself something of a musician, has discovered an admirable way of combining music with pictures, and one that may prove of value to his fellow-theatre-managers.

His plan is particularly successful with multiples and features, but there is no reason why it could not be applied to single-reel plays as well.

Before the picture is shown to his patrons, this exhibitor reviews the play in private, notes carefully the emotional influences predominant in each part, and selects musical compositions that will fitting introductions or preludes to them.

These must necessarily be brief, coinciding in length as nearly as possible with the time required for the change of reels, or with the intermission in vogue at any particular theatre between parts of the film drama.

Naturally, too, the selection of music must depend upon the instrumental resources of the house in question. An exhibitor who has an orchestra, however small, at his disposal, will be able to use music that one who had to depend entirely upon a piano could not.

The exhibitor whose ingenious method is the subject of discussion in this article has, as it happens, an orchestra of eight or ten pieces at his command. Added to this, his own acquaintance with the best music of all times gives him an advantage over his less artistic brother whose knowledge is limited to a score or two of the more popular classics and "old favorites."

Let him describe, in his own words, his experiments and their results.

"The value of music, I find, is in making an audience more receptive of the dramatic and emotional power of a photoplay and more responsive to them," he says.

"Music is sentimentalizing in its effect and so is a powerful auxiliary to the pictures, which appeal directly to the sentiments of the people."

"Now, what I do is simply to try to select music that will awaken the sentiments to which I know, from having seen the film drama in advance, the play is going to appeal. Not only is there an overture for the entire play, but every part is introduced by music that, to me, seems to embody the theme of that part."

"You may think I am only copying the methods of the theatre orchestra and using mere entr'acte music. But it is more than that. What I do is really not done anywhere but in grand opera, where every act is preceded, in the majority of cases, by a special overture of greater or less length, embodying the spirit of that act.

"The operatic conductor has, of course, an immense advantage over me, in that the music was written especially for that opera and that act of the opera. And it is sometimes perplexing to find just the music ready-made, that will convey the message I wish to give."

"Under this policy of mine,—upon which I have, by the way, received many personal congratulations from my regular patrons,—every kind of music has been heard in my theatre in connection with the exhibitions."

"When rag-time is necessary, I use it, and use the most popular 'rags' I can find. And when I encounter a scene or a part in a film drama that is more finely expressed in a work of Chopin, Mendelssohn, Liszt, Grieg, or Wagner, I haven't the slightest hesitation in giving my people that, either.

"While I am introducing my patrons to new music all the time, I don't forget familiar and popular pieces, such as the 'Melody in F,' Schubert's 'Serenade,' 'Poet and Peasant' overture, and the like, as well as the old ballads and sentimental songs of a generation ago."

"How can the exhibitor who is not a musician himself adopt such a plan as I have been discussing?"

"I can answer that by telling you the experience of a friend of mine, who is an exhibitor in a nearby town."

"When I first hit upon the idea, I confided it to my friend, whom we will call Smith. He begged leave to try it in his own house and I agreed, willingly."

Robert Leonard in "The Eye of the Law"
Smith is not a musician, though he has used music from the beginning, faithfully, and with excellent results.

"His is a town of about 13,000 inhabitants. Knowing he could not carry out the details of such a program himself, he set out to find a musician who could, and would do so at a reasonable figure.

"After some inquiry, he unearthed an ambitious young fellow who was organist at one of the local churches on Sunday, and gave music lessons during the week to eke out his income.

"Smith saw him and laid his proposition before him. The young man was enthusiastic over the application of music to pictures in such a way. The only thing that made him hesitate was the question whether he could, as a church organist, properly connect himself with a theatre. Smith quickly overcame his scruples, however, by assuring him that a good many of the members of the organist's church attended his theatre—which was true—and the bargain was struck.

"I happen to know the details of the deal Smith made with him, and the figures were $20 a week. 'Bargain' is the word for it, for an ordinary 'ivory-thumper' would have cost him nearly, if not quite as much as that, while this man put his talent, his familiarity with music and his ability to arrange programs at Smith's disposal at what was really a ridiculously low figure.

"I RAN into Smith one day after his new 'find' had been with him for two or three months.

"How is your musical scheme getting along?" I asked him.

"'Immense!' was his reply. 'Some of my patrons were surprised at first at the amount of music I gave them but they very soon came to understand it, and then to look for it.' "And say! I've got a gem in that kid organist I dug up. Between him and the pictures, we have very few dry houses when there's a pathetic piece on the screen. I've gotten so now that I go into the back of the house during a sad scene and count the sobs I can hear with as much pleasure as I count the coins in the box-office. And, to tell the truth, I get things in my throat and eyes every little while, listening to that fellow. He certainly can play the heart out of your breast."

"I don't worry any more about the music. It's up to him entirely. He can put things across I never thought you could get a motion picture audience to listen to, yes, and get a hand on them, too. You can't imagine what a difference it makes in the pictures. Why, films I'd had the operator run off for me, just to get the drift of them, I scarcely recognized when I watched them to the tune of his music.

"I'm for that sort of thing strong, and so are my people. I wonder why more fellows in the business don't try it?"

BATTLE OF AUSTERLITZ SHOWN

In Kleine's "For Napoleon and France," the battle of Austerlitz has been featured. The action occurs at the commencement of the second reel and continues through eleven hundred feet. It is filled with attacks and sorties in the engagement of several thousand men, in a very realistic and thrilling reproduction of the battle which decided Napoleon's future and temporarily changed the boundaries of modern Europe.

ESSANAY

There's a plant in North Chicago with all others 'twill compete.

The number's 1335 and it's up on Argyle St.

Where they manufacture picture films for use in the Photoplay

The trade-mark is an Indian Head—sub-titled—S and A.

This trade-mark born some time ago from infancy arose,

Till now it holds a foremost place in all the picture shows.

It has advanced and will advance so strongly day by day

That throughout this mighty universe, you'll see an Essanay.

'Tis not alone the subject of the photoplay in kind,

For praise is absolutely due the director's master mind,

He moulds his people in the work as a sculptor moulds his clay,

And therein lies the real success of the famous Essanay.

Of the people of the Eastern Stock one cannot speak in vain,

There's Bushman, Calvert, Bailey, "Doc" Travers and Miss Bayne.

Ruth Stonehouse and Ruth Hennessy and Beery always gay,

Washburn, Stine and Bolder, all at the Essanay.

Miss Edney, too, and Clara Smith, and then we must n't fail

To mention Irene Warfield also Clara Dale.

There's Mason, Thomas Commerford and Charlie Hitchcock, say

It's quite a bunch of artists that are with the Essanay.

—Frank Dayton.

ECLECTIC EXCHANGE NOTES

The New York City branch of the Eclectic Feature Film Exchange, under the management of Julie Bernstein, has moved from temporary quarters in the World's Tower Building, 110 West 40th street, to 115 East Twenty-third street, where the exchange will be permanently located.

Another branch of the Eclectic Feature Film Exchange has been opened at 217 East Fifth street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

S. P. Hetteyberg, an experienced exchange man, will be at the head of the new branch.

PICTURES AID SUFFRAGE

To illustrate the obstacles encountered by the National Suffrage Association motion pictures were utilized in a meeting at the Carnegie Hall, New York, on Monday night. The pictures showed the difficulties of canvassing the small towns and outlying districts in attempts to get votes.

Dr. Anna Shaw presided at the meeting.
"THE BLUE MOUSE"
(De Luxe Attractions)
REVIEWED BY MERRITT CRAWFORD

THIS is a production that fairly sparkles. It is crammed full of intensely ludicrous situations, well conceived, well contrasted and arranged in such natural sequence that the audience thrills with anticipatory pleasures throughout the six reels which it takes to tell the story. Except for the opening scenes, which drag a trifle by comparison with those that follow, but which are quite necessary for the proper development of the plot, the interest is constantly sustained.

Whether "The Blue Mouse" would be as effective without Madge Lessing in the title role is problematical. With her it may be classed with those screen productions—steadily growing more frequent nowadays—which actually surpass in popular appeal the stage success upon which they are based. Miss Lessing's portrayal of the character of dainty—if somewhat naughty—Dolly Frivolouise fascinates quite as much upon the screen as over the footlights.

The story of the play is too well known to need much mention here. Teddy Barker, an employee of the Searchlight Insurance Company, to win a position as branch manager and a dowry for his wife at the same time, lays plans to engage the interest of Mr. Bock, the director of the company. This gentleman, he finds, has a weakness for granting concessions to employees who have pretty wives.

After much reflection Teddy evolves a plan which seems feasible, and arranges with Miss Dolly Frivolouise, otherwise known as "The Blue Mouse," for a stipulated sum, to pose as his wife. Soon afterward she meets the susceptible Mr. Bock, who at once falls a victim to the charms of the pseudo Mrs. Barker.

As can well be seen a number of complications result, in which Bock and Teddy, the wives of both, the "Blue Mouse" and Teddy's father-in-law, Mr. Brummer, all have a part. In the end, of course, everything is straightened out to the satisfaction of all with the possible exception of the "Blue Mouse" herself.

THE COBBS IN CHICAGO

Agnes Egan Cobb, manager of the Leading Players Film Corporation, and C. Lang Cobb, manager of Ramo Feature Films, dropped into Chicago last week boosting their respective brands of features. C. Lang handed out something rather novel in the way of business cards which consists of a small envelope and ticket of the kind you get for $1.50 and $2.00, when you want to see a first-class show. You can get them for nothing from C. Lang, who claims they are good publicity.

"LUCILLE LOVE, THE GIRL OF MYSTERY"
(Gold Seal)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS "de luxe" production of the Universal Company is sure to be a success. From the very outset it scents of excitement and mystery. Two reels are to be produced every week for fifteen weeks. As is always the case in pictures that are "to be continued," the last reel ends at an exciting moment, which is sure to cause the public to return for the next installment.

The photography is clear and the light effects are good throughout. The entertainment in the commander's house is handsomely staged. Elegantly gown women and well-dressed men throw the rooms of Love's mansion and lend life and grace to the picture.

The last scene is the crowning one of this installment. Lucille is in hot pursuit of the spy in a hydro-aeroplane, while air craft is seen skimming over the water and rising in the air. This scene, which must have been very difficult to film, is exceptionally well done.

All the characters act their parts to perfection. The spy is a fine, racy villain, and Lucille gives promise of developing into a most marvelous heroine. The opening chapters of the story run as follows:

A servant in Commander Love's house steals some papers of great importance and gives them to a spy, a former rival of Love's for the hand of the same girl.

LUCILLE AROUSING HER LOVER'S JEALOUSY

Dick, one of Love's naval attaché, who is engaged to his daughter, is accused of the theft and imprisoned.

Lucille overhears the spy communicating with an accomplice on the telephone, and learns that he is to sail that day, taking the papers with him. She keeps the knowledge to herself and hastens to the dock, but the spy has already started for the steamer. Nothing daunted, the young lady enlists the aid of an aviator, and they set out in hot pursuit of the ship in his hydroplane. The excitement that abounds in these pictures from the opening scenes, and the feeling of suspense that the closing moments leave with the spectator, augur well for the stimulating power of the coming chapters of "Lucille Love, the Girl of Mystery." The first part is scheduled for release April 14.
"TRAPPED IN THE GREAT METROPOLIS"
(Rolands Features)
REVIEWED BY LESLEY MASON

Of the making of white-slave photoplays there seems to be no end, and "Trapped in the Great Metropolis" is the latest of them, as the shrewd spectator will surmise from the title. The supposed conduct of the traffic according to the most approved of modern business methods, under the trade-name of "Social Employment Bureau," with stenographers, bookkeepers, and so on, is delineated at some length; in fact, to the exclusion of other white-slave features. But the traffic, as such, is the atmosphere rather than the subject of the production.

In other words, this five-reel feature deals with the wholesale side of the inhuman business, if one may apply cold commercial terms to an industry that is hideous, whether real or imagined. It does not carry one into the region of disorderly houses, or show the victims of the cadets in their sensuous servitude. Save for extracts from the books shown on the screen, certain of the subtitles, and the operations of Teresa, the decay for emigrant girls—and her activities are mild compared with similar scenes in other dramas of this sort—it might be representative of any business carried on in violation of the law. By so much, it is less offensive to the delicate-minded than its predecessors.

After a sufficient revelation of the workings of the white-slave offices to give what follows vividness, everything is centered around the tracking down and capture of "The Man Behind" by a detective and his sweetheart, a woman newspaper reporter. Not a new plot, to be sure, but one that is always capable of interesting treatment. Rose Austin, the reporter, disguises herself as "Madame Dufrene," one from South America—her card reads simply "South America"—to buy white slaves.

She meets the manager and finally wins a tête-à-tête with "The Man Behind," who, of course, proves to be the philanthropic lecturer she had interviewed not long before. While she is waiting for her lover and the police "The Man" escapes, the manager throttles her and makes his desperate way up fire-escapes and over roofs, to be shot finally in a duel with the police. "The Man" drops dead of apoplexy in his own front hall.

There are few, if any, novel situations, or combinations of them; the fragment of the automobile pursuit down Broadway, and the capture of the cadets by the detective racing behind a cop on his motorcycle are among these few. The artistic is frankly subordinated to the sensational. Suspense is frequently lacking in the earlier parts, but after Rose Austin sets out to get "The Man" there is the constant doubt as to what her fate at this stage or that of her adventure will be, and how retribution will overtake the criminals.

Vigor and spirit in the action is not by any means wanting, though the movements of the cadets and the detectives at the steamship wharf (Coney Island Line) could have been more snappily handled with far better results than were obtained. It appeared as though the director were at a loss how to keep the scenes from capturing the runners before the latter had reached their automobile, and commenced their flight. Photography that is generally clear and good acting of a vehement, melodramatic sort complete the tale.

"THE LIFE OF OUR SAVIOUR"
(Pathé Frères)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

NINE thousand feet of perfect colored photography, wonderful settings and impressive acting combine to make this truly one of the most perfect films ever produced. The picture was reviewed at the Manhattan Opera House, New York, where it is being exhibited, for this week only, under the capable management of Robert W. Priest. Mr. Priest has handled a number of large films of this and other kinds, and is a master at staging and arranging such pictures.

Much of the picture was made in Paris, in the Pathé studios. It is handled in a consistently reverent manner by all concerned. The grouping and lighting effects were particularly notable for their fitness.

As an educational feature this picture is unsurpassable. The life of the Christ is followed from His birth to His death; the events are shown in the sequence in which they naturally follow.

The coloring is wonderful. It can hardly seem possible that it is natural, and not hand-colored, because of the exquisite distinctness of the tints. A most remarkable film.

Late Chicago News

American Film Employees’ Ball

The employees of the American Film Manufacturing Company on March 17 held a ball at the Colonial Hall which was attended to the capacity of this auditorium. Many of the people connected with the other manufacturing plants were present, as were also a host of friends of the American's people. The trade papers were represented and also the exchanges.

This was the first ball attempted by the American Film Manufacturing Company employees and proved to be a success beyond their expectations. Novelties were introduced in the way of colored spotlights, and professional fancy dancers entertained the guests at intervals during the evening. Everyone present seemed to enjoy themselves thoroughly and much physical exercise was secured to the tune of "Too Much Mustard." Even genial Dick Nehls, the G. M. of the American, attempted a few of the latest steps. He became rather efficient before the evening was over. A flashlight picture was taken of the gathering.

Fuller Sick in Chicago

Charles Fuller, the man who never stops talking, and who right now is boosting Kennedy Features, ran into Chicago last week to give all of us the "once over." Unfortunately, however, Fuller was taken sick on his second day here. His many Chicago friends sought out his room in the Sherman House, where they planned to console with him. But they found that he is not the kind of fellow that consoles, and he played host in fine fashion with that wonderful repertoire of stories at his command.

Preparing Big Production

Mr. Byrnes, president of the Historical Feature Film Company, states that he is preparing to make a big feature. For this purpose Mr. Angeles will go East during the coming week to secure people for the leading parts. It is said that the cast will include about three hundred and fifty people.
"The Price of Silence." (Kleine-Celio. Two reels. March 31)—There are some very good scenes in this production. The exhilarating sight of a fox hunt is portrayed, and done well from start to finish. The last scene, that of the three Raflles fighting on the top of a high cliff, is a thriller. The final plunge of all three of them going over the precipice is a vivid climax.

Mollie marries Mitchell, a young man who was hurt falling from his horse in a hunt and taken to her father's house. Mitchell pays his former companions to keep the secret that he was once a crook. They come to the house for more money. Their demands are overheard by Mollie and she learns the truth. Mitchell is hurt in a tussle with the men and is attended by Richard. Mollie's former love. Mitchell and his companions go out for a walk to talk things over. On the edge of a cliff they start fighting and all of them fall to their death. Mollie marries the doctor.

"Zingo in Africa." (Warner's Features. Three reels)—The third of the "Zingo" series, the fourth of which is reviewed in another part of this issue. Arriving in Egypt Zingo and his wife rescue two native girls from a band of savages, adopting them as members of their party. While Zingo is out in his famous patented hunting suit the three girls are captured by a band of gorillas and carried to their nest in the tree tops.

Zingo, on his return, follows the gorillas, and remembering his monkey language talks to them and calms them so that they give up the girls. Meeting with several artists who attempt to steal the girls, Zingo is surprised. He is drugged and placed in a coffin and shipped to London as a rare specimen. Chartering an aeroplane, he flies back to Egypt and rescues the girls from the artists, and then with a fond look at the Nile he returns to Europe.

"The Drug Traffic." (Eclair. Two reels. April 5)—An exposure of the traffic in morphine, heroin, opium and the like, placed in the form of a drama which is sure to please.

Curson, a manufacturing chemist, has produced a consumption "cure" in which there is a large amount of morphine. His son marries a young heiress, and together they start a crusade against the sale of morphine by druggists, little dreaming that their father supplies their market with the raw material. The girl becomes addicted to the habit. Curson, Jr., has the druggist who has been selling her the drug arrested, and swears if he can get the man higher up he will kill him. Soon after his wife dies and he learns it is his own father who is responsible for this and many other deaths. A strong finale.

"The Fighting Blood." (Lubin. Two reels. April 1)—Some excellent scenes both on land and water are shown in this drama. The plot is new, or else it has been developed to such an extent that it appears new. There is a thrilling scene in the last reel where two men struggle in the water. They both go under, but the hero finally comes up with the dead body of his opponent. The photography is clear and the action rapid throughout. The observer's interest is not lost once during the entire two reels. Some of the wireless and telegraph messages that appear in the sub-titles are a little too indiscreet to read without straining the eyes, but save for this small defect the film is flawless.

The adopted son of Colonel Poynte is caught drinking on duty, court-martialed and discharged. At the same time Captain Little, commander of a United States revenue cutter, comes to visit the colonel's adopted daughter. The discharged soldier overhears the plans of some smugglers and it is largely through his efforts that they are brought to bay. Captain Little secures a commission for young Poynte in the revenue service. He is reconciled to his father and the story ends happily.

"The Smugglers of Sligo." (Reliance. Two reels. March 28)—Owen Moore and Miriam Cooper play the leading parts. Mr. Moore might have made more of his role. The story is laid on the coast of Ireland. The finale, a moonlight effect, is well photographed. The romantic parts are slightly contradictory.

Danny, a smuggler, and the daughter of an old sea captain are in love. She meets the officer of the King, who is there to find the smugglers. Her father gives up the traffic and Danny is forced to bring in the illicit goods. He is killed by one of the soldiers in attempting to escape. The officer and the girl plight their troth immediately after.

"Captured by Mexicans." (Kalem. Two reels. April 5)—A wonderful idea of the expansive, sandy, Mojave Desert is afforded in the scenes of this delightful drama, and the awfulness of being lost in its wind-blown wastes is brought home with force. The photography is clear from start to finish, nor is it marred by the least bit of bad acting. There are some thrilling battle scenes between the Mexican Federals and rebels.

Don, traveling across the continent with his wife, Cleo, rescues Mexican Pete, who is dying of thirst in the desert. Later Pete betrays his benefactor into the hands of the rebels. In a battle between the rebels and Federals, Don and Pete are captured and sentenced to be shot. Cleo enlists the aid of some prospectors and the American Consul, and secures Don's freedom. Pete, however, meets his just fate.

The specialty of the film is that before the Mexicans preparing to die, and then shifting to that of Cleo riding to him with his pardon, keeps the audience in a continual state of suspense throughout the last half reel.

"The Stirrup Brother." (Eclair. Two reels. April 15.)—After the famous story by O. Henry. As in a number of the other Eclair dramatizations of well-known writers, the atmosphere is excellent. A girl and a boy, despite the feud existing between their families, are sweethearts. "Curley," a typical son of rest, turns up at the camp and is made to work, and treated like a human being for perhaps the first time in his life.

Curtis, the girl's father, makes her promise that she will never see Truesdale again. The boy also takes the same oath. The parting is necessarily a sad one. Truesdale finds a letter which tells that he is not really the son of the old man.

The old family servant tells the story of how his mother had died and the boy was stolen. Someone had left him at the old man's door and he had been adopted in the place of the stolen boy. A little later it is proved that "Curley," the tramp, is really the son. Truesdale is therefore free to marry the girl of his choice.

"The Secret Vault." (Kleine-Cines. Two reels. April 14.)—A story of love and politics is delightfully told in this Kleine-two-reel feature, which is scheduled for release through the General Film Company, April 14. The plot is remarkable not only for its gripping dramatic intensity and superfine character portrayal, but also for its beauty of scene and its crystal-clear photography. It was staged in the romantic city of Seville, Spain, by the Cines Company, of Rome, and is a production well worthy of the makers of "Quo Vadis?" and "Antony and Cleopatra."

The efforts of two political factions to gain possession of documents capable of freeing a state secretary from charges of high treason, and the winning fight waged by the lawyer for the defense, combine with a charming love story to make this a photodrama of power.

"The Ruby Circle." (Rex. Two reels. April 9.)—This reel holds the attention of the audience throughout. The air of inconsequence of the society man and the pall of mystery which accompanies the moves of the Nihilists help make the picture most interesting.

A young society man chances on some information that there will be a meeting of a secret society, and later a ring which is the mark of identification of the order falls into his hands, and he goes to the meeting. Unable to give the password, he is doomed to death as a spy. A girl member of the society calls the police, who raid the place, and her lover is released, just in time. He resigns from his bachelors' club.

"The Geisha." (Kay-Bee. Two reels. April 10.)—A charming drama of the "Cherry Blossom Kingdom." The Japanese gardens are portrayed beautifully, as are all the other scenes, and the photography is clear and brilliant throughout.

Carver, a young midshipman in the United States navy, while in Nagasaki, falls in love with a Japanese girl, Myo. He deserts his ship and marries her. Later an American arrives in Japan with his daughter, whom Carver once loved. The sight of her causes Carver to realize his mistake in marrying outside of his race. He determines to leave Japan, and in order to obtain money, he becomes a spy for a Japanese rebel. He is killed after stealing some important papers, to the great grief of Myo and the American girl.

"Where There's a Will There's a Way." (Imp. April 9.)—Ethel Grandin and Hobart Henley have found in this an excellent vehicle. The plot was presented by the same company a year ago in slightly different form, but was far from perfect. This time the picture is most excellent.

A tramp finds the key to an apartment and sublets it. The owner, returning, finds a girl in possession. They are married and then discover that they are the two parents of the man whose parents had betrothed and that each had fled to avoid marrying the other.

"Repentance." (Thanhouser. Two reels. March 31.)—A very good drama and well acted. Grey, in a rage, kills his partner, Hampton. No one knows who did it. Later Hampton's son proposes to Grey's daughter.

The sight of the son of the man he killed affects Grey to such an extent that he dies, leaving a confession with the doctor. The doctor, however, keeps the news to himself unwilling to spoil the young people's happiness.

A Chain of Theatres

is the ambition of practically every new exhibitor. Many exhibitors, who opened their first theatre several years ago, have achieved that ambition. But they started right. They first studied every detail, big and little, of theatre management.

We have remaining less than a hundred copies of "Picture Theatre Facts," an excellent book for new exhibitors. It is crowded with important information about every department of theatre operation.

We will be glad to present copies of this valuable work to exhibitors who wish to become yearly subscribers to The Motion Picture News.

GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

"The Story of Cupid." (Selig. Mar. 27.)—A mystery story in which Psyche performs the three superhuman tasks in order to win Cupid. After it is shown, the drama tends to fade away. There is an abundance of trick photography which is very good.

"Hearts-Selig News Pictorial No. 13." (Selig. Mar. 25.)—A view of the launching of our battleship, the Oklahoma, is shown. Scenes from the recent trouble in Ulster are of interest, and the submarine practice of San Diego is good. Almost all the rest of the reel is devoted to Munchie's and his wife.

"Bromo Billy's True Love." (Essanay. Mar. 28.)—Not as good as most of Bromo Billy's experiences. Billy neglects his sweetheart because he wants to be married, and Billy goes back to his true love.

"Detective Short." (Lubin. Split reel. Mar. 26.)—The same reel with "Detective Short." Three or four miniature men are shown in a submarine. Their experiences under the water are comical. The figures move jerkily, which adds to the humorous effect.

"Never Again." (Vitagraph. Two reels. Mar. 26.)—The most acted comedy of the week. The fact is that it appears to be disconnected; several of the points don't come to an end, but then they branch off on some new track and they are all of them more melodramatic than the Jardín de Tengo, where he gets into a lot of trouble with a young girl. He learns later that she is his next wife. Later his two would-be sons-in-law get into quite a mess, which is good, and the waiters are divided. Things are straightened out and Rufus and the two young men solemnly vow "Never Again."

"The Cabaret Dancer." (Kalem. Two reels. Apr. 6.)—An old drugstore joke which is all that is known of this one. Mary Joyce and Tom Moore, Don, an artist, has married, and, in preference to the girl of his parents' choice, Liner leaves Tom's home where the scene of the trouble began. The next time that Tom sees her, it is temporarily blinded, his father enters when he realizes how much Liner cares for his son.

"Above the Law." (Lubin. Mar. 25.)—"For the Life of an Artist," another good story. Both Mary Sibley and the description of New York by Bill Hunt, a crook. She escapes with him but she soon finds out his real character. Meg's father hunts down Bill and kills him, only to find that he is the son of a detective who is helping him. The deed, however, is considered "above the law" and he returns home with his daughter.

"The Constancy of Jeanne." (Pathé. Two reels. Mar. 26.)—An interesting drama, in which Jeanne loses a sailor. Henri, who is re- ported to be a truant, is the description of Jeanne for Bernard, a celebrated artist, and thinking Henri is lost forever, yields to the marriage with Henri comes home and Bernard, realizing that Jeanne was more in love with her than with the sailor, reconciles to his loss.

"The Puritan." (Lubin. Mar. 27.)—The pathetic story of a girl who married for money to save her mother. Later she has a proposal from a man she loves, and to top it all, her mother dies.

INTERESTING FILM REVIEWS

"Millions for Defense." (Vitagraph. Mar. 17.)—A good comedy, quite typically good. Second scene of the film is a pretty exciting, "Billie," a girl, has turned down many men—she prefers her job with a young millionaire who is a confirmed bachelor. She does not hesitate and after quite a while she makes him propose. She accepts.

"Wife's New Profession." (Pathé. Mar. 25.)—A fair comedy. On the same reel with "Self-Sacrifice." Wifffles makes a living by going to hotels minus his nebulous garment, and complaining of having been robbed by tears. He is almost caged but produces a pair of trousers and makes a safe escape.

"The Hall-Room Rivals." (Vitagraph. Mar. 25.)—A rather slow comedy. Short thinks that he is as good a detective as his father, but he makes some bad blunders and is expelled from the force.

"The Bottom of the Sea." (Lubin. Split reel. Mar. 25.)—The same reel with "Detective Short." Three or four miniature men are shown in a submarine. Their experiences under the water are comical. The figures move jerkily, which adds to the humorous effect.

"A Princess of the Desert." (Edison. Apr. 1.)—Hubby's idea of a comedy. The story is light and typical of romance. A thorough comedy, delightful opening and closing scenes, enhanced by artistic lighting effects. The touch of the Arab lover, the Queen orders his death.

"Lo, the Poor Indian." (Edison. Apr. 15.)—A thoroughly delightful comedy. Carlton King as the Indian is splendid. The picture is taken in the South. A professor brings an Indian into civilization. His antics at seeing water flow from a tap, and on finding "fire water," make excellent humor.

"A Question of Hats and Gowns." (Edison. Two reels. Apr. 17.)—Vale Ross, Andy Clark, Bliss Milford, Augustus Phillips and Miriam Neely in the leading parts. Having loved him from their schooldays, Miranda decides she will win Bob, though the outlook is hopeless. An away from a local conductor tells her that if her beauty is not sufficient she should try business. This does not help and she begins to worry. A city girl takes her in, charges her $100,000, puts her in a handsomely decorated house and fixes her hair and so on, helps her win her bet.

"Handsome Harry's Wooling." (Melles. Mar. 25.)—On the same reel with "Batty Bill's House Rough-Housed." A fair comedy. Handsome Harry's self-sacrifice is "her" choice. With the aid of snuff, Harry is put to rout and Bob wins the girl.

"Batty Bill's House Rough-Housed." (Melles. March 26.)—On the same reel with "Handsome Harry's Wooling." A great deal of property is wrecked without giving the desired comical effect.

"Chanter Rao, Criminal Expert." (Vitagraph. Mar. 17.)—A drama of mystery and detection. Chanter Rao, an Egyptian, discovers the thief of a diamond ring, through the use of esculips which he gives to the suspected ones. The guilty one loses the use of his tongue and is in this way detected.

"Never Shrink." (Biograph. Mar. 25.)—On the same reel with "Wifffles' New Hotel." A good comedy in which a man buys a suit that is guaranteed not to shrink. He finds to his surprise that his wife assists him in getting his money back.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"For the Family Honor," or "The Heart's Highway." (Eclair. Two reels. April 15.)—An interesting and well-played drama. Jean, the son of a haughty lawyer, is accused of the murder of the daughter of a poor doctor. The county refuses to recognize a verdict of guilt. Finally, however, he is acquitted, but relents when she sees the grief of her son and the sorrow of the girl's father.

"Almost a Bridegroom." (Crystal. Apr. 26.)—With Charles De Forrest and Vivian Prescott. Pa and Ma object to their children marrying. This causes several mix-ups.

"In the Captch of Circumstances." (Joker. Apr. 11.)—A laughable comedy in which two thieves who are pursued leave their loot in a ditch. One laborer finds it and gets rich, while the other is left to the mercy of the law. He is, however, rescued by his sweetheart.

"For Life or Liberty." (Imp. Apr. 26.)—In this drama children perform in a remarkable way. A count will not marry a princess because she is loved by another. He resorts to stratagem, which results in the actor's lodgment in jail. He escapes and, proving his innocence, he has the count taken to jail himself.

"Grandfather's Romance." (Relax. Apr. 19.)—Another of the Eclair's child stories. Several clever light effects. A little girl tells a bigger child whom she has met the story of his grandfather. She shows the "man" in the American Revolution fighting against the British. A clever story.
"The Price." (Euler, Apr. 19.)—This story is well told and the action consistent. By her quick wit, a girl saves a burglar from a revolver and makes him go to the transunion of blood, which saves her father's life. In going away, the only gratification she secures is finding in the pocket of her thief the picture of her. The end seemed incompleteness.

"Man's Best Friend." (Frontier, Apr. 1.)—A stirring drama in which the jealousy of a Western sheriff prompts him to try and strangle his beloved's heart. The love is saved from death by Edythe's father's timely device, and the murderer is the same one who had been held prisoner by the insurmounters. Meanwhile, a body has been found in the house, and the name of the house is supposed to be his. The wifes assumes charge of the house and marries the husband escapes. A happy reunion follows.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

"The Chicken Chasers." (Keystone, April 2.)—A typical Keystone comedy containing a gross assortment of brick-throwing, tumbling, etc. The principal cast contains two varieties of chickens, both made trouble for him.

"After Her Dough." (Komic. March 24.)—A very humorous Klappertop comedy, which "get across." Possessing many jests, a la Hardy and Harveyn, the local police department guard them. Thieves, anarchists and yeggks all take their turn in having the centre of the stage, but Edythe wins out.

"A Backyard Theatre." (Keystone. March 29.)—A child comedy which seems a little drollish at first. Children have a "theatre" in which they give variety acts for the benefit of the kids in the neighborhood who pay one cent admission. Their program contains two varieties of children, both made trouble for him.

"The Town of Nazareth." (American. March 29.)—A film based on a recent novel, and a plot with good action makes it worth while. Walter's, a tailor, and Frank, a poet, are friendly rivals. One day Walter is intended to be married to a spinster. The tailor makes his mark, while the tailor leaves home and goes away. Years later Frank's son, now out of college, becomes successful and marries Walter's daughter. The poet marries the girl he had loved and thought he had lost; she had since become a widow.

"Like Father, Like Son." (American. Two reels. Apr. 6.)—Longley, to meet his gambling debts, robs his bank and is imprisoned for two years. Later, after Longley has been released from prison, he is hurt and picked up by his son. The father keeps his identity a secret. He receives a position as night watchman in his son's bank. The son starts to travel the same line of work, and Longley prevents him.

"The Star Boarder." (Keytone, Apr. 4.)—A novel picture which tells a story of a star boarder with his family there and the girl who is the star's wife. The plot of the film is very successful and the acting is well done.

"Alone with the Devil." (Great Northern, April.)—A melodrama and a well-made picture. Photography excellent. The "heavy" represents a prominent business man who plans to steal the secrets of another through his wife. When one of them has a hypnotic influence, failing in his plan, the villain buys a note for a large sum and then tries to drive the man out of business. Failing again, he kills himself with the husband's revolver. From here on the story becomes utterly impossible. The man is cleared of the supposed murder by the finding of a ring which had left a mark on the butt of the revolver. The ring was the property of the man.

"The Mystery of 13 Hill Street." (Film Releasers of America. Three reels.)—Some crooks, receiving word through an unfaithful bank clerk that money is being shipped, hold up the messenger and rob the automobile. The bank returns for the crooks' clerk and places them on the thieves' rendezvous, where they capture them. The chief. A scene in a large office where the father is caught several times but always escapes. Finally he gets away and apparently for good.

MISCELLANEOUS

"Golden Gate Weekly No. 66." (California Motion Picture Corporation, Mar. 29.)—Six items touching the general news of the week in and near San Francisco. The Blossom Pete is shown in San Francisco, California, the gift of the museum to the city of San Francisco. The market in Santa Clara valley in bloom, the oil industry on the Pacific Coast and the new fire escapers are pictorially described.

One of the newest "suspense" stories produced by the Majestic is "The Warning Cry," directed by Frederick Vroom, with Priscilla Billington, Lumar Johnston and Jack Pickford, a brother of Mary Pickford, in the leading roles. Word comes from the Pathé studio that Crane Wilbur has won the popularity contest recently conducted by the Motion Picture. Mr. Wilbur has strong competition from well-known directors.

C. H. Price, formerly of the General Film Company, has been appointed Western representative of the World Film Corporation. He left for the West recently.

William J. Sherry has been closed with Harlem Opera House, and Keith's Fourteenth Street Theatre. "The Yellow Rose" has been released. They started last week with Mary Pickford in "Captive.

"The Master Criminal," which will soon be released through the offices of the World Film Company, has been declared by all who have seen it as a second "Tigra" film. The only remaining territory on the books of the Jesse L. Lucky Feature Play Company was disposed of last week as it is composed of the four states, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska, and was purchased by the Star Feature Film Service, with R. H. Barnett, manager of the Famous Players Star Feature Film Service, in charge. The Latest president of "The Squaw Man" opens simultaneously in St. Louis, Kansas City, St. Joseph and Sioux City.

The six-reel production of "The Atlantis," the great eight-reeler of General Film Company's dramatization of Gerhart Hauptmann's novel of the same name, was given its initial presentation in the Dominion of Canada at His Majesty's Theatre, Waterloo Street, on Friday evening March 29. The International Feature Film Corporation Ltd., has acquired the picture. The big theater was filled to its full seating and standing capacity. "Atlantis" has been other great pictures in Canada in numerous and with the picture. In the Dominion, the picture of a great picture, with the picture. In the Dominion, the picture.
"THE HINDU NEMESIS"
(The Master Producers)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHEL

While still but a baby, a boy is kidnapped by a masked man. His parents mourn his loss, but cannot find him anywhere. Years later a traveling Hindu company comes to the city where the parents are, and one of them, really young Brandon, meets Miss Brandon, his sister.

Although engaged to one of the Hindu women, he proposes and is accepted by his own sister, neither one knowing their relationship. An elopement is arranged, and early the next morning they leave the place in an automobile. They are followed by the man in the mask, who is in turn pursued by the boy's father.

An automobile accident kills the girl and boy and the villain escapes, followed by the father. He finds him in his house and attacks him. The Hindu, escaping with Brandon's former sweetheart, falls down stairs and is killed.

The great power of the motion picture was thoroughly demonstrated one evening recently when the patrons of the Ellis Theatre, in Chicago, Ill., refused to leave the theatre to witness a fire which was raging several doors from it. The Chicago public have become inculcated with the motion picture germ. Nothing seems to be able to move them after they have once entered the picture theatre. This incident is surely a convincing argument in favor of the entertaining power of the motion picture.

Film Quality

Quality in the film—quality from a technical photographic standpoint is as important to the Exhibitor as is interest in the story that the film tells.

There's one film that's recognized the world over as the standard of quality—that is always used by those whose effort it is to give the Exhibitors the very best goods and the very best service—Eastman film.

And it is identifiable. Look for "Eastman" on the perforated margin.

ATTRACTION
PHOTOPLAYS

Are taken from stories with new plots and produced with superb settings in the best locality to secure the atmosphere that the picture requires. Don't fool the fans any more with inferior features that are not true in their portrayal, but "play safe" and give your patrons the best that there is on the market. No company can give pictures of as high a quality at as low a price and continue to do so week after week, always keeping the quality and service above par, as we, who are buying the best on the open market and paying the best prices for our pictures.

REPUTATION vs. DOLLARS

NOT CONTENT with our star being made of tool steel and hardened, we are now grinding the star in a specially designed machine and hardening and grinding the cam, and all the bushing in the Framing Device. We could have used brittle die cast parts made of zinc and lead in our Mechanism and after our guarantee expired we could have made lots of money furnishing repair parts that were moulded in dies as others have done, but this is not the REPUTATION which is behind the MOTIOGRAPH. We have stood for QUALITY REGARDLESS OF COST.

Our 1914 Model MOTIOGRAPH is now ready for delivery, and has many changes, such as Lamp-house brace, new model Arc-lamp, new Framing-Device, hardened and ground star and cam. All these changes have been expensive, but the price remains the same.

Besides ROCK STEADY PICTURES, THE LIFE OF THE MOTIOGRAPH HAS BEEN FIVE TIMES THAT OF ANY OTHER MACHINE.

Order a 1914 MOTIOGRAPH, and you will have a machine of QUALITY with a small up-keep.

RIGHT OFF THE REEL
A hesitation waltz entitled, “King of Hearts,” by Charles N. Grant, has just been published. The name refers to the pleased of given to J.

Warren Kragman.

Lois Weber and Phillips Simflyett, of the Rex Company, at the Hollywood Universal studios, have just completed the production of a silent short comedy entitled, “Waterloo Pension, Samantha.” Interesting scenes on a busy day in and around the studios are shown.

McLooma Leonard, of the Rex company, has returned to the Hollywood studios, after spending a week on the summit of Mt. Lowe, producing “The Fox,” a picture on the Canadian Northwest mounted police.

“The Triumph of An Emperor”—in Hoe Sieno, Vincenzo, a famous Soviet production, which is being marketed through the World Film Corporation, is to be played in Denver in a "legitimate" theatre, put on with a chorus and symphony orchestra.

Clarence A. Taylor, the "Broncho Hiker," who started from New York, September 19, 1913, to walk to the Broncho Motion Picture Studio at Santa Monica, Cal., arrived there March 22, 1914, taking him three days over six months to do it. In that time he covered 5,650 miles. He passed through eighteen states and traversed sixty-five miles of war dridden Mexico.

The Gene Gauntier Feature Players have secured the Old St. Ambrose Church in New York as a studio for four days, on which Miss Gauntier and Jack J. Clark for a benefit performance. They also entertained the Mother Superior and a number of Sisters, who witnessed a picture before.

Frank Crane, director of Imp Features, has been engaged by the Rogers-Keeler drama entitled, "On the Chess Board of Fate," written by W. Hanson Harlow. It is the first

Power's Camerograph No. 6A motion picture projecting machines have been installed in the State Lunatic Colony at Abilene, Texas, and the State Orphan Home at Corsicana, Texas. These machines were sold through the General Film Company of Dallas, Texas.

London is experiencing a moving picture revival of Selig's great historical three-reel film, "The Coming of Columbus." This big feature recently made a long tour through Australia.

W. C. Smith, assistant general manager of the Nicholas Power Company, has been receiving congratulations on the projection furnished by this company with one of their Power's Camerograph No. 6A machines at the Brooklyn Exhibitors' Ball, at Prospect Hall, Brooklyn, on March 19.

Richard Stanton, of the New York Motion Picture Corporation forces appearing in Kay Bee, Keystone and Bronx Mutual Movies, in the figure will direct all his own pictures. Walter Edwards, who is also connected with the New York Motion Picture Corporation's Mutual Movies, is doing the same thing.

H. M. Goetz, assistant sales manager, who returned a few days ago from an extended trip in the interests of Warner's Features, Inc., reports a greatly improved market for features throughout the South and West.

S. C. Kingsbury, one of the original film men of Canada, succeeds Harry C. Kaufman, manager of the Toronto branch of Warner's Features, Inc. J. L. Warner succeeds H. M. Kohn as resident manager of the San Francisco office.

"Through Blindness to Light" is the title of a two-reel melodrama now in the course of production by Director Frank Crane at the New York Imp studio in Stuart Paton. It tells the story of a blind hero, a girl who goes wrong, a brother who is murdered in attempts to revenge her wrongs and a final reclamation. Mr. Crane plays the part of the murdered brother.

The Artistic Feature Film Company has established an office in Philadelphia at 211 No. Thirteenth street and will offer as their first feature "The Money God."

F. E. Cooksey, assistant to Sales Manager J. E. Rolbin, of the Precision Machine Company, has returned from a flying business trip to Washington.

Word comes from Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Manufacturing Co., now at Santa Barbara, that preparations for special feature productions are well under way, but no definite announcement as to the actual details will be forthcoming for some time.

If you have ever been led to believe that 13 is an unlucky number and if you want to prove once and for all that 13 is really the luckiest number of them all, you simply must see the 13th reel of

“Our MUTUAL Girl”

This is the installment of this great motion picture series in which Margaret is so infected with the spirit of St. Patrick’s Day that she swears allegiance to old Erin, goes to watch the Parade on Fifth Avenue, cheers the green flag enthusiastically, and has as good a time as if she really came from the “ould sod.” Margaret also finds time to visit “Louise,” the fashionable milliner, and is delighted with the new Spring styles, which make even more attractive than ever before. She tries on ever so many beautiful hats of the most chic Parisian design, and every detail is shown on the screen as clearly and minutely as in a mirror. They are perfectly captivating! Then she calls on Elsie de Wolfe, the most famous of all interior decorators.

In sharp contrast to the jolly good times that Norma Phillips is having as “The Mutual Girl,” imagine the experiences of those intrepid camera men who are now at the front with the Mexican Constitutionalist Army taking a photographic record of

to complete what is doubtless destined to be the greatest current interest picture in the history of motion-photography—

The World’s Exposition will be held at San Francisco, California, in nineteen hundred and fifteen, will be a wonderful tribute to that beautiful city.

This signal honor has been conferred in recognition of the indomitable will and responsive spirit displayed in a time of adversity by the City of the Golden Gate and which has made it recognized as one of the leading cities of the world.

This active spirit is evidenced by its beautiful parks, buildings and many places of amusement, chief of which are Motion Picture Theatres.

It may be interesting to note that out of ninety-five motion picture projecting machines counted in these theatres, eighty of them are of Power’s manufacture.

Another Triumphant Achievement

For Exhibitors Who Use Fox Features

YOU'VE heard of Rodman Law, the human bullet—the man who was shot from a huge gun high into the air—the man who stood on his head on the ball which tipped the flag pole of the Singer Building—the man who climbed the side of the Flatiron Building with his bare hands—the man who went up in a balloon over the Hudson and exploded ten pounds of dynamite, blowing his air craft to atoms—the man who plunged from the apex of the Statue of Liberty into the bay—the man who has defied death a hundred times, often on the impulse of a whim or to win a small wager—Rodman Law, the calculating dare-devil, who has thrilled millions by his mad recklessness in performing seemingly impossible stunts.

The same Rodman Law and Constance Bennett are featured in

"Fighting Death"

In this remarkable and highly sensational melodrama the two jump from Brooklyn Bridge. Miss Bennett, who cannot swim, leaped first with her parachute. Mr. Law followed a second later but his parachute did not open. It was only this quick descent that made it possible for him to save Miss Bennett from drowning. In another scene they are escaping from officers, both riding the same horse. To prevent capture Law drives his spurs into the tender flanks of the animal and forces it to leap over a fifty-eight foot cliff into Ausable Chasm. The river was filled with broken ice and both dodged death by a narrow margin. These hairbreadth experiences ought to be enough to satisfy the most exacting desires for excitement, but in "Fighting Death" Law adds another and crosses a ravine two-hundred and fifty feet wide hand over hand on a steel cable. In fact he is on the move from the first flash on the screen until the last is dissolved.

"Fighting Death" Now Being Booked

This thrilling photo-drama is a Blache production in four reels of rapid-fire adventure. It is one of those irresistible attractions that gets the money—one of those features that builds name and fame for an exhibitor and places his house on the first class list.

Act to-day. Sit right down now and write for descriptive heralds and possible dates. Delay may mean weeks of waiting. Or, what's worse, your competitor may get ahead of you and that will cut you out altogether.

A Decision That Decides Nothing

THE decision against the Mutual Film Company in the application for an injunction against the Ohio State Censorship Law is a decision that decides nothing. The honorable judges of the United States District Court fail to grasp the point. The Mutual Film Company, as we take it, has no intention of denying the constitutionality of the State's police power. The company has no desire to challenge the right of the state to compel the use of licenses.

The Mutual's contention is that the Ohio censorship law designs to use the police power of the state in an unconstitutional manner, and that the unconstitutionality of the act has been veiled by disguising it as a licensing measure.

It is the censorship feature that is repugnant to the elementary principles of justice and to the spirit and letter of our constitution and laws.

THE entire case of the Mutual Film Company rests upon the contention that the Ohio censorship law is unconstitutional. The answer of the judges to this argument is most disappointing.

Too often lawyers weave finely spun webs of technicalities which the judge must penetrate and break down to let the sound light of fair and impartial reason in upon the issue.

But in this instance it is the judges who have taken refuge in technicalities, while the attorney for the company bases his case upon a substantial and fundamental plea, a plea that goes to the very core of American institutions.

The Ohio law is unconstitutional, avers the Mutual, because it would violate the constitutional right of all persons to speak and publish freely their sentiments.

The judges shrink from meeting the issue by citing the principle "that a court is not authorized to adjudge a statute unconstitutional where the question of its constitutionality is at all doubtful." Thereupon they proceed to raise a doubt sufficient in their own minds to excuse them from any further consideration of the unpleasant question.

Their only answer is that the act is an exercise of the State's police power, "which extends to the making of regulations promotive of domestic order, health, morals and safety," and a license measure similar to license measures that have been upheld in the past by the courts.

Suppose, for example, that an act were passed requiring every book or magazine publisher in the United States who wished to sell books or magazines in Ohio to submit a copy of all his publications to a Board of Censors, pay a fee for the examination of every book or every issue of his magazine, and cut, amend or suppress the work, in accordance with the recommendations of the board.

Suppose, further, that the powers of the board were defined as they are in the present film censorship act: "Only such films as are in the judgment and discretion of the board of a moral and educational, or amusing and harmless character shall be passed and approved by such board."

Can anyone doubt that such a law would be discredited by the courts as impeaching the freedom of the press and of the individual to utter his sentiments, and read the utterances of others, without state interference?

A MOTION-PICTURE film is a narrative in pictures. A book is a narrative in print. The photoplay and the novel as closely akin to the novel as they are to the acted drama, if not more so.

Pictures, as a medium for expressing thoughts and ideas, preceded the written letters and words we use today.

Pictures still speak a language, and motion pictures, telling a connected story in a dramatic manner, may be considered a publication as properly as a book, magazine or newspaper.

In the unlimited variety of scenes with which a story told in motion pictures can be invested, in the powers of descriptive reproduction the camera possesses, the photoplay is much more closely related to the printed book than to the stage play.

The motion-picture screen at all events is a recognized medium for the expression of thoughts, sentiments and ideas, comparable in the magnitude and breadth of its influence, only to the stage and the press. It is likewise a correspondingly great source of ideas, sentiments and thoughts for hundreds of thousands of men, women and children, and these numbers are yearly, nay hourly, increasing.

And the screen is worthy of being considered in the same category with the press and the stage as one of the chief avenues through which those thoughts, sentiments and ideas can be disseminated, one of the great arenas in which the constitutional freedom of speech finds its legitimate exercise.

If this estimate of the film's power be acknowledged—and we do not anticipate that it will be seriously challenged—the picture censor then appears as a dictator of the thoughts and sentiments and men and women shall or shall not utter, an official tyrant who puts bridle and check-rein on the public tongue and says, "You shall say only what I think it proper for you to say, and in the way I think you should say it."

This is not an attack upon the power of the police to halt or punish the exhibition of obscene or immoral pictures, nor on the law which provides for the forfeiture of the exhibitor's license who shows such a picture.

No censor is needed to combat such pictures. The public will not tolerate them. The exhibitor will not dare to show them.

It is not the obscene or immoral picture that feels the weight of the censor's authority.

Such pictures are almost, if not quite, extinct in this country.

It is the hundreds of thousands of pictures, dealing with themes that would pass unchallenged if printed in magazines or novels, many of them photo versions of standard and classical dramas and romances, that are the prey and plaything of the censorious temperament, when clothed with a little brief authority.

* * *

What standard has the censor for judging such pictures, save his own intellectual bias and the collection of prejudices which he has accumulated?

The judges of the Federal court base the legitimacy of a film censor board on the acknowledged legitimacy of health boards, sanitation boards, rate commissions, building, bridge and highway inspection commissions.

Again the honorable judges fail to make an essential distinction.

All these commissions have definite, fixed and unalterable standards to which their decisions must conform.

A bridge inspector, for instance, is not permitted to "think" that a structure is built in accordance with engineering laws and safety regulations.

He is required to apply certain specific tests to such a work. These tests determine the worth of the bridge; the inspector merely reports their result and issues a finding accordingly.

But for determining the moral or intellectual effect of a given dramatic scene upon any persons or any number of persons, the film censor has no rules or standards.

He can have none.

Such effect depends upon the persons, not upon the picture.

His judgments, so-called, are and must be founded upon prejudice, speculation, belief, theory, dogma—upon everything but fact and knowledge.

* * *

The Ohio censorship law, in this regard, reads, as already quoted: "Only such films as are in the judgment of the board of censors of a moral, educational or amusing and harmless character shall be passed and approved by such board."

Under such a clause a censor or a board of censors could find ground for suppressing any picture that might come before them.

They are a law unto themselves. All their caprices, whims and fancies can find room to operate beneath that all-inclusive word, "harmless." Given a certain prevalent type of censor, and a fairy tale would have as little chance as a white-slave drama.

Where is the censor broad-minded and generous enough to interpret a clause that gives him so much power, with justice to all, and not warp it to pander to his own vainglory and self-conceit?

The evils that the enemies of motion pictures declare are propagated by the screen can be found to flourish far more widely and insidiously on the stage and in the printed pages of magazines and books.

But the courts and the police have always proved themselves fully able to regulate them without recourse to the medieval, anti-American, tyrannical weapon of censorship.

To countenance censorship in any part of a land protected by such a constitution as ours is to encourage its establishment over all our institutions.

The precedent that a film censorship would create should give every judge in the land pause before he lends his co-operation to a movement that marks the beginning of an assault upon that most cherished of all our liberties—the freedom of speech.

To Film Newport Dances

Newport photographers have equipped themselves with motion-picture camera outfits, in prospect of the new fall this coming season. Last year a number of society people there took much interest in pictures, and have stated their intention of having motion pictures taken of all the coming events, to be exhibited at some later entertainment.
MUTUAL WILL FIGHT CENSORSHIP
IN HIGHEST COURT

Federal District Court Denies Injunction Against Ohio Law, but Grants 15 Days for Appeal—Freedom of Speech Violation Issue Left to Supreme Court—

The Judges’ Decision Analyzed in Detail

The question, “can censorship laws rightfully exist under the United States Constitution?” is now one to be settled by the Supreme Court of the nation.

After nearly four months of waiting, United States Circuit Judge Warrington and District Judges Killitts and Day, sitting as a court of equity in the Northern Federal District of Ohio, have handed down a decision, denying the application of the Mutual Film Company of Ohio and Virginia for an injunction restraining the Ohio State Board of Censors from proceeding under the new censorship law.

Though the application was denied, the court expressly suspended the operation of the order of denial for fifteen days, to permit the attorneys for the Mutual Film Company to file a notice of appeal with the United States Supreme Court. This will be done at once.

This is in itself an unusual proceeding, since it is not in accordance with the custom of the courts to grant additional stays to a litigant whose cause has been defeated.

The court’s voluntary granting of the fifteen days’ suspension is, in the opinion of many prominent lawyers, an admission that the most vital issues in the case have been left undecided.

The decision of Judges Warrington, Killitts and Day is, as a matter of fact, notoriously lacking in any attempt to grapple with the fundamental question of whether censorship laws trespass upon the constitutional guarantee of freedom of speech to all individual citizens of the states and the nation.

The concluding words of the court, in their eighteen-page decision, are:

“We are unable to find anything in the act that is opposed to either the state or Federal constitution.”

Findings Based on State’s Police Power

These findings, however, are based exclusively upon the arguments advanced by the judges that the censorship act is a legitimate exercise of the state’s police power, and that it is valid as a licensing measure, similar in scope and practice to license measures which have been already upheld by other courts of like jurisdiction.

The Mutual Film Company has until April 13, under the decision, to file their notice of appeal and motion for an additional stay with the Supreme Court at Washington. The appeal will be filed either on Saturday, April 11, or Monday, April 13, and a suspension of all proceedings under the censorship act, pending the outcome of the appeal, will be requested.

Walter N. Seligsberg, of 55 Liberty Street, New York City, attorney for the Mutual Film Company in this suit, is optimistic over the possible success of the appeal.

In commenting upon the decision in the Ohio court, Mr. Seligsberg said:

“It is not becoming in the defeated litigant to criticize the court, and yet, in its decision, the court permits us fifteen days in which to take an appeal and apply for a further stay of proceedings under the Ohio Censorship Law, pending the appeal.

“This indicates the weight of our contentions, as it is very unusual practice to grant a defeated litigant further stays.

Question Not Squarly Decided

“The court does not squarely decide the question which we presented, as to whether motion pictures are entitled to the protection of the constitutional provision guaranteeing freedom of publication of sentiments to all persons. The court avoids this by saying that under the police power, theatrical and motion picture exhibitions may be licensed, and any reasonable restrictions thereon are justifiable.

“However, the court loses sight of the fact that the police power can only be exercised within the limits of the constitution, and that where an attempted exercise of the police power violates a specific constitutional guaranty, the guaranty must prevail.

“Despite their decision against us, the complainants appreciate very much the care and attention which Judges Warrington, Day and Killitts gave to this case. We appreciate that an inferior court is usually reluctant to declare a state law unconstitutional, and we feel confident that the appeal, which will immediately be taken, will be successful.”

History of Mutual’s Suit

The Board of Censors of Motion Picture Films was created on May 3, 1913, by the Ohio Legislature to act as a subsidiary of the State Industrial Commission, with J. W. Maddox, H. E. Vestal and Mrs. Maude Murray Miller as members, at a salary of $1,500 a year each.

Last November the Mutual Film Companies of Ohio and Virginia filed an application for a temporary injunction with the United States District Court, and the injunction was granted, pending a hearing. On November 29 the first session of the hearing was held. In the Mutual’s complaint, not only the Board of Censors, but the members of the Industrial Commission were cited as respondents.

After ten or twelve days of open hearings, the court directed both sides to submit briefs and reserved decision.

The contentions of the Mutual Film Company, on behalf of the film manufacturers, are here summarized:

1. The State and Federal constitutions guarantee to all persons the right to freely speak and publish their sentiments. This covers every kind of a publication, by spoken or written word, or by pictorial representation.

2. The photoplay is a publication and the United States Supreme Court held in Harper Brothers vs. Kalem over ‘Ben Hur’ that a photoplay is a dramatization and capable of violating a copyright.

3. The constitutional guaranty protects from censorship only and leaves to the law-making power the right to provide punishment for obscene or otherwise improper publications.

4. “Censorship is inherently contrary to the principles of our law because there is no way of reviewing the operations of a censor’s mind. The judgment of one that a picture is improper may be utterly unreasonable in the eyes of another.

The very same incident in a picture may be suggestive of good to many minds and evil to one, and that one might be the censor.

“The propriety of a publication depends not on the opinion of any one man or set of men, but upon the consensus of the community. That can only be determined by free and open trial and not by star-chamber censorship.

“Censorship laws are invalid because they deal with a subject of interstate commerce and impose censorship charges upon duplicates of the same subject, although only one examination is necessary.
6. Censorship laws are not valid as inspection laws (like a pure food law) because inspection only applies where definite physical facts cannot be revealed and inspection does not depend upon the mental operations of the inspector. Censorship has no reference to physical qualities but to moral qualities, which are altogether relative and never absolutely determinable by the law.

Decision a Significant One

The decision of Judges Warrington, Killitts and Day is an intensely interesting and significant one. It is plain from the beginning that they realize the main issue to be the alleged interference by the censorship laws with the constitutional principle of freedom of speech. It is equally plain that they wish to avoid entering into an extended discussion of so radical a question, deeming it rather an issue to be determined by the nation's supreme tribunal.

A careful analysis of the decision makes it appear that they have limited themselves to minor proofs of the constitutionality of the censorship act, making a decision that would stand as final if the film company were willing to accept it, or one that would permit the taking of an appeal, in case they were not satisfied with the judgment.

In either case, the judges have technically discharged their duty in the matter, although they have not rendered the brilliant and far-reaching decision for which the case affords opportunity, as few such cases have in recent years.

"Examination of the act," declares the court, "plainly discloses an exercise of the state's police power; and no one doubts that this power extends to the making of regulations 'promotive of domestic order, morals, health and safety.'" Presumably the General Assembly was convinced that the business of exhibiting motion pictures was attended with such public evils as both to warrant and demand regulation. And if the measures adopted have reasonable relation to that end, it is not open to the judiciary to interfere.

Court Defines "Harmful"

"It does not matter if the subject in the main is harmless. It does matter, however, if something associated with it is harmful; and it is only when it clearly appears that the enactment has no real or substantial relation to a proper subject, or is unquestionably an invasion of rights secured by the fundamental law that the courts either of the United States or the State of Ohio will interfere."

But, as before observed, there is no attempt on the part of the court to determine whether there is such an invasion of rights secured by the fundamental law, by the Ohio Censorship Act.

The court plainly reveals its own unwillingness to decide the unconstitutionality of the Ohio law upon the ground that it invades the freedom of speech provision of the constitution, in its observation:

"A court is not authorized to adjudge a statute unconstitutional where the question of its constitutionality is at all doubtful."

Dismissing this, the leading question of the suit, in such a manner, the judges proceed to vindicate the constitutionality of the law as a license measure, taking care throughout to emphasize the fact that license laws have been already recognized as constitutional.

License Laws Cited

The judges cite the laws relating to the licensing of legitimate theatres and motion picture theatres, and to the licensing of motion picture operators. But they fail to cite any license law which has an analogous relation to the license clause of the censorship law. If such a law existed, it would be one that compelled a theatrical producer to take out a license for every play he produced, or a book publisher to pay a censorship license fee for every book he published.

"It is contended," continues the decision, "that unless it can be safely affirmed that the state may provide for the censoring of newspapers and magazines, the present statute cannot be sustained."

"We cannot believe this question is in reality involved. Analysis of the bills and affidavits, not to speak of familiar knowledge, serves to show that an exhibition of these motion picture films, with its enclosure, surroundings and attendance, has all the material attributes of an ordinary theatre. It is true the statute does not make direct provision, either as to exhibitors or places; but indirectly it does this and more; it provides in effect for the licensing of the use of films, only the films the exhibitors can publicly display."

"Why, then, is this not the practical equivalent of a plan to regulate these public exhibitions, the picture film theatres, through the old system of granting, and if necessary, revoking or withholding licenses?"

"Since the state has declared, in effect, the existence of public evils growing out of these picture film exhibitions, which require regulation, what court can rightfully say, in cases like these, either that such evils do not exist, or that the measures adopted are not reasonably designed to correct the evils?"

Remedy for Evils Already Exists

But there is already in existence a remedy and a regulation for the evils which the state alleges grows out of motion picture exhibitions, and it is in the "old system of granting, revoking or withholding licenses," which the court has just cited. Under that "old system," every exhibitor who attempts to show or does show an immoral picture is liable to forfeit his license, and the police have full power to institute criminal proceedings against him.

This method is used in dealing with similar "evils" which arise out of the theatrical and the book-publishing industry from time to time. There never has been any complaint of the efficacy of the police and the courts in dealing with such situations.

Is it not within the province of the court to determine whether the regulatory measures already in existence are not sufficient to cope with the problems alleged to be presented by the motion picture theatre?

"It was never supposed," the court proceeds further on, "that there was any repugnancy between the legislative power to regulate theatres and the freedom of the press."

But there never has been any attempt by the legislature to regulate the theatre in such a manner as it now proposes to regulate the motion picture industry.

And the court the next moment admits that a judicial order forbidding the presentation upon a theatrical stage, of the facts of a particular criminal case then on trial, was held by a superior court to be an infringement of the state constitutional provision, which protects the right of a citizen freely to speak, write and publish his sentiments.

The court goes on to cite the acts of regulation adopted by other states in regard to motion picture films, in which "we do not discover that the question of interference with the freedom of the press was presented."

Case Cited Not Analogous

But in one of the cases cited, the act was one requiring all motion picture operators to be licensed, an act adopted by the city of Baltimore. Since it is manifestly for the protection of theatres and audiences against confabulations that operators should be required to show that they know their business, there could not possibly have been a question of the freedom of the press involved, any more than such an issue could have been raised in connection with the licensing of automobile chauffeurs.

There is no connection between such a law, and an act which gives three or four men and women the power arbitrarily to cut out of any filmatory feature of it, which may be displeasing to them, on the ground that it is not "harmless," regardless of the expense to the producer, and without conformity to any known or any obtainable standards.

CO-OPERATION

BY THOMAS Saxe
President of the Saxe Amusement Enterprises

Exhibitors Must Co-operate for Their Own Protection—Operating Expenses Are Going Up: Prices Should Rise, Too

CO-OPERATION is the straightest and shortest road to successful exhibiting.

This is becoming more apparent every day, and the issue is being forced by the continued increase in the cost of operating theatres without the necessary increase in gross revenue. Film rentals are higher, wages to employees have been raised, and with the rapid upbuilding of patronage the depreciation in equipment, resulting from wear and tear, has jumped thirty per cent in excess of what it was two or three years ago.

The exhibitor, in hundreds of cases, has been obliged to cut deep into his profits to meet the increased cost of operation. In shaving his profits to meet added expenses, he is giving his patrons a superior form of entertainment. But the patrons are in many instances, getting the best of it.

The adoption of co-operative work has been tried in probably every section of the country. In some instances it has been successful; in others a flat failure.

But the exhibitor has no one but himself to blame.

Occasions have been mentioned where local league members would get together at a meeting, cast a unanimous vote to standardize admissions for a maximum number of reels, and then return to their respective theatres, and, within twenty-four hours, violate their pledge of support by resuming cut-throat methods with anywhere from six to nine reels for five cents.

Perhaps the back-siders felt justified in taking such action, but recent events have proven that it has resulted to their own detriment.

It is financially impossible for one or two exhibitors in a city to increase prices from five to ten cents, while their competitors retain the nickel admission sign in the box-office. The public will always seek a bargain.

If every exhibitor in any city was

Saxe-o-grams

"The increasing cost of operation is going to make co-operative action imperative."

"Retailers in every other line of commerce have been successful only because of co-operation. Why can't exhibitors do the same thing?"

"Only through co-operation can the exhibitor raise his price of admission and continue to do business."

"The one-house man constitutes the backbone of the business."

"The only convention worth while is the one where the exhibitor does nothing but talk shop."

Likewise?

Retailers in Every Other Line of Business Owe Success to Co-operation—Why Cannot Exhibitors Do Likewise?

In justice to themselves, exhibitors must adopt a similar course for the protection of their interests. If a man invests $30,000 in a theatre, he is entitled to a ten-cent admission. He gambles for success, and the odds are largely against him.

There is the possibility that a larger and more costly theatre will be constructed in his neighborhood; or the happening of one of a hundred other dangers that are familiar to this business. Why should he be obliged to content himself with a five-cent admission, and wait from five to ten years to recover even a part of his investment?

There is not enough confidence between exhibitors. They are prone to distrust each other to a great extent.

A great many are progressive and anxious to band together for the protection of their own interests. But, as stated above, it is impractical for one or two exhibitors to take a step forward, while the others hang back, a course decidedly beneficial to the public.

How best to bring about a uniform spirit of co-operation is difficult to decide. Conventions have been called, presumably for this very purpose, but very little has been accomplished, except in one or two instances.

There is only one form of convention that will ever make it worth while for the exhibitor to spend money and lose time to attend: And that is when he will go there, with his fellows, and do nothing but talk "shop." Every man has individual methods of operating his theatre. Practically every exhibitor has had experiences, more or less costly to himself, that would serve to guide another theatre owner from the path of danger. Those kind of things, if served red hot and backed by honest, convincing argument, would, in the aggregate, become the parent of cooperation.

Retailers in practically every other known line of commerce have been successful only because of cooperation. They have gotten together, talked things over, argued, and sworn allegiance to resolutions adopted in their behalf, and then returned home to live up to them. Why can't exhibitors do the same thing?

They have got just as much at stake as any other retailer, and perhaps more. The rapidly increasing cost of operation is going to make cooperation imperative in the near future. There are many ways in which the theatre owner can economize, and by which he can add to his business.

But there is no way, save through co-operation and united movement, that he can increase his price of admission and continue to do business.

STOP and think for just a moment, as you read this, just what sincere and intelligent co-operation would mean to your own business. It would enable you to give your patrons a superior quality of film, because you could then afford to pay larger film rentals. It would add materially to the protection of the investment you have made in your business.

The increased profits would enable you to branch out, or, if not invested again, would find you prepared for the proverbial "rainy day." There are many more ways in which you would benefit, but they will vary in accordance with your local conditions.

New ideas, more money and greater business experience are things which are being brought into the exhibiting business at a rate never known in any other commercial enterprise.

And it is one of the best things that could possibly happen. Men who have made money in other lines are not going to take any unnecessary chances of loss in this business. Many of them are men who have been educated to the value of cooperation in their previous business experience.

Those who have been exhibitors for years, and who have been successful, are not going to take further risks. And the fellow who refuses to support concentrated working plans is going to be a minus factor in another year or two.

Legislation is one of the big items responsible for the present uncertainty among exhibitors. Its adverse nature is directly due to the lack of co-operation among the men whom it affects. Censorship has been one of the biggest bugbears with which we have had to contend. Some of the present forms of censorship are ridiculous, and yet, we have to abide by the dictates of people who have never spent a nickel to enter a picture theatre. Could such a condition prevail in any other business?

It is not the man with more than one theatre who suffers to a great extent from the present unorganized condition of the retail film business. He has opened to him ways and means with which to combat trouble that are not possible to the exhibitor with one theatre. And yet, the chain theatre is in the minority as against the total number of houses in operation.

It is the "one house" man who constitutes the backbone of the business, and the burden of responsibility for the future of the entire industry rests largely upon his shoulders. As an individual, his power to protect himself and his business from a multitude of dangers is not sufficient to constitute certain safety.

But with others united with him, his authority and ability become a thing that will compel attention from every source to which it is directed.

Famous Players to Screen "The Brute"

The Famous Players Film Company have engaged the services of Malcolm Williams to present "The Brute," by Frederick Arnold Kummer.

Mr. Williams was the leading factor in the success of "The Typhoon," in which he played the artist. He will interpret the title role in the forthcoming release.

Drug Film in Tombs

Six reels of pictures were shown to the prisoners in the Tombs prison in New York City recently.

The picture dealt with the drug habit and is said to have made an impression on the prisoners. The Department of Correction, under whose auspices the pictures were exhibited, stated their intention of taking them to Hart's Island and the Bedford Reformatory. A Simplex machine furnished the projection.
Million-Dollar Theatre Opens

The Strand, New York City, Now America's Largest, with Accommodations for 3,500 Persons—Twenty City Lots Covered by Mammoth Photoplay House—Fine Construction Enhanced by Every Modern Improvement

THE STRAND, the largest theatre in this country devoted exclusively to the projection of motion pictures, and probably the second largest in the world, is at last an actuality. The American Theatre, in Salt Lake City, which for some time has claimed the privilege of being known as the residence of the largest theatre on this continent, is now forced to take second place.

Representing an investment of considerably over $1,000,000, the stately Strand now stands a monument to the industry. A few comparisons between the two theatres—the American and the Strand—will not be missed.

The Western theatre was built at a cost of $1,000,000, which is approximately one-sixth the value of its Eastern competitor. Of course, the tremendous value of the land upon which the Strand has been built, as against the worth of Salt Lake City property, must be taken into consideration in this comparison.

The American can accommodate comfortably 3,000 in its auditorium.
The local theatre seats 3,500 people—1,500 downstairs, the remainder in the single balcony. The music, a most important factor, is furnished by a sixteen-piece orchestra in the American as against twenty-five soloists in the New York theatre.

In the heart of the so-called "white light" district, in the home of the "legitimate" drama, putting itself in actural daily competition with the world's greatest speaking stars, this theatre is facing close competition.

In October, 1912, Max Spiegel conceived the idea of building such a theatre. He became associated with Michel H. Mark and incorporated a company with a drawing capital of $1,000,000. The officers elected were Michel H. Mark, president; Eugene
L. Falk, treasurer; Max Mark, vice-president, and Max Spiegel, secretary.

The lease for the property was obtained in December, 1912. The period of time stated in the lease is said to be for a large number of years
Thomas W. Lamb and George M.
Keister were engaged to draw architectural plans for the building. These were accepted in May, 1913. Cramp & Company, the building contractors, were awarded the contract and the ground was broken on July 17, 1912.

Almost to the day later the gigantic structure opened its doors to the public.

Covering a space of twenty city lots, with a frontage of 135 feet on Broadway and 277 feet on West
Forty-seventh street, the main structure is composed of steel, covered with fully glazed terra cotta. The theatre proper is divided from the office building, wherein are the offices of the theatre and numerous musical and theatrical companies have desk space, by an alleyway. Both buildings are absolutely fireproof.

THE interior of the theatre con-ists of the stage, orchestra and one balcony, which is divided off into two sections. Two tiers of boxes, beautifully decorated with mural paintings, have been built.

There is not an obstruction from one end of the house to the other which can possibly interrupt the line of vision to the screen. There is not one post either upstairs or down.
The ceiling of the theatre has been decorated, as has the rest of the house, by Otto Bauer. A very novel lighting effect makes it possible to throw sunlight, moonlight or starlight over the house, according to the moods of the picture. The screen, which has been especially built for this theatre, is set on a double stage—a stage built upon a stage.

The aisles are of large proportions.
Plenty of space between the rows of seats has been allowed. A mezzanine floor is used as a promenade, following the Continental custom. This allows patrons of both the balcony and orchestra to walk around ad lib during the intermissions.

All the stonework is of fine marble
The main decorations of the boxes ceiling, and so on, are in French grey, rose and gold. In the decoration, as well as in the other features, European theatres have been profi-ciently copied.

TO return to the theatre itself:
the constructors, not satisfied with making the building absolutely fireproof, are not willing to take any chances of this greatest of all theatre perils.

They have had installed a solid steel curtain—there is only one other in the whole city of New York—which may be dropped at the slightest danger. Approximately every ten feet from the boxes around to the main entrance on both sides are large, opening-outward exits, the majority of which lead directly out to the streets; the others lead to large alleyways. Almost identically the same precautions have been taken in the balcony.

The projection-booth is constructed of asbestos, the lining is

He reports good business in southern Ohio, and while in the city made arrangements to run the Cincinnati picture, taken during the late convention in January. Mr. Kaufman is one of the pioneers who organized the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, at Columbus, Ohio, on September 12, 1910.

John H. Broomhall, secretary of the Ohio State League, was a caller at league headquarters. Broomhall is a pioneer in the picture business. He has for years owned and operated the Jewel Theatre in Hamilton, Ohio. He has recently bought the Jefferson Theatre in Hamilton, and is arranging to give the highest class features in the Jefferson. Sam P. Broomhall is the manager.

Dayton Local No. 3, headquarters of which are located in the Pruden Building, Dayton, has one of the most active locals in the State of Ohio. Last Monday the Lyric, Columbia, Ideal, Electric, Apollo, and the Majestic Theatres all joined in the local league. This brings into the league every downtown house in Dayton.

On Monday, April 6, there will be a big smoker given at the Dayton league headquarters in the Pruden Building. President M. A. Neff, Cincinnati; National Treasurer Oren Parker, Covington, Ky., and National Committeeman Peter J. Jeup, of Detroit, Mich., will be present.

About half of the space of the big International Exposition of Arts to be held in Dayton in conjunction with the National Motion Picture Exhibitors League Convention of America, beginning July 5, and closing the night of July 11, has been sold.

The convention committee will meet in Dayton Monday evening and take up every detail of the convention. George H. Wiley, who is chairman of the committee on exposition, has opened his offices in Dayton and will remain there until after the close of the convention. Clem Kerr, of Dayton, the-promoting assistant, is making a splendid record, and reports that space beyond their fondest expectations has been contracted for.

L. H. Ramsey, Lexington, Ky., is making arrangements to build a large new theatre in Lexington.

G. B. McClelland, of Osgood, Ind., is building a new $7,000 theatre in that little town.

Frank Huss, of Fifth Street, Cincinnati, and friends are building a theatre in the suburbs of Louisville, Ky.

T. P. Finnegan, national vice-president of Dallas, Texas, who has recently finished a $75,000 picture theatre in Waco and owns two other large theatres, will build a $50,000 picture theatre in Fort Worth, Tex.

Cincinnati Local No. 2 held a large enthusiastic meeting in Parlor F of the Sinton Hotel on Wednesday afternoon, April 1. Owing to the death of his father, Secretary H. G. Kruse was absent.

The censor bill No. 4941, introduced in the Senate on March 18, 1914, by Senator Hoke Smith of Georgia, and censor bill No. 14895, introduced by Mr. Hughes of Georgia, do not seem to meet with the approval of the exhibitors and manufacturers.

It is claimed by exhibitors that if either of these bills were passed they would not give relief to the public, the exhibitor or the manufacturer, by reason of the fact that while the pictures might come under the jurisdiction of the interstate commerce, there is no provision in the law whereby an exhibitor who exhibited a picture that the State or local police might decide that was not a fit subject to run, would be protected. The matter would be left exactly the same as it is at the present time.

The motion picture exhibitors want a law that will protect the public and the exhibitors in their rights of running pictures when they once have been censored. This can be done only by a legal censor board that has the power to censor pictures and that the pictures shall be shown in every state or municipality, other laws to the contrary notwithstanding.

J. S. WOODHOUSE, proprietor of the Black Cat Theatre, at Des Moines, Iowa, is in trouble. It occurred to him to contract for Warner’s Features, Woodhouse complained to W. C. Merrill, manager of the Minneapolis office of Warner’s Features, that the rentals were not in proportion to his admission prices—five cents.

“I can’t find room for them at five cents. But even then my profits are not in proportion to the investment,” “Charge ten cents,” advised the exchange manager.

“The people won’t pay it,” complained Woodhouse.

“I’ll take care of that,” answered Merrill. “If you refuse to charge ten cents as the admission when you are showing our films, I’ll enter suit against you. It is defamatory of the character of the productions to put them on public exhibition at five cents.”

Woodhouse didn’t know what to do. He wanted that feature program, but at the same time, he wanted to pay sufficient rental to get an early run. Many of his competitors have standardized admissions at five cents.

Now Merrill is giving serious consideration to making application before the district court of Polk county, Iowa, for a mandatory injunction restraining Woodhouse from exhibiting any productions released through the Warner Feature program at anything less than a ten-cent admission.

WHETHER or not the injunction is applied is immaterial. The real issue is the reaction of the public. A change of action is significant of the present agitation among exhibitors and exchange men in Minnesota and Iowa. Progressive film men are fast uniting in the conclusion that the public has its quota of sympathy and that the old fashions are being too much for its money.

The situation at the Black Cat Theatre is typical.

“There is only one thing to do in this instance,” explains Mr. Merrill. “Woodhouse has contracted for our productions. His patrons demand quality entertainment. In order to protect the exchange and Woodhouse, I have got to make it my business to see that quantity prices do not prevail.”

Minneapolis’ atmosphere is beclouded with predictions concerning the future of the film business in that state. But there are three things upon which every film man agrees: Larger theatres; superior productions; higher admissions.

These three evolutions are based upon figures showing the increase in the cost of maintenance of the average theatre to-day, as against the expenses of only a year ago. Property rents have gone up by leaps and bounds. Owners of ground upon which theatres have been built, or proprietors of buildings converted into picture houses, have sensed the inevitable change in the theatre business and have been quick to raise rents. Restraining orders, legality of which is questioned by the producers, have served to increase the expenses of picture houses.

Owners of ground upon which theatres have been built, or proprietors of buildings converted into picture houses, have sensed the inevitable change in the theatre business and have been quick to raise rents. Restraining orders, legality of which is questioned by the producers, have served to increase the expenses of picture houses.

There are some instances in cities in the Central West where exhibitors are paying for property rental, one hundred per cent and more in excess of that charged to tenants of adjoining ground, but who are engaged in older commercial enterprises.

M O R E people are becoming educated to the possibilities for entertainment and education in picture theatres. That, of course, serves to swell gross receipts for the exhibitor. But more room is required to accommodate them. Hence, another hole in the net proceeds for the purpose of expansion.

Competition is growing. These days of advertising are becoming more and more strenuous in its demand for quality films. The manufacturers’ costs leap up; he charges it to exchange in increased prices on footage; the exhibitor repays the exchange in higher rentals.

Central Western exhibitors are fully conscious of the uncertainties surrounding them. And many of them, figuratively speaking, are taking the bull by the horns, and keeping several paces ahead of the public demand. The exhibition of Warner’s Features thus far in the Central West has been marked by an increase of three and four thousand dollars in daily grosses.

A canvass of exhibitors indicates that there is a market, at the present time, for additional feature films. Rentals on some of the established brands are excessive to the exhibitor operating a three-hundred-seat-house at a five-cent admission. And the larger theatres are knocking big chunks out of his patronage.

“The trouble is,” complained one, “that those of us who want to branch out, increase seating capacities, and climb up to front, are seriously handicapped. Now take that house two blocks down the street. It was put up six months ago. At that time I had four thousand dollars laid away for improvements. It will cost me ten thousand to place this theatre on an equal footing with it. “Lots of the folks are used to my house just as it stands. The contrast does not appear quite so noticeable. But if I went ahead and spent the four thousand, the job would be only half done, and the difference would become too marked. The only thing that I can do is to trust to luck, give them the best I can afford and wait.”

That other house is three times as big as mine. It seats a little more than twelve hundred. The manager can afford to book all the big features, because his box-office will stand the rentals. A day’s booking, at the price he pays, would take every nickel of my gross receipts for the day.

WHAT can I do? I have got to give my patrons almost as good quality as they get down there; or they won’t patronize me. But I cannot get the films. There are plenty of features available, but lots of them are unprofitable to the house. People here like sensational productions, but they must have quality. The mere jumping from a bridge, or from the roof of a burning building, or a mad race between an automobile and train, does not constitute the sort of sensationalism that they want. It is the picture with a good, strong story, clean and wholesome in text, and that gives them something to think about that enables me to turn a profit on a booking.”

But in spite of the variety of complaints, not only from exhibitors, but exchange men and feature bookers, there is one thing that is sure to come in the Central West at least. Every past and present indication points to it. It is the larger house, with increased admission prices. That will mean a fewer number of smaller houses. Increased seating capacities will be the basis for many forthcoming modifications in the selling and marketing end of the industry.

Larger houses will be able to support higher rentals. This will permit the exchange men to pay more for footage. It will also mean that there will, in a great number of instances, be two- and three-day bookings, rather than daily changes of program.

This will all contribute to the welfare of the respective manufacturers by giving them an opportunity to devote more time to productions, expend greater sums in their making and infuse a higher standard of quality into the business generally.
AL JENNINGS' LIFE STORY TO BE FILMED

Al Jennings, former bandit, now candidate for governor of Oklahoma, whose life constitutes one of the most remarkable human documents ever written, will arrive in New Rochelle, N. Y., April 12, for a conference with Charles J. Hine, president of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, which company will produce "Beating Back," for Direct-From-Broadway-Features.

"Beating Back" will be in six reels. In the scenario the story of Jennings' life as published in "Saturday Evening Post," is followed closely and the fight at "Spike S" ranch will be reproduced with accuracy.

Jennings' life as county prosecutor, bandit, convict, is unprecedented in our national history, for the people of Oklahoma, where he committed his crimes, are now desirous of electing him their governor as a lasting record of his fight against society and his successful "Beating Back" into its good graces.

FILMS AID COLLEGIATE ATHLETICS

Minneapolis, Minn., April 6.—The motion picture as an aid to athletics was demonstrated here during the last three days when the students of Hamlin University raised more than $300 to send their track team to the University of Pennsylvania relays at Philadelphia on April 25.

The students staged the motion picture shows in College Hall and secured the services of local film agents to see that the shows were run off in "reel" motion picture style.

CHARLES M. SEAY, one of the directors of the Edison Company, has the honor of being the first to make a picture in the Edison Studio, Bedford Park, the Bronx, after the fire. Twenty-four hours after the fire he and Walter Edwin were talking things over and Edwin bet Seay a perfectly good fifteen-dollar straw hat that he wouldn't be able to take a picture in the studio within forty-eight hours.

Seay took him up, and Seay won by about three hours. Mr. Seay will doubtless sport his new hat on Easter Monday, or very soon after.

The picture reveals the Edison director in the act of winning his new sky-piece. Evidence of the damage done by the recent fire is to be seen on all sides, and the wraps worn by the actresses who are watching the taking of the picture is a reminder that the studio was open to the early April winds. The comedy was staged upon one of the two stages which the fire had spared.

EPIDEMIC BARS CHILDREN FROM SHOWS

St. Paul, Minn., April 6.—Children under 12 years of age are barred from all motion picture theatres in this city as a result of the order issued today by Dr. Howard Lankester, city health commissioner, but they may attend if accompanied by parents or guardians.

The order holds until April 25 at the close of the extended Easter vacation, and the declared purpose is to prevent the spread of diphtheria, scarlet fever and other contagion while children are out of school.

PREMATURE FIRE ON SHIP

The Mohawk Film Company, under the direction of Wray Physioc, have been taking the picture, "Hearts of Oak," up along the Maine coast.

Everything was in readiness for the fire at sea in the last act when several of the actors were noticed to be jumping prematurely. A small explosion took place. The fuse had burned too rapidly and Mr. Physioc was badly burned. The government wrecking crew were with difficulty made to respond because they believed the accident part of the picture.

Selecting a Site

The selection of a site for a motion picture theatre is the first important step that will cause either success or absolute failure—a strong statement, but a fact. The time has passed when one may locate a show in any neighborhood and of any size, and be blessed with worthy goods in return.

The site must be selected with the greatest care and judgment, and a few hints in this regard will be outlined to let our readers understand the essential, basic requirements.

The size of the site will depend on the number of seats that are to be provided, the space to be devoted to aisles, foyers, service rooms, etc., the amount of space that is to be left vacant for exit alleys, as might be directed by governing ordinances or the designer's conscience, and by the amount of space that is desired to be devoted to stage and stage accessories.

We must be liberal in space devoted to vestibule, entrance, corridors and foyers. They add dignity to and confidence of safety in the place, besides providing space for the patrons waiting for the change of show on the heavy nights.

Where ordinances are in force they generally stipulate a minimum of exit alleys, and they are generally so exacting that it is sufficient if the demand is provided. Where there are no such laws it is important that they be amply cared for, because just in such places it is likely that fire departments and police are not so efficient in a sudden emergency.

Having determined on the amount of land we now prefer a corner lot if the price is not prohibitive. If unsuccessful in this first choice, we need not lose heart if we get a deep interior lot. In either case, the deeper the lot the better, and with a rear street connection, we would place the theatre to the rear, devoting the front land for commercial purposes after taking what is needed for a vestibule and foyer corridor.

The next important consideration is the topography of the land upon which the structure is to be reared. The ideal condition would be if it would slope approximately with the grade of the auditorium floor. Any great difference would be extremely detrimental. If the land slope greatly in opposite direction to the slope of the floor, there would result an excessive cost for excavating, retaining walls, drainage systems to care for surface waters, difficulties to overcome as to the auditorium exits, and extra length of time to build the structure.

The writer had such a condition to overcome in a theatre, in which case an excavation at the rear of the house amounted to a depth of over twenty feet, and to resist the earth thrust, reinforced concrete walls had to be built. This defect of site caused an additional cost of almost two thousand dollars, whereas had a lot been purchased on the opposite side of the street almost the entire amount would have been saved.

Likewise it is unwise to buy a site where the grade slopes, though in the same direction, yet to a much greater depth than the auditorium floor. Though this would obviate any danger from surface water, it would cause excessive expense in foundation walls and a structural floor for the auditorium, generally unnecessary in the small show-house.

There should be given due consideration to the nature of the soil. Rock excavation is costly and sometimes brings with it natural running springs.

Low land and swamp land are seldom the proposed site of theatres, yet be guarded against such possibilities. The writer knows where such a condition was disastrous to an investor. That site was about the highest in the city, but for an area of several acres there existed low land which was filled in with good earth as the city built up. A theatre was built upon the site, and was almost finished when it settled beyond repair and safety. The building had to be demolished. The land had to be made secure by driven piles, and then the theatre was rebuilt. This was a costly lesson.

Good sand and gravel are good to build upon. The excavated material may be re-used in the works, and the part built upon remains a good sub-soil for drainage.

The aforesaid details relate to construction, and a word from the business side may not be amiss. Do not hide your house in a side street, for even in a country town, and more so in the cities where transient business forms a great part of the daily gains, the more prominent the place and the more accessible the better.

In conclusion, we might say that the ideal conditions are not always found, but forewarned is forearmed, and if we would but accept those sites having the lesser of several evils, and especially guard against the greater and surely disastrous ones, we will have judged well, and can safely proceed with the next step—the selection of architect and contractors—of which subject we will treat in our next issue.

PATHE STAR'S DOUBLE PLAY

Pearl Sindelar, known in Pathé pictures from coast to coast, has accepted an engagement to appear in "Potash and Perlmutter," at the Cohan Theatre, New York. She will succeed Louise Dresser in the leading role. Miss Sindelar will not, however, forsake the silent drama entirely for she will devote her days to the Pathé people, except Wednesday and Saturday, when she will appear in matinees.

This is, perhaps, the first time that a film actress has gone over to the stage, although many have left the stage to appear in films. Miss Sindelar will be very much in evidence on Broadway hereafter, both on the legitimate stage and in motion pictures. Her double appearance will undoubtedly cause her to rise in popularity, if such a thing is possible.

Miss Sindelar was formerly well known on the speaking stage, her last appearance being with Al Woods in "The Girl in the Taxi."

THREE KILLED IN THEATRE ACCIDENT

Three men were instantly killed and a fourth was mortally injured by a fall of part of the foundation of the new Flatbush Theatre, between Flatbush and Church avenues, Brooklyn.

The theatre is being built by the Borough Operating Company, of which Antoine Newberger is president. It is to cost $200,000 and will be one of the finest motion picture houses in the East.

“Pauline” Entertains Publisher

MISS PAULINE, whose Eclectic "Perils" are beginning to electrify the country, entertained William Randolph Hearst, the publisher, at the Jersey City studios of Pathé Frères recently, and afforded Mr. Hearst an excellent opportunity of seeing first-hand the making of one of the numbers in the Eclectic serial.

The accompanying picture shows Mr. Hearst intently watching the operations of the camera-man and the activities of Charles Gasnier, the head Pathé director, supervising the taking of one of the scenes in "The Perils of Pauline."

The experience proved such an interesting one to the newspaper owner that he extended his visit to take in all the departments of the big studio before he took his departure.

EXHIBITORS CONFER ON BUILDING CODE

At the regular Friday meeting on April 3 of the Philadelphia Local, M. P. E. L., the new state building code and standards for motion picture theatres was discussed. The set of standards is being compiled by the Pennsylvania Department of Labor and Industry, and is expected to be enacted into law at the next session of the Legislature.

In order that the picture interests should be represented, Commissioner John Price Jackson named the following committee to confer with him: Edgar A. Weimer, State Building Code Commission, Lebanon; W. C. Beatty, Pittsburgh Exhibitors' League; Samuel F. Wheeler, Philadelphia Exhibitors' League; S. B. Dies, Chief of the Bureau of Building Inspection, Pittsburgh; Chief Clark, Bureau of Building Inspection, Philadelphia; W. H. Hoffman, architect, Philadelphia; W. T. Stewart, American Seating Company, Philadelphia; C. Harry Kain and Maxwell H. Hite, engineers, Harrisburg; John H. Walker and Lew R. Palmer, Department of Labor and Industry, Harrisburg. Mr. Palmer was elected chairman.

The committee has met once and formulated tentative standards which will be submitted to all parties interested.
EDITOR'S NOTE.—It is the desire of “The Motion Picture News” to include under this heading novel advertising ideas, successful schemes in the management, decoration and equipment of the theatre—everything, in fact, done by the exhibitor to stimulate his trade. We invite every exhibitor to write us about any new enterprise he has; also to come to us for advice or information along any line.

Address: Editor, “The Motion Picture News,” 220 West Forty-second Street, New York City.

BEING ON THE LEVEL WITH HIS PUBLIC

THE exhibitor is in business to make money, of course. But he is also in business to make friends. Without the latter, the former will be disastrously scarce.

And there is no surer way an exhibitor can gain the friendship of his patrons than by convincing them that he is willing to let them know just what his pictures are really worth before he takes their money.

H. G. Ballou, the manager of the Olymipian Theatre, Madison and Fourteenth streets, Seattle, Washington, does this in a manner that is both worthy imitation. Every week he sends out a letter to his people announcing the program in detail of the coming week.

The remarkable thing about this letter is the amazing frank manner in which he tells the Olympian patrons which pictures are good and which are—and not so good—concealing no faults, and letting his program draw the crowd on its own merits.

For instance:

Of a slow and conventional Western, he says, “Western drama that might be worse.”

Again he broadens them to it, to use the vernacular, by warning them that another is “just so-so.”

About a third he is non-committal, merely remarking, “It’s a farce about a rural brach of promise suit,” in a “Don’t blame me if you don’t like it” tone.

But how concise and epigrammatic Mr. Ballou can be about a good picture! No superlatives. No adjectival ravings. No half-pages of press-agent’s English.

“If you don’t laugh you’ve forgotten how.”

That’s how matter-of-fact Mr. Ballou is about the merits of his best stuff. It’s convincing. The ring of truth is in those sentences. You’ll take that man at his word, if you’re a patron of his.

Any exhibitor can do the same. Why not try it?

A BUSINESS MEN’S MATINEE

RAIN was pouring down in torrents. The Minneapolis streets were miniature rivers. Miss Cora Castritious, proprietor of the Mazza Theatre, 124 Hennepin avenue, stood in the entrance to the house, speculating as to the devastation the storm would cause her box-office receipts for the day. The show was not to begin for another hour, and the sun was securely hidden behind deep banks of clouds.

Four men came out of a restaurant adjoining the theatre. While one of them was adjusting his umbrella, Miss Castritious heard him say:

“Why the dickens isn’t there some place to go on a day like this, where a fellow can sit and smoke and take a little rest. I get enough of the office without spending half of my noon hour inside it.”

The next morning a neatly-printed sign, almost the size of a one-sheet, confronted passersby from its frame of burnished brass. It read:

“Business Men’s Performance, from 12 until 2. Smoking permitted in any part of the house.”

“I was disappointed at first,” explains the progressive woman exhibitor. “The receipts didn’t run over $1.50 or $2. Two days later I was tempted to abandon the idea. But if the man whom I had overhead wanted some place to go for recreation and amusement during the noon hour, there must be others. Minneapolis has hundreds of office employees. I decided to continue the twelve o’clock opening for another week.”

“It has come to be one of the most popular attractions in the vicinity of the theatre. Men came, few in numbers at first, and then told others. Very few women and children are down town at the noon hour, and those who do patronize the business men’s performance don’t mind the smoking. They seem to understand that the hours from 12 until 2 o’clock are dedicated to the comfort and pleasure of male office workers.”

“BOWLING” BUSINESS

CONVERTING a neighborhood fad into box-office receipts has been successfully carried out by F. F. Bruemmer, who, with his brother, William Bruemmer, owns the Idle Hour Theatre, 417 Eleventh avenue, Milwaukee.

Many of the patrons of the theatre, essentially a community house, are bowling fans. Several clubs have been organized, and a tournament was started recently. Both brothers entered into the scheme, and were instrumental in organizing one of the competing clubs. Frank Bruemmer was elected to the captaincy of the club to which he belonged, and the name was changed to the Idle Hour Theatre Club.

Rivalry became keen as the tournament progressed. Evenings when the games were being played the scores by frames were telephoned to the theatre, slides were hastily lettered, and the audience was kept in constant possession of almost every detail of the contests.

Bruemmer realized the advertising advantages for the theatre should his club be victorious. His men became more enthusiastic as the season shortened to a few remaining games, and almost nightly practice sessions became a feature of the Idle Hour Club activities in the tournament.

This extra effort brought victory to the exhibitor and his club. They rolled a total score far in excess of their final competitor, with the result that the name of the Idle Hour Theatre has become synonymous with those of the most expert of the leaders in the popular neighborhood sport.
HIS LOBBY IS A DIRECTORY OF STARS

Photographs of stars in every program service adorn the lobby walls of the Crystal Theatre, Minneapolis. The Crystal has the Mutual program exclusively.

"Perhaps it does seem funny," said Harry Green, proprietor, "but it adds materially to the attractiveness of the theatre, and I have found that many of my patrons have favorites in stars appearing in other programs. The fact that they do not appear in pictures run in the Crystal is made evident by a large poster, reading; 'Mutual Program Only.' The photographs attract them into the lobby, and to a closer inspection of the posters, and quite a percentage of my receipts is traceable to this.

And the people seem to appreciate it, too. Some of them are such ardent fans that they grab at an opportunity to study their favorites in other films at close range. I have no hesitation in telling them where films containing these stars can be seen. It proves to them that we have a policy of 'live and let live.' Incidentally it imbibes in them a more friendly feeling toward the Crystal."

PROTECTION FOR EXCHANGES

Protection against exhibitors who fail to pay for film service has long been a problem to exchange managers.

Although the number of exhibitors who take advantage of an exchange in this manner are few, the aggregate loss in rentals in a year mounts to quite a sum.

The managers of the Mutual, Universal and General Film Company exchanges in one central western city have formed a working agreement for protection against such loss. Should an exhibitor receiving service from the Universal exchange fail to remit by Tuesday of the week following his default, the managers of the other two exchanges are notified by telephone. The plan has never failed to bring about a prompt settlement of an account for delivery of film from either of the remaining two exchanges to which the defaulted may apply, and delivery of film is withheld until notification is given that the original account has been paid.

WHAT TIME IS IT?

Flashing the time of day on the screen between each picture is the novel idea practiced by some of the motion picture theatres in London.

Anyone who has a business appointment or is leaving town, and wants to while away an hour or two in the meantime at a picture show, would be inclined to patronize such a theatre in this country, if there were one.

"Who Sold the First Feature Here?"

Men Say That Charles ("Feature") Abrams Has This Distinction—Anyway the Other Fellow Will Have a Hard Time Proving the Contrary

When feature buyers bring their families to New York to show them the sights there is one man they rarely fail to gaze at or talk with after they have visited the Aquarium, Grant's Tomb, the Zoological Gardens and Wall Street. This man is George Dixon, Mysterious Billy Smith, Andy Walsh and Bob Fitzsimmons.

Later on he again joined forces with Adam Kessel in Kessel's Fulton Street Exchange and from there went to the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company where he was engaged by the various manufacturers to sell their films on the road. It was while he was out for I. C. Oes of the Great Northern Film Company that he incidentally sold his first feature, the first to be sold in the United States. This was the "Life of Buffalo Bill" in four reels. He later sold for P. P. Craft, who had bought it from I. C. Oes, "The Temptations of a Great City," another multiple-reel subject. At this time he got from thirty to sixty cents per foot.

In the fall of 1911 with I. C. Oes, Joseph R. Miles, Charles Bauman and Adam Kessel, the latter the American agent for the Ambrosio and Itala films, he organized the Great Northern Special Feature Film Company, and since that time he has sold between three and four million feet of film for that company.

Always a man seeking new ways to do old things and ways to make difficult things easy, he was the originator of the three and six sheet posters, the three-folder lobby frame, the folded herald and the use of still photographs for advertising purposes in the motion picture business. If he has not given you a gold penknife or a monogram belt buckle there is something peculiar about you.

Abrams believes in features. He believes in their present and future supremacy.

"The short subjects, the thousandfooters, will be used in those houses using pictures and vaudeville," he says. "The long subjects, five, six, seven and eight reels will be used in the larger houses where fewer shows and bigger prices predominate. For the general run of picture theatres the four-and-a-half-reel program with features included is and will be the demand."

PICTURE MAKES GOOD

"The Three Musketeers," a production of the Film Attractions Company, was well received at Loew's Broadway Theatre, New York, recently. Leo Rosengarten, the president of the Cosmos Features Company, with offices in the Leavitt Building, New York, states that the film has been booked widely throughout the country.
British Patents
The above patent covers a product composed of manganese oxide, zinc oxide, brass filings, and viscous silicate of soda, all molded into rods or blocks, which may be of circular form and may be baked for hardening.
The above patent is an addition to the British Patent 15,027 of 1913 for the well-known Dufay process, also called "Diotochrome."
37,747. Lighting Studios. A. C. Adams.
37,793. Colouring Kinematograph films, etc. P. E. Stow.
The above patent covers a method of coloring kinematograph films and the like and consists in printing on the film from a second film on which photographic images have been produced and treated with a dye or color.
Each exposure of the film to be colored is projected upon a glass screen, and all but the part to be colored is blocked out by the painting with a non-actinic paper, or in other manner. This image is then illuminated by a beam from a white parabolic mirror and photographed to the same scale as the original positive film upon a second film in a camera.
The film is developed and treated with a bichromate solution which renders the parts of the film containing the silver image insoluble, after which the transparent parts are dissolved away with hot water.
The film may also be produced by photographing or printing through an opaque stencil of the same size as the positive film. The film thus formed is passed through a suitable dye and pressed in correct register into contact with the kinematograph film to be colored. The machine shown is somewhat complicated, as is the whole process, but little can be said until the product obtained by the process in question is shown.

Trusts and Patents
Below is a copy of the bill introduced in Congress by Representative P. B. Campbell, of Kansas, on March 20, proposing that all patents and copyrights controlled by a so-called trust shall be declared forfeited by the Government:

"A bill suspending the patent and copyright laws of the United States when a patent or copyright or any article or product protected by patent or copyright is wholly owned, used, or leased by any trust or monopoly in violation of the Act of July second, eighteen hundred and ninety, entitled 'An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and all Acts amendatory thereto.'

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) whenever any letters patent issued by the United States, or any article, commodity, compound, device, mechanical appliance, or machine protected by patent, or (b) any copyright issued by the United States, or any article, musical composition, musical instrument, or device for reproducing music or musical composition, or any picture, book, pamphlet, or any other work of literature or art protected by copyright, is wholly owned, leased, or controlled by any individual, firm, association, syndicate, corporation, or combination which is engaged in any vocation, business, or enterprise in violation of the law of Congress or of any State prohibiting, restraining, or regulating trusts, monopolies, or combinations which operate in restraint of trade, the right to any protection under the patent or copyright laws of the United States shall cease and terminate.

"Section 2. That it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States or any United States district attorney for any district of the United States to institute or cause to be instituted suits in law or in equity when the facts shall warrant such suit or suits, as provided in this Act, in any circuit court of the United States where the patent or copyright referred to in section one of the Act is owned, leased, used, or controlled or the articles or products referred to in section one are manufactured, used, produced, or sold in violation of this Act.

"Section 3. That the final judgment or finding of any circuit court of the United States that any letters patent or copyright, or any article, compound, commodity, device, mechanical appliance, machine, or any article, musical composition, musical instrument, or device for reproducing music or musical compositions, or picture, book, pamphlet, or any other work of literature or art protected by letters patent or copyright, is owned, leased, used, or controlled by any individual, firm, association, syndicate, corporation, or combination engaged in any vocation, business, or enterprise in violation of any law of Congress or of any State prohibiting, restraining, or controlling trusts, monopolies, or combinations which operate in restraint of trade shall operate as a forfeiture or cancellation of such letters patent or copyright.

"Section 4. That this Act shall be in force and effect from and after its approval by the President."

A MARY PICKFORD WEEK

Raymond Pawley, treasurer of the Famous Players’ New York Exchange, and the manager of the Lyric Theatre at Asbury Park, has just completed a strictly Mary Pickford week at his theatre. No other films beside those in which Mary Pickford appear were shown. The experiment met with great success.

This is one of the first times, if not the first, that a film actress has been put on a theatre repertoire. Only one piece was shown at each performance.

Among the productions were, "Tess of the Storm Country," and "Hearts Adrift," "Caprice," "In the Bishop’s Carriage," and "A Good Little Devil."

THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Exhibitors Combat High License

Sioux City, Ia., Theatre Owners Complain Large Houses Have Advantage Under Present System—Investigation Ordered

Sioux City, Ia., April 7.

FOLLOWING a complaint of Maurice Fox, manager of the Isis Theatre in this city, that the motion picture theatre license was too high, Mayor Smith has ordered an investigation. It is expected all the theatre managers in the city will be called into a conference in the next few days to confer with the city council on the matter.

Mr. Fox asserted that the $50 annual charge for 5-cent houses and the $75 charge for 10-cent houses was unjust, because the large theatre had the advantage.

"When the ordinance was made you had two or three houses here and they thrived," said Mr. Fox. "Now you have one or two more and they are all doing poor business."

The increase came because people knew a good thing, I take it," said Councilman Healy.

"When one fellow makes a success at a thing everyone else thinks he can do the same," explained Mr. Fox.

"But," he continued, "the point I want to make is that the small theatre loses on this license system. I would suggest that for a house with 350 seats the charge should be $35. A house with 400 seats should pay $40, and so on up, the price being regulated at 10 cents a seat a year. A house with 1,500 seats should pay $150."

"It’s the high cost of living story over again," ventured Councilman Healy. "But government is costing more and more, and perhaps we might take the present minimum figure and grade the costs upward, according to the number of seats."

"But it is the minimum figure we are protesting against," objected Mr. Fox. "The picture men are starving to death and there are lots of empty seats."

The license question is expected to be settled in a few days, but motion picture managers are gathering their forces to see that they win their point.

Exposition Space in Demand

Entire Main Floor Already Sold—Many Large Companies Plan Exhibit at Grand Central Palace in June

TO judge by the number of corporations which have secured space at the coming Exposition of Motion Picture Art, to be held in the Grand Central Palace, New York, June 8-13, the affair should be a success. The amount of space already reserved more than fills the main floor. The following with their exhibits have already signed their contracts:

The New York Edison Company, electric lighting exhibit; the United Electric Light and Power Company; reception booths of the manufacturers furnishing the General Film Co.’s program; the Mutual Film Corporation, showing their releases and a reception booth for their players to entertain visitors; Ernemann Photo Kino Company, the Imperator projecting machine, printing machine and home projector; the Nicholas Power Company, the Powers projecting machine; the Precision Machine Company, the Simplex projecting machine; the Gaumont Company, reception booth; H. W. Johns-Manville Company, asbestos booths; Wyanock Publishing Company, lobby display; the “Dramatic Mirror,” reception booth; Motion Picture Apparatus Company, theatre equipments; United States Printing & Lithographing Company, lithographs; Picture Theatre Equipment Company, picture theatre supplies; “Motion Picture Magazine”; the Stereo Advertising Company, Stereopticon machine; Koering & Mathiesen. Excello arc lamp exhibit; the “Morning Telegraph” Co., a publicity and reception booth; Bland Adjustable Display Frame Company, lobby frames; World Film Corporation; the Novelty Slide Company, slides; H. C. Miller Lithograph Company; lithographs; the Pathéscope Company, home projecting machine; the Dragon Feature Film Company, reception booth and exhibit; the G. H. Masten Decorating Company, decorators of theatre booths; the Famous Players, the Vitagraph Company, Schubert Feature Film Company, Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, presenting strong booth attractions; Cameron Projecting Machine; Warner’s Features.

EXAMINE OPERATORS

Three hundred members of an independent operators’ union in New York, have applied for admission into the American Federation of Labor. They are being examined by the Boston Motion Picture Exhibitors Union, to see if they are worthy to receive a charter. William Franke, of the Boston organization, is doing the quizning.
FILM CONDITIONS IN WISCONSIN

Feature Booking Now a Problem Owing to Demand for Short-Length Film and a Diversified Program

—"A Feature House in Every City," Suggested As a Remedy—A Leading Exhibitor's Opinion of Situation

A n actual incident, duplicated, according to the booker, in three Wisconsin cities of considerable population, best exhibits film conditions in that state and adjoining territory. He tells this experience: "I had just started out to book feature film for a newly established exchange. My first prospect was the proprietor of a downtown theatre. He let me rave for fifteen minutes about the wonderful qualities of several recent productions and then said: "No, I can't use them." I argued and pleaded, trying to convince him that his patrons would jam the doors to see these films. But he stood by his first decision. Then I asked why he would not consider them.

"Well," he answered, "my patrons demand a diversified program. They want short-length film. Two reels is the most they will stand. Any feature over that length would not bring money. You see, many of them are business men, traveling men from the hotels, women shoppers and school children. The time they have to spend in this theatre is, generally speaking, limited. Many of them do not remain to see an entire show. That's why I never run anything over two reels.""

The same argument was met by the booker in two other cities. In fact, the trend of conditions throughout the state appears to be for class theatres. There are two elements of theatre-going people. One element are those people who have but short periods of time to spend in theatres. The other are those who have more leisure, and who incline toward feature productions bordering on the quality of legitimate theatrical shows.

A CANVASS of the leading exhibitors of the principal cities in the state confirms this statement. Practically every exhibitor who has studied the situation, the better to analyze his own method of procedure in protecting his investment and future development, endorses the general opinion.

Wisconsin exhibitors, like those in almost every other section of the country, are studying their respective patrons night and day to determine just what style of film productions will be most satisfactory to them.

"A feature house in every city," is the final opinion. There are some sections of the state that will accommodate more than one straight feature theatre. This is particularly true of Madison, Milwaukee, La Crosse and others of twenty-five thousand population and over. The feature theatres are, of course, supplementary to those showing single-reel productions.

The future of the latter is definitely established. It is the future of the theatre that is in question at the present time.

What kind of feature productions will pay? How should they be handled? What admission prices will the public pay? These and other questions of a like nature, all concerning the future welfare of the industry, are part of the present disorganized and practically theoretical movement to solve the question.

It is almost impossible to make a definite and tangible analysis of the situation. Opinions vary according to locality. The wisdom of adopting throughout the state a standard admission price of ten cents for not more than five reels is another bugaboo against the welfare of the feature-film theatre.

THERE is considerable speculation as to whether people will pay more to see feature productions than a single-reel, diversified program. Some argue that the public will pay more, providing the features are exceptionally well produced. At the moment, it seems, there are not enough really big feature productions on the market to permit of a test case.

O ne of the foremost exhibitors of the state controlling several theatres, is willing and anxious to try to solve the problem. He investigated the manufacturers' market recently, and then abandoned the idea temporarily, at least, because he discovered that there were only a few feature productions available that would be of assistance to him in testing his theory. This is one of the biggest stumbling blocks before the exhibitors who favor distinctively feature theatres. The exhibitor who would lead the movement if he could get the right kind of productions explains:

"There is an abundance of feature films to be had. But they are not of the kind that will support a feature theatre. A feature production, to be successful, and to be of sufficient merit and quality to command a higher price than the theatre having a diversified program, must be produced slowly and carefully. It must have a perfection of detail, a superiority of plot and action, not commonly found in the ordinary production, if it is to command a higher price and maintain a house's patronage."

"Many that I looked at during two weeks that I spent in the East recently had every indication of having been slapped together hastily, and with no respect for the exhibitor. I am willing to pay a feature service rental of $500 or more a week, if I can get what I want. But features cannot be made with the same speed that characterizes the production of single-reel subjects."

"There are some features, of course, that are unusually good. And I know that I could charge twenty-five and fifty cents and make money. But I could book all of this style and not have a supply that would last more than two months. I believe that the only time that permanently established feature theatres—charging genuine feature prices—will be practical is when some manufacturer, or group of manufacturers, band together with the determination to spend sufficient time and money in their making."

THERE seems to be no fear that feature theatres will in any way detract from the patronage of houses showing short-length subjects. In fact, some of the exhibitors contend that it will improve their business. This contention is based on the assertion that there are many of the wealthier class, who do not now patronize picture houses, but who would do so if there were one or more theatres playing high-rental subjects of great merit, at legitimate prices. These people then would become educated to the qualities of interest and entertainment provided in picture theatres, and would, in turn, have no compunction against patronizing the smaller-priced houses.

This suggestion, however, would not apply anywhere excepting in cities of considerable size, and then the increased profits would be chiefly noticeable at matinees and not at the evening performance.

From general observation and discussion of the question it appears that the final solution of the problem of permanent feature theatres rests with the manufacturers. When the time arrives that will find a sufficient supply of meritorious feature productions available for exhibition every day in the year, without the necessity of "repeaters" or the sandwiching in of single-reel subjects, the bookers will have little difficulty in finding a market in Wisconsin.

Vol. IX April 18, 1914 No. 15

Unite! Co-operate! Fight!

The censorship of motion pictures is to-day the issue of supreme importance to every manufacturer and every exhibitor in the United States.
Upon the defeat of the censorship movement depends the prosperity, the salvation of the motion-picture industry.
At the present moment the Mutual Film Company is waging the fight to protect the industry against the plots of predatory politicians, against the raids of grafters, against the meddlesome and pestilential activities of prudes and so-called “reformers,” single-handed.

But the cause is not alone the cause of the Mutual.
It is the cause of the entire motion-picture industry.
Every producer in this country owes a debt of gratitude to the Mutual for the splendid fight it has made thus far.
Every exhibitor owes the Mutual a debt of gratitude for making his interest its own in this crisis.
And every manufacturer of motion pictures should, in self-defense, rally to the support of the Mutual and combat the censorship peril shoulder to shoulder with them.

If the battle is lost, it means that where one, two or half a dozen states now have censorship laws, practically every state in the Union will force the producers to run the gauntlet of regulation and high license fees.
The cost to producers in the past of cutting and amending films to conform with the mandates of the censors should awaken a realization of what such a condition, on a national scale, would mean.

Multiply these expenses by the license fees charged in every state upon every picture—as they inevitably would be—and the situation becomes positively appalling.

It is high time for manufacturers to exchange short-sighted indifference for righteous indignation.
It is high time that they should forget petty jealousies and professional rivalries and unite to defend themselves against the bigot and the “bayman” who alike regard them as legitimate victims.

R AISE the slogan, “No Censorship!”
Adopt the battle-cry of the early republic, when it was still fighting for recognition of its own independence, “Millions for defence, but not one cent for tribute!”
Spend the money it will cost you in license fees if censorship triumphs to save yourself from such taxation, and you will feel the satisfaction of the wise investor, not the impotent rage of the robber’s victim.
Teach the Ancient and Dishonorable Order of Grafting Politicians that neither with a state censor board nor a national censor board as their tools can they plunder and loot the motion-picture manufacturer at will.
Teach them, once and for all time, that no legitimate business will pay the political crook for the privilege of exercising its sovereign right to exist and prosper.
Unite! Co-operate! Fight!

What Is News?

We beg leave to call attention to the news value of the reading pages of this issue. We ask the readers to weigh them one by one and estimate their value as a whole.
There are two kinds of news, as every journalist knows—first-hand news and second-hand news.
It is a simple matter to fill a publication with type—to give it an appearance of reading value. It is also an easy matter to get second-hand news. You can clip it, and it is sent to you. A fake date-line and a “from our special correspondent,” or “by special wire,” or “special cable” does the trick.

But it isn’t news. There is but one way to get the real news, the news of value, and that is to go out and get it—first-hand and fresh. It is expensive and difficult. But there is no other way.
The article by Mr. Saxe in this issue we had to go out and get. So with all other feature articles. And so we will continue to do.
Just now we are effecting an editorial plan, shortly to be announced, through which we shall be able to sound—each week if necessary—the nation-wide sentiment of this industry upon any question that may deeply concern it.
We shall be able to give real market news each week from everywhere.
It is a big journalistic move—new to this field. Watch for the announcement of it.

Censorship News from Everywhere

That the censorship "lid" is on in Pittsburgh, Pa., Charles S. Hubbard, director of the Department of Public Safety, has appointed four policewomen whose especial duty will be to censor all films that are to be exhibited in the city. Special provision is made for such a board in the year's budget. Mayor Joseph G. Armstrong announced in his statement recently on the progress of the administration that the policy will be "censoring, even to the amount of over-scrupulousness."

"The first work of the police women," said the mayor, "will be to visit, in company with select service men, all of the picture houses in the city and bring to the attention of the management what are the ideas of the administration as to the manner in which they should conduct these places of amusement."

"My own idea of the matter," went on Mayor Armstrong, "is that no picture which depicts crime should be permitted to be spread upon the canvas. There is vast amount of good in the world, and these places, which I regard as children's theatres, should be made places of education and pure amusement."

Censorship for Capital

A censorship board with power to review all plays and motion pictures that are destined for exhibition in the national capital is being demanded by various organizations in Washington, D.C.

It is the purpose of those at the head of the movement to induce, if possible, the commissioners to appoint a competent board of censorship, which board is to be charged with the duty of censoring all plays and motion pictures exhibited for presentation before Washington audiences. The plan contemplates the elimination from the stage and the screen of all portraits, either dramatic or in films of caricature, burlesque, society "types," and race or color, news or otherwise, and to bar all local theatres all plays or pictures containing lines or other features derogatory to religion or religious observances.

In the last two years the appointment of a board of dramatic censors in the District of Columbia was sought, but the commissioners at that time, acting on the opinion of the then corporation counsel, held they had not the power or authority to appoint a board.

The National Anti-Defamation League, through its Washington branch, has asked for the co-operation of other similar organizations in the effort.

The league, whose local officers include Simon Wolf, president, and Rabbi Abraham Simon, secretary, has enlisted the aid of the Men's Christian Association and the Washington Truth Society in the effort to bring about the appointment of such a board. Committees representing the league and the Washington Truth Society have been named to act with the commissioners of the District of Columbia, and the appointments of a similar committee by the Y. M. C. A. is expected.

Houston Wants Paid Censors

Houston, Texas, is now threatened with a paid motion picture censor. The present board of censors has found the problem of looking after all the pictures in the city and keeping a watch on all the theatres too big for them. There are ten motion picture theatres in the city, and Mr. Stude, the chairman, has estimated that to visit them all and see the programs would require ten hours' work a day. F. S. Gage and J. J. Seigefeld are his assistants on the board.

He requests the appointment of a police official to act as censor, with power to call for their advice whenever he deems it necessary, complaints of film and pictures are made to the police in the case of objectionable acts at the theaters.

A Dangerous Censorship Law

The exhibitors of the Argentine Republic, as well as buyers and importers of films in the South American state, are threatened with a law now under consideration by the Argentine congress, which would prohibit the introduction of films, the exhibition of the pictures, or the portrayal of scenes of divorce, or the dissemination of news and stories of children or marriage, and the closing of the places of business, if violated.

All pictures that are immoral, subversive of patriotism, or of public order, or that represent scenes or acts of cruelty are forbidden. Importers exchange and importers who show them are subject to a fine of $500 to $5,000, the destruction of the offending picture, and a possible imprisonment of from 15 to 20 years.

The worst feature of the total censors' bill, however, is that it affects one-half of the fines collected in each case to the theatre employee or person such the audience who gives the government information of such a violation.

This puts a premium on graft and blackmail. That it emanates from "The Legion of Honor," a society for the protection of public morality, is a disgrace to the society. It is to be hoped that the Argentine legislators will promptly reject it, as it should be rejected.

Gadsden, Ala., Wants Censors

The censorship fever has spread to the little town of Gadsden, Ala. After much effort, the society women of the community have persuaded the town council to consider a petition for the establishment of a board of censors, who shall have authority over the motion pictures shown in the town, and the vaudeville as well. The town council, for some reason, is reluctant to act on the petition, and Gadsden is still using for a censorship board.

Spanish Exhibitors Up in Arms

Film censorship in Spain, and particularly in the province of Catalonia, of which Barcelona is the capital, has become so rigid that exhibitors and manufacturers are preparing to take energetic measures to resist it.

Acting apparently, on the request of the Society for the Protection of Children and the clergy Andrade, the governor of the province, said, "El Mundo Cinematografico," issued a formal warning to the manufacturers and exhibitors against making or distributing films treating divorce, marital infidelity, theft, murder, ridicule of authority, and such themes, in any way, even when the aim and end of the picture was a moral one.

The governor's manner was so imperious that the men became convinced that their interests were in grave danger. They have already issued a statement reminding the government that the motion picture industry is an important one and stating that the revenues derived from it are of great national importance, and declaring that they propose to defend their rights.

Hamburg Exhibitors Petition

The Exhibitors' Association of Hamburg, Germany, have addressed a petition to the senate asking that the municipal censorship of films at Hamburg be made more lenient, or at least that the decision of the General censor at Berlin be extended to cover their city.

Oppose Indiana Board

The Socialists party organization in Indiana has come out strongly against the proposal to establish a state board of motion picture censors. The bill was started rolling by the Indianapolis Board, following which
IN THE EDUCATIONAL FIELD

California Board of Education Adopts Films for Use in Schools—Pictures Supplant Textbooks in Houston, Tex.—New York and Chicago to Have Motion Picture Theatres Exclusively for Children

A motion picture manufacturing company has filed its certificate of incorporation with the secretary of state at Albany, N. Y., and will be known as the Smallwood Film Corporation. It is incorporated for $100,000. The new company will take over the business of the United States Film Company, which Arthur N. Smallwood was general manager.

It will specialize in the making and distribution of industrial and educational subjects, a line endeavor in which the United States Film Company is a pioneer. A sky-light studio and a duplex project for pictures are now under way. The company will, in addition to making national and educational subjects, produce feature pictures, but only upon special order from state right-writers.

Every family will be offered, so that all that the state right man need do is to finish his scenario and produce his titles. The company will not release features of its own make, but will rest content with making industrial and dramatic subjects to order.

The original United States Film Company, with which Mr. Smallwood has been identified as its secretary, was organized early in 1913 in Cincinnati, Ohio, and was a member of the old Motion Picture Alliance. Mr. Smallwood will be treasurer and general manager of the new corporation.

California School Plan

The California State Board of Education has approved a plan to install motion picture projection machines in the schools of California and make them a medium of instruction. Frances E. Cheweth, a member of the board from Bakersfield, Cal., is the author of the plan.

The expense of the outfits will in all probability be borne by the individual districts. The subjects for use will be selected by the state board and distributed to the schools.

As soon as the plan has been worked out in all its details, arrangements will be made for the installation of machines, so that next fall will undoubtedly see every school in California equipped with facilities for teaching through motion pictures.

Pictures Supplant Textbooks

Motion pictures will be substituted at once for some of the textbooks now in use in the Fannin School, at Houston, Texas. The introduction of films into the schools of the city has met with the approval of the school board, and orders have been given for the immediate wiring of the entire Fannin School for a projection line.

Films Fight White Plague

The war against tuberculosis is being carried on in New York, N. Y., in a spirited fashion with the aid of motion pictures. Four theatres in the City of Churches—Loew's Federal, the Oxford, the Hanover and the Arena—are now showing reels, in connection with the Committee for the Prevention of Tuberculosis of the Brooklyn Bureau of Charities.

These are "The Price of Human Lives," "The First Case," "A Curable Disease" and "The Awakening of John Bond." The hospitals and tuberculosis associations have introduced them into several other Brooklyn theatres, until the lessons of the reels have been taught to every motion picture patron in the institutions. A bright future is one object of the campaign.

Children's Matinees in Omaha

"Children's Matinees" are a feature of the Omaha, Neb., motion picture houses. The new feature was inaugurated upon a committee of exhibitors, H. H. Goldberger, G. S. Wexler, E. R. Pramer and O. S. Finch, and the Social Service Board of the city.

These matinees pictures that are of especial interest to the boys and girls will dominate the program. They will not necessarily be educational or solely instructive, but entertaining as well. The producing firms of the country have learned the fact, and it seems probable that many other cities will follow Omaha's lead in the institution of "Children's Matinees."

Filming an Operation

A hundred and thirty-five feet of film was recently taken by the Spider Camera and Film Company in a hospital in New York City, showing an operation for appendicitis. The camera was placed at a distance of eight feet and caught the surgeons and nurses at work, although the actual operation is not shown. The main idea of the opera-tion was to show a number of skeptical doctors that the camera can place a well inNodey intteract with the operation. The time consumed was ten minutes.

More Dancing Pictures

A picture called "The Five Modern Dances" has been made by the American Photo Corporation and consists of two reels showing the correct and incorrect ways of dancing the new steps. They are taken under the auspices of the Castles, Professor A. I. and Martin Tod.

These pictures will be shown at clubs, hotels and dancing schools, but will not be released on the open market. The tangos, castle walk, one-step, bat and half, and maxixe are all demonstrated.

Approves Children's Theatres

The idea of using motion pictures as tools for teaching children has found a strong advocate in Louis J. Breitinger, chairman of the newly appointed Pennsylvania State Censors.

The Social Workers' Club, of the Quaker City, is ardently agitating the erection of children's motion picture theatres, and the Board of Censors heartily approves such theatres, but is inclined to doubt their financial success.

He urged that arrangements be made with the large industrial plants of the country to have educational films made of their buildings and processes for the instruction of children. This could be done very easily, he thought, if the manufacturers could be convinced that the production would be a paying one.

Plan Big Children's Theatre

New York and Chicago are soon to have motion picture theatres exclusively for children, if reports in circulation are true.

The proposition now on foot in Chicago contemplates the erection of a theatre that will hold 1,600 spectators, at a cost of $50,000. The admission will be limited to children under sixteen.

No details are obtainable of the children's theatre that is being urged for New York City, but it is said that one of the well-known theatrical managers is seriously contemplating the construction of such a theatre in the near future.

Japan's Schools Use Films

The motion picture and projection machine are now recognized accessories of education in all the schools of Japan. They are being used with especial success in the lower grades.

Circulating Film Library Ready

The new Bureau of Visual Instruction, University of Wisconsin Extension Division, created for the purpose of distributing films to the schools and other educational bodies in the state, has just issued a list of films now available to their subscribers.

The list includes pictures of lumbering operations, cotton growing, concrete making, historic pageants, plant growth.

A BUSINESS MENS MATINÉE

Here was pouring down in torrents. The Minneapolis streets were miniature rivers. Miss Cora Castings, proprietor of the Madison Theatre, saw the hum of the audience, stood in the entrance of the theatre, and shouting to the deputation to the storm would come to headquarters receipts for the day. The show was not to be put off another hour, and the sun was rays of golden light. Deep backstairs, four men came out of a restaurant adjoining the theatre. While one of them was adjusting his umbrella, Miss Castings heard him say:

"As the Dickens, I have some place to go on a day like this, where a fellow can sit and smoke and take a little rest. I get enough office without spending half of my noon hour inside the theatre. To start the morning a neatly-printed sign, almost the size of a one-sheet, confronts passersby from its frame of burnished brass. It reads: Men's Performance, from 2 until 2. New York City
The establishment of a motion picture department in the “Independent,” one of New York’s oldest and most widely read weeklies, marks the beginning of a new era in the life of the motion picture. It shows that the public has at last awakened to the fact that motion pictures are on the same plane with architecture, music and the drama. The new department will be known as “The Moving World.” It will be illustrated and will contain all matters of interest pertaining to the motion picture.

The Dean C. Worcester pictures of “Life in the Philippine Islands,” controlled by the Pan-American Film Company, of New York City, were enthusiastically received in Baltimore, Md., when they were exhibited at the Academy of Music.

The Poem-O-Graph Company are featuring “The Face upon the Floor,” under the management of A. E. Siegel, in Pennsylvania. The show is meeting with success there after being well received in Chicago and New York. “The Human-Voice Talking-Picture,” as it is called, is one of the novelties of a season notable for its crop of novelties.

“Trapped in the Great Metropolis” is one of the attractive New York police pictures of the year. It gives assurance that the future output of the Rolands Feature Film Company will continue to please buyers and exhibitors alike. A new production is said to be in course of preparation. Work upon it will be started at an early date.

W. C. Smith, assistant general manager of the Nichols Power Company, has returned from Chicago, Ill., where he represented his company at the Photographic Dealers’ Association annual convention. Mr. Smith reports the sale of a number of Power’s machines.

Cardinal Gibbons, who is nearing his eightieth year, walked half a mile on April 1, through a disagreeable spring rain to witness the four-reel photoplay, “The Life of Saint Patrick,” which is controlled by Philip P. Benedict, 1402 Broadway, N. Y. This feature is scoring a success and is endorsed by the clergy. The priest enjoyed the picture immensely and predicted a great educational future for the motion picture.

Ella Hall, although a girl of sixteen, has played a number of parts depicting grown persons. She is just at that age when she can be used advantageously in either juvenile or leads. Since she has been a very small child she has been on the stage, either the legitimate or on the screen. She is playing with Phillips Smalley, cartoonist, and Franklin P. Adams, “F. P. A.,” of the staff of the “New York Tribune.” “Our Mutual Girl” was sketched by Briggs, and chatted for a few moments with the man who signs his initials each day at the bottom of “The Conning Tower.”

Edwin August has left the Universal and formed the Edwin August Feature Film Company in the West, to produce multiples under his own name.

Captain Jack Bonavita, who is wintering in Florida with his troupe of lions, is anxious to get back in the picture game. Bonavita was formerly with Bostock at Coney Island, where he had charge of thirty-seven lions. It was there that he lost one of his arms after having it badly mutilated by one of his animals, but he still goes on with one arm. Bonavita is a skilled trainer and should prove a valuable asset to any film concern which uses wild animals in its productions.

The Hepworth American Film Corporation will release very shortly the four-part Florence Turner feature, “The Murdoch Trial.” Admirers of Miss Turner may put this down as her next appearance, and one of her most successful. The feature has just arrived from the Turner studio in London.

Carlyle Blackwell is temporarily a member of the Famous Players Company, now in Los Angeles, Cal.

Fred Mace will henceforth be seen in “Fred Mace Features.” Severing his connection with the Mutual, the “little feller” took possession of the studio formerly used by the Majestic in Los Angeles. Three directors have been engaged and Mace has picked a good troupe to support him in his comedy venture. According to present plans, his program will consist of two comedies a week and multiple-reel plays from time to time.

H. M. Horkheimer, president and general manager of the Balboa Amusement Company, manufacturers of “Balboa Feature Films,” is at the Astor Hotel, New York, on his way from Long Beach, California, to Europe. Mr. Horkheimer is negotiating with a number of prominent exhibitors to handle the Balboa Feature Films on exclusive State rights plan and reports having closed satisfactory contracts to that end.
Mr. Horkheimer shortly leaves for London, England, and will arrange with a firm in that city to handle the Halbro Feature Film products throughout Europe and foreign countries.

The Shuberts, the New York theatrical managers, will soon open up a hundred of their new houses for the exhibition of motion pictures. At least half this number will continue after the summer season is over. A large producing plant is being built at Fort Lee, closely adjoining that of the Eclair Company.

Virginia Pearson, who created a sensation when she appeared as the Vampire with Robert Hilliard in "A Fool There Was," has signed a contract to act for the Pathé films. She Miss Pearson recently appeared in "Nearly Married," one of the season's hits, and it is understood that she received an offer to continue her legitimate stage career with Charlotte Walker, but evidently the offer of Pathe Freres was too good to decline.

Monte M. Katterjohn, editor of the Eastern scenario department of the Universal, has collaborated with Captain Leslie T. Peacocke on a series of stories which will feature Ethel Grandin. The series is to be known as "The Love Adventures of Doris Mason" the first of which is now being produced by Ray Smallwood and will be released under the title of "The Dawn of Romance." Through an arrangement with the "Photoplay Magazine" these adventures will be published in story form in that publication each month.

"Fighting Death," a four-reel picture, the local rights for which are held by the Box-Office Attraction Company, has received much favorable comment from exhibitors. Rodman Law and Constance Bennett play the leading roles.

Sydney Ayres, of the American Company, has been made a producer to succeed Lorimer Johnston. Mr. Ayres has had considerable experience as producer on the legitimate stage and in connection with the Jack London pictures.

The Twentieth Century Feature Film Company, of No. 216 West Forty-second Street, will release in April a four-part feature, "A Cry in the Night," a sensational melodrama which has met with success abroad. One of the thrilling scenes show a convict swimming under water. This is the first time that motion pictures taken under water have been exhibited.

Jesse J. Goldburg, the secretary and publicity manager of the Life Photo Film Company, has this picture taken just after signing William Gillette for "Secret Service." Mr. Goldburg predicts great success for this picture, as well as that of "The Banker's Daughter."

Christine Mayo, leading lady for the Actua Film Company, has returned from a trip of six weeks' duration at St. Augustine, Florida, where she has been at work on a number of productions for that company. Miss Mayo is being featured in these pictures and is said to have done some excellent work.

There were a number of other companies taking pictures in the City of Flames while the Aetna Company were there and made the time pass quicker. Miss Mayo was the recipient of a number of mementos from friends made during the trip.

The "Hearts of Oak" company has returned to New York after an extended stay on the coast of Maine, where the chief scenes in the forthcoming screen version of the James A. Herne drama were made. The Mohawk Film Company, it is expected, will release the picture about April 20.

Julian M. Solomon, of Philadelphia, has left the World Film Corporation and is now with the Continental Film Company, controlling Mutual pictures in the Quaker City, at 902 Filbert street.

Mr. Solomon recently joined the World Film in the capacity of road booker.

The South Pacific Islands are the most recent bits of land to be put on the map by the motion picture camera, and Albert Blinkhorn has just acquired the sole rights to a five-reel subject dealing with the expedition specially organized to explore that quarter of the world.

Many of the scenes shown are of secluded spots, reached only by secret and almost inaccessible passages. The animal life on these islands is made up of many all but extinct species, and these have been carefully pictured. Many highly interesting incidents that took place during the course of the voyage, some quite thrilling, have also been recorded.
“A MILITANT SUFFRAGETTE”
(Pathé)
REVIEWED BY LESLEY MASON

In this five-reel photodrama the Pathé Company has accomplished the double feat of chronicling militancy a la suffragette in the course of a firmly knit, well-developed drama, and producing a picture that deserves to be called superb for its photographic merits.

Motion-picture photography at its best is typified in “A Militant Suffragette.” Of such general excellence are the pictures that the temptation to single out that feature for the first words of praise is irresistible. The sheer beauty of the outdoor scenes, on the lawns of the great English country estate, in the woods, on the lake, even in the suburban streets of the city, is of the kind that brings the half-suppressed “ohs” and “ahs” unbidden to the lips of spectators.

Without question such scenes lend as much power to a photoplay as the most thrilling spectacles—they are remembered as long and commented upon as widely as the most cleverly devised “sensations,” because they appeal to a love of beauty as universal as the fondness for thrills that characterizes everyone.

Equally emphatic praise is due the interiors. The lighting is of that perfectly adequate kind that makes the onlooker forget its importance in the picture. Cleanliness is almost everywhere present. There is neither blur nor flicker to mar an audience’s complete enjoyment of the play. Various defects in the interior photography of other photoplays are common enough to make it worth while to say that the interior photography of “A Militant Suffragette” is one of its strong points.

As for the drama, the balancing of the divided interest between Nellie Panburne, the suffragette, and Nellie Panburne, the woman in love, is admirably effected. There is no conflict, thanks to the personality and acting of the leading woman. There is no overemphasis of the suffragist theme at the expense of the romance, and vice versa.

The first glimpses one has of the girl are enough to convince one that she is the sort who would become a suffragette upon provocation, and after passing through every experience such a role offered her, would resume her normal life as a woman and devote herself to her home with the same fervor she had exhibited in behalf of “the cause.” Which is another way of saying that the actress who plays Nellie is suited in all particulars to her role. She knows how to be at once a militant and a woman.

Nowhere does the drama lag, but the romance is developed in the background until Nellie is fairly embarked upon her militant career. Thereafter it is gradually brought forward, until she learns, the moment after she has planted the bomb in Lord Ascue’s palace, that he is the unknown man who has won her heart.

Then the revulsion comes and with frenzied effort she sets herself to undo all that she has done. The suspense from the time of her discovery until Lord Ascue comes to her rescue, in his own hall, by proclaiming her his fiancee as the bomb explodes upstairs, is brilliantly heightened and sustained. The climax is indeed a climax—anticipated, perhaps, but reached by ways that keep the audience breathless and wondering until the summit is attained.

(Relecbeit)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHIELL

The second installment of the serial, which is issued every two weeks, and for which one of the cleverest advertising campaigns ever waged is in progress. The story of the picture is being written in novel form and appears in newspapers throughout the country. The review of the first installment appeared in this periodical two weeks ago.

The same cast, consisting of Pearl White, Cratie Wilbur, Paul Panzer and Francis Carlyle take part in this three-reel installment. Although there are several scenes which would bear radical improvement, the virtues of the film are sufficient to cover any small deficiencies.

The one great scene is in the wrecking of a real aeroplane in the last reel. The machine drops from a great height, careening over slowly and then hitting the ground. It does not seem possible that this was done for the camera, the work is too realistic.

A number of women, not members of the Pathé company, fainted in the filled grandstands, adding unconsciously to the vividness of the scene. It is one thing that will never be forgotten about the whole picture.

The “Perils of Pauline” is one of the best vehicles Pearl White has ever had. There are a number of comedy touches. The picture starts with her preparations for her trip around the world in company with her father’s secretary, whom her lover, Harry, fears will do her an injury.

Owen, the secretary, invites her, at the suggestion of his pal, to go with him for a ride in an aeroplane. She consents. Harry breaks the car in which they are to travel and opens the gasoline cock on his own machine. Pearl is forced to ride with Harry in the car, which has but little fuel.

When they have progressed some distance from their home the car naturally stops and it is some time before Owen, who has had the other machine fixed, can catch up, and together they go on to Hempstead.

Owen, in the meantime, has cut one of the wires on the aeroplane in which Pearl is to ride. Arriving there too late to go up, they find the machine in the air. It is this aeroplane which is wrecked in which Pearl would have been killed.

A number of excellent views are taken from an aeroplane while in the skies, showing a race between themselves and a train, and views of the surrounding country. The scenery is wildly beautiful and most fitting.
SKERRETT DINNER A "SURPRISE"

Popular General Manager of the Nicholas Power Company Never Suspected That His Friends and Associates Had Designs on Him Until Brought Face to Face with Them in Banquet Hall

At the testimonial dinner tendered to John Francis Skerrett, general manager of the Nicholas Power Company, at Mouquin’s, Sixth Avenue and Twenty-eighth Street, New York City, on Wednesday evening, April 1, the keynote of a very happy occasion was sounded when one of the speakers said that "co-operation" was the secret of the Nicholas Power Company success.

"Co-operation" is but another name for organization and it is due in great measure to Mr. Skerrett’s efforts that the splendid organization of the Nicholas Power Company has been built up and welded together.

If figures alone are necessary to prove this statement, it is sufficient to say that since General Manager Skerrett’s tenure of office, which began just a year ago, April 1, the sales of the Power’s Cameragraph have had the remarkable increase of sixty-five per cent.

The dinner was a genuine "surprise." Edward Earl, treasurer of the Nicholas Power Company and president of the Nassau National Bank of New York City, had invited Mr. Skerrett to dinner that evening and later under pretext of a business engagement hurried him from the St. Regis to Mouquin’s. When the two entered the Mouquin banquet hall, the guest of honor blinked his eyes upon some seventy friends and associates standing back of their dinner-chairs.

J. F. SKERRETT

Credit for the "surprise" as well as for the well-rounded arrangements and the harmony and goodfellowship which characterized the gathering in the Power’s Cameragraph known throughout the world.

Mr. Lang acted as toastmaster and with him and Mr. Skerrett at the speakers’ table were these business associates and friends: Edward Earl; Will C. Smith, assistant general manager; H. T. Edwards, of the Picture Theatre Equipment Company; S. S. Cassard, purchasing agent; L. W. Atwater, sales manager; Louis Mouquin and Mr. De Crenak, export manager of American Industries.

A list of songs had been prepared by Mr. Smith, and these were rendered with much enthusiasm during the course of the evening. Frank and James Saullo, of the Nicholas Power Company, received many encores for their "Cameragraph Rag," which they had composed and dedicated to Mr. Skerrett.

TEMPLAR SAXE, with his very clever imitations and songs, and Archie Gunn, with his well-known English stories, added greatly to the evening’s entertainment. Speeches were made by Dr. Jones, of the Thanhouser Company, Mr. Lowenthal, of the technical department of the Nicholas Power Company, Mr. Stiefel, and by the following who represented the journalistic press: Fred J. Beecroft, John Wylie, Harry Ennis, W. P. Milligan, P. H. Smith, T. H. Lewis and W. A. Johnston.

Mr. Skerrett in his response paid a very fine tribute to Theodore Uhlmann, superintendent of the Nicholas Power company.

A. M. KENNEDY RESIGNS

A. M. Kennedy, vice-president and general manager of the Criterion Feature Film Manufacturing Company, and formerly president and general manager of the Kennedy Features, Inc., it is announced has resigned his position with the latter company, in favor of William Helm, and disposed of the control to William Loftus, of Los Angeles.

It is stated that all obligations of the Kennedy Features, Inc., will be taken care of by Mr. Loftus within the next two weeks. Mr. Kennedy will continue in his position in the Criterion Feature Film Manufacturing Company.

COSMOPHOTO FILM LOCATES

The Cosmophoto Film Company have established offices in the World’s Tower Building, New York City, and will represent the London Film Company, Ltd., and the M. P. Sales Agency, Ltd., of London, and other English and Continental manufacturers in this country. Paul H. Cromelin is in charge of the office.
"BREWSTER'S MILLIONS"
(Lasky Feature Play Company)
REVIEWED BY LESLEY MASON

AMONG the first, if not the very first, in the field with a dashing, flashing farce comedy, backed by a reputation and based on high-comedy foundations, the Lasky Company has set the pace with "Brewster's Millions," which all their competitors must perforce follow. It is a play rich in scenic and spectacular opportunities for the camera-man. Equally rich, too, is it in potential triumphs for the stage director and the actor who can make the audience realize the exquisite comedy of the situations and feel the sparkle of the lines he cannot make them hear.

And Edward Abeles is supremely the right man in the right rôle. His first appearance on the screen as Monty Brewster effects an instantaneous change in the tempo of the play. So sudden is the shift from the delicate pathos of the introductory scenes to the brisk, exhilarating humor of Monty's career that, had it been less adroitly done, it would have been harsh and abrupt.

It is no easy task to make a thoroughly sobered audience burst into sympathetic and contented laughter in an instant. Yet that is what Abeles accomplishes before he is fairly across the room after his first entrance.

From that moment the action fairly crackles in its crispness. The actor's lines move so intelligently that one can read what he is saying. He does not need to speak; dialogue is superfluous; his face tells whatever of the story his lips leave unsaid, and the laughter flows from the audience until it rises to a climax of spontaneous applause.

Not often has so gifted, so eloquent a comedian, in the highest sense of that word, appeared on the screen. The artistry of Abeles' pantomimic performance as Monty Brewster will be remembered when the best of slapstick comedians has been forgotten.

"Brewster's Millions" has gone through its twelfth edition as a novel. "Brewster's Millions," if reports are true, made close to a million for its producers as a drama. "Brewster's Millions," as a photoplay, should repeat its success in both the other fields under the auspices of the Lasky Company. It ought to be as hard to lose money with it as it was for Brewster to lose money on "Lumber and Fuel" in "The Street."

There is a laugh in this screen production for every dollar Monty spends, yes, and for every dollar he wins, too. Every audience that witnesses it will feel as rich in enjoyment as Monty is in coin when the final scene fades from the screen. In short, "Brewster's Millions" will find many a familiar face in the supporting company. Winnifred Kingston is a delightful Peggy. Sydney Dean appeared to overact his part, yet who but such a hot-tempered individual would have made so eccentric a will as James Sedgwick made to bind Monty? There is no need to analyze the company in detail, for, after all, Monty and his millions make the play.

Every other part is a minor one, but they are uniformly well filled.

In photography, "Brewster's Millions" is quite the equal of "The Squaw Man," though there are not so many exterior scenes as in the latter drama. Many of the scenes aboard the yacht aroused the guests of Wednesday morning to hearty applause and Monty's pursuit of the Sheik and Peggy was carried out with spirit and greeted with cheers.

There is no such thing as a perfect play, on screen or stage, but "Brewster's Millions" is in the front rank of current photodramas, and certainly good enough to serve as an inspiration, if not as a model, to producers of comedies.

"THE MURDOCH TRIAL"
(Turner Films, Ltd.)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

RELEASED through Albert Blinkhorn, Florence Turner, who needs no introduction to the American public, plays the leading part, assisted by Frank Tennant in the part of Lionel Mann. The story is written and produced by Larry Trimble, who was with Miss Turner in this country. The film is 3,100 feet in length, and every inch of it is action.

The plot is dramatic, going into detective sub-plots, with here and there a considerable spicing of melodrama. G. C. Colonna, a "heavy," does much creditable work. The remainder of the cast are W. Felton, Lucy Silly, H. Winning, Eric Forbes-Robertson, and Alfred Phillips.

The scene is laid in England, the time being the present. There is sufficient cleverness of detail to keep the audience's attention to the last. A brief outline of the story follows:

Helen Storey is made an orphan upon the death of her father in India and placed in the care of his intimate friend, Murdoch. The latter realizing that the girl is worth a large sum of money, and being financially pressed, yields to his nephew's pleading and consents to use the Storey fortune.

Telling Helen that she is penniless and destroying her father's letter to her, he starts out to spend the money. The girl meets with Lionel Mann and a love affair ensues. This does not please the older man and he has a hinted word-battle with Lionel, who threatens him in the presence of others.

That night the old man is killed by his nephew, the butler witnessing the crime. The latter goes out of his mind at the sight. Lionel, seeing Helen leaning over the body, and knowing that she hated her guardian, takes the blame. Helen, believing him guilty, remains silent. The trial commences. Lionel is found to be guilty, and as sentence is being pronounced, she "confesses" that she is the murderer and is convicted.

The butler soon afterward recovers his mind and tells what he has seen. A spirited race against death takes place. The pardon arrives at the prison just in time to prevent the miscarriage of justice.

constitution, the court observes that "it cannot be said the act imposes any sort of burden upon the original shipping packages, for when the packages are broken and their contents placed upon reeds, the films have lost their distinctive character as articles of interstate commerce. . . . While the films are in use for public exhibition within a given state, they are like any other property owned and used in the state. It can make no difference that all are not consumed through use in a particular state, and such as survive are shipped into one or more other states and there similarly used, for in each instance, commerce cases where local use commences."

Against the contention that the law violates Section 10, Article I, of the Federal Constitution, the judges declare that the films in question are not imports, in the sense of the word intended by that article.

"The objection," says the opinion, "is aimed against the fees authorized by the present statute. . . . If films were imported into Ohio from foreign countries, it could not be presumed that the authorized fees would be more than absolutely necessary for executing the law. It is only when such fees are proved to be in excess of the necessary expenses and their exaction is persisted in, that judicial interference will be warranted."

Vagueness of Law Conceded

As to the vagueness of the standard the law provides the censors for the determination of the fitness of films, the court observes:

"It may be conceded that this language might have been extended by descriptive and illustrative words, and yet it is not at all certain that the act would have been any more intelligible than it is now. "It would probably have been more restrictive and its purposes more easily thwarted. In view of the range of subjects which complainants claim to have already compassed, not to speak of the natural development that will ensure, it would be next to impossible to devise language that would be at once comprehensive and automatic."

"Is it correct, then, to say that the enacted standard is insufficient? It seems to us to find analogy in many subjects of approved legislation. . . . Inevitably, discretion must be lodged somewhere, and where could it be more appropriately placed than in the administrative boards created and selected for the execution of such laws?"

In conclusion, the court declares:

"While we have considered all the objections made to the statute, it is not necessary to prolong the discussion. We are unable to find anything in the act which is opposed either to the state or Federal constitution. It follows that the application for an interlocutory injunction in each case must be denied."

"However, in order to enable the complainants to take an appeal in each of the suits directly to the Supreme Court of the United States, pursuant to Article 266 of the Judicial Code, and to apply to that court for orders of suspension only, if they so desire, we have concluded to suspend the operation of the orders of denial herein for a period of fifteen days from the date of their entry."

SHOW CITY'S GROWTH IN PICTURES

Worcester, Massachusetts, has adopted an innovation to encourage the citizens in their devotion to their home town. Motion pictures are to play the most prominent part in a campaign, which has been started by Mayor Wright.

A series of pictures will be taken of the city showing its development, its municipal methods, and its public institutions. Everything that will aid the people to realize and remember that they owe a debt to the municipality will be done.

A TYPICAL CENSORSHIP LAW

THAT every manufacturer and exhibitor in the country may know the type of censorship law with which the industry is being threatened, THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS reproduces the text of the measure now on the statute-books of Ohio. Its features speak for themselves. THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS will have occasion to discuss them later.

Every such law is a blow aimed at the very vitals of the industry. The time to act is now, not after they have begun to operate.

Here is the law:

Section 1. There is created under the authority and supervision of the industrial commission of Ohio a board of censors of the motion-picture films.

Section 2.  Each member of the board of censors shall receive an annual salary of one thousand five hundred dollars per year. Such salary and expenses shall in no case exceed the fees paid to the Ohio board of censors for examination and approval of motion-picture films.

The members of the board shall be considered as employees of the industrial commission and shall be paid as other employees of such commission are paid. The industrial commission shall appoint such other assistants as may be necessary to carry on the work of the board.

Section 3. It shall be the duty of the board of censors to examine and censor as herein provided, all motion-picture films to be publicly exhibited and displayed in the state of Ohio. Such films shall be submitted to the board before they shall be delivered to the exhibitor for exhibition.

The board shall charge a fee of one dollar ($1.00) for each reel of film to be censored which does not exceed one thousand (1,000) linear feet; for any reel of film exceeding one thousand (1,000) linear feet, the sum of two dollars ($2.00) shall be charged. All moneys so received shall be paid each week into the state treasury to the credit of the general revenue fund.

Section 4. Only such films as are in the judgment and discretion of the board of censors of a moral, educational or amusing and harmless character shall be passed and approved by such board.

They shall be stamped or designated in an appropriate manner and consecutively numbered. Before any motion-picture film shall be publicly exhibited, there shall be projected upon the screen the words "Approved by the Ohio Board of Censors" and the number of the film.

Section 5. The board of censors may work in conjunction with any censor board or boards of legal status of other states as a censor congress and the action of such congress in approving or rejecting films shall be considered as the action of the board and all films passed, approved, stamped and numbered by such congress, when the fees therefor have been paid to the Ohio board, shall be considered approved by such board.

Section 6. Ninety days after this act shall take effect no films may be publicly shown or exhibited within the state of Ohio unless they have been passed and approved by the board of the censor congress and stamped and numbered by such board, or congress as provided for herein.

Section 7. Any person, firm or corporation who shall publicly exhibit or show any motion picture within the state of Ohio unless it shall have been passed, approved and stamped by the Ohio board of censors or the congress of censors, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not less than twenty-five dollars ($25.00) nor more than three hundred dollars ($300.00), or imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than one year, or both, for each offense.

Section 8. Any person in interest being dissatisfied with any order of such board shall have the same rights and remedies as to filing a petition for hearing on the reasonableness and lawfulness of any order of such board or to set aside, vacate or amend any order of such board as is provided in the case of persons dissatisfied with the orders of the industrial commission.
SPECIAL FILM REVIEWS

"The Wedding of Prudence." (Essanay. Two reels. April 3.)—The scarcity of sub-titles is noticeable in this drama, although the few that do appear convey the meaning of the story perfectly. The period of the picture, back in the old Puritan days, is one that is seldom used for scenarios and this fact makes it all the more refreshing to see. The picture is rightly a drama, but there are many humorous parts in it which add to its interest. The photography is good throughout; some of the winter scenes are beautiful.

Prudence's father wishes her to marry Peter, a sanctimonious old Puritan. She, however, loves a younger man. Peter falsely accuses John of being a tippler and he is placed in the pillory. On the day of the wedding he is released. He goes to Peter's house and finds him intoxicated. He writes a confession supposedly to come from Peter and puts it under his wig. At the wedding he drops a cat on Peter's head, the cat pulls off his wig and the note falls to the floor. Prudence's father picks it up. He reads it and finds that Peter has a wife in England and that he is the tippler. Peter confesses, and he takes his turn in the pillory while Prudence and John are married.

"The Colonel's Orderly." (Domino. Two reels. April 9.)—An excellent drama containing some very good scenes. Burton commits a robbery in the colonel's house and blames it on Berger, who is arrested. He escapes and saves the colonel's little daughter from Indians. Burton, mortally wounded in a fight, confesses and Berger is restored to the good graces of the colonel.

"The Blood Test." (Imp. Two reels. April 2.)—A strong drama featuring King Baggot. The story seems to be a little disconnected in places, but it should be well received.

An inventor has his plans stolen by a diseased Indian. Later this man commits murder. Walter being accused, the proof of the man's guilt is found in a blood test which proves his blood to be impure.

"The Wiles of a Siren." (Kalem. Two reels. April 13.)—A fine drama featuring Carlyle Blackwell. The photography comes up to the Kalem standard; it is clear and the light effects are good. There are a few bad spots in the film, but they are few and far between.

The closing scene, that of a mission in the wilds of Africa being attacked and burned by savages and then a party of hunters coming to the rescue of the missionaries, is very well portrayed and exceptionally realistic.

"Thieves." (Domino. Two reels. April 16.)—A well-acted drama that hasn't much plot. Barr, the president of a trust company, which is on the point of failure, is called home by a telephone message from his wife saying that the house is being robbed. He arrives home in time to catch the burglars.

In his absence the directors of the company decide to take matters in their own hands without consulting Barr. Barr's secretary keeps them from taking any action by holding them off with a gun. Barr returns to the meeting, and through his influence the company is saved from ruin.

"A Man for A' That." (Essanay.)—A strong cast which has been supplied this picture, including Francis X. Bushman, Irene Warfield, Ruth Stonehouse and Bryant Washburn. The play in itself is interesting, the story has considerable originality, and the settings are pleasing.

Frank Willard, a wealthy clubman, becomes disgusted with society and determines to live among the poor, to discover whether or not there is any character, and to satisfy his curiosity. At the time he is engaged to Grace Meredith. Eventually he falls in love with a newsboy's sister, Ruth, and decides to go to his fiancée and tell her of his love for the other girl. She, however, has eloped with a foreigner. This leaves Frank and Ruth to fulfill their wishes.

"A Debut in the Secret Service." (Thanhouser. Two-reel. April 7.)—One of the series of diplomatic service stories written by Clarence Herbert New. The tales have been printed in one of the largest magazines in serial form and are well known. The cast, the same as before, is as follows: James Cruze, Flo LaBadie, Justus D. Barnes, Arthur Bauer, Frank Farrington, Nolan Gane and Dave Thompson.

Lord Trevor and his ward, Nan Trevor, are requested by Sir Edward Wray to recover some valuable papers which have been stolen from the state department. Nan immediately states that she can undoubtedly find them. Finding a clue and following it she comes upon Abdul, who is in the employ of Lord Trevor. He leads her further into the solving of the mystery by telling her of a woman he knew to be a German spy and who had stayed with him.

By using her wits Nan finds this woman and regaining the documents, returns to the state department.
"THE LAST SUPPER"
(American)
REVIEWED BY C. J. VERNAL

In this two-part sociological drama which is booked for release on April 13, the past is linked with the present. The opening scene shows Christ preaching the Sermon on the Mount and then the drama proceeds to illustrate the relation of the commandments he uttered to present-day life. In a way, it symbolizes Christ as conscience, his presence is sensed when wrong is about to be committed, and the better nature of everyone is brought out.

An especially well-grouped scene is that of the Last Supper, as painted by the celebrated Leonardo da Vinci, in which Sydney Ayres represents Christ, Jack Richardson, Judias Iscariot, Harry Von Meter as John.

During the course of the story the drunkard is turned from his life of dissipation to one of honest effort. The slovenly is awakened to a realization of his utter worthlessness. Everywhere the presence of a divine power is perceptible.

The evil in a drunkard’s home is banished by the thought of Christ, who appears as the man of Nazareth. The tempter at the threshold of the idle rich is thwarted and the Christ Man, by his presence, drives home the realization of wrong as the woman scorns her lover to remain true to the absent husband.

Innocence is not permitted to be victimized by the lust of the flesh as the quiet little voice of conscience, aroused by the proximity of “The Man of Sorrows,” averts a tragedy.

The “Thirteen Club,” a social organization devoting its energies to the promulgation of higher ideals, is unwittingly the host of a stranger, who turns out to be Christ. As they gather at the banquet-table to discuss their experiences they dissolve into Christ and the Apostles at “The Last Supper.”

ASSOCIATION ANNOUNCES DATE OF BALL

The International Motion Picture Association of Illinois announce the date of their grand inaugural ball and reception for May 14 at the Coliseum in Chicago. This organization is said to consist of over four hundred motion-picture theatre owners.

It is their intention to put this event over on a big scale and to that end they have endeavored to secure the presence of a large number of the motion-picture actors and actresses. Their announcement states that among many others to be present will be Mons. Novelli, who makes his home in Italy and appears in the Kleine-Cines films.

"LOVE AND VENGEANCE"
(Sterling)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

When this picture was shown in the Universal projection-room for the press and National Board of Censorship there was difficulty in getting into the room. Naturally the widespread publicity given the fact that Ford Sterling was with the Universal has caused a national interest in this his first production, “Love and Vengeance,” in two reels.

FORD STERLING IN HIS USUAL ROLE

It is perfectly safe to predict that this film will have a larger circulation than almost anything the Universal has yet placed on the market, and that is a large statement. Mr. Sterling’s undoubted popularity and H. Pathe Lehrman’s cleverness as a director make a combination which should be difficult to circumvent. The Universal’s statement that these two men are in a class by themselves, that they fear no competition, seems very true.

“Love and Vengeance,” the first Universal comedy, like other productions in which Mr. Sterling has been featured, contains little of a story or plot. Were there one, the film would not be half as funny as it is, for it is not the plot that attracts people with a Sterling comed.

The company supporting the principal is the photography is worthy of the company. Two men are apparently in love with the same girl. The word “apparently” is used advisedly, for both men are fickle. The feature of the “plot” is the inserts of the Vanderbilt Cup Race. The girl loves the winner of the race and poor Schmalts returns to his first love, only to receive a beating from her and to be chased through town by several “policemen.”
"The Littlest Rebel," by Edward Peple, scored one of the greatest successes ever known to the legitimate theatre, running a whole season in New York and forty weeks in Chicago.

No play from the speaking stage ever lent itself more perfectly to motion picture reproduction. No one can resist the throbs and tears and laughs and thrilling exultation of its truthful and pathetic story. It appeals with equal force to every class of picture goers—cultured or ignorant—rich or poor—young or old—upon the face of the earth.

Back of these natural advantages stands a definite idea of production which will make "The Littlest Rebel" a five-reel photo play masterpiece of surpassing excellence.

THE PRINCIPAL PARTS ARE PLAYED BY FAMOUS MOTION PICTURE PLAYERS. THERE IS NO DOUBT ABOUT THEIR ABILITY TO BRING OUT ALL THE DRAMATIC VALUES AND GIVE SATISFACTION IN THEIR WORK.

E. K. LINCOLN, star of the Vitagraph Company, one of the finest and most popular picture actors in the world, heads an organization which includes two Universal stars, an Edison lead, a Mutual director and a crack Edison cameraman. The scenes in the picture are those of the picturesque and sunny Southland described by the author. Every detail of production has been studied out with care. The original flags of battle are unfurled to the breeze once more—the genuine declaration of war is flashed upon the screen. Veteran officers of the Confederate and Federal Armies assist in directing the sensational battle scenes.

Whole troops of United States Army Regulars, a thousand uniformed men with hundreds of horses, complete cavalry, infantry and artillery equipments, arms and ammunition, are employed to furnish action, color and atmosphere to the most sublime and beautiful war story ever written.
“The Bargain’s Sacrifice.” (Biograph, Apr. 2)—A pathetic drama in which a barge, escaping from the police, finds a baby, and upon taking it to the police station, is arrested. He is rewarded by the man whose house he tried to burglarize, but is later exonerated from prison and given the care of the child.

“Dan Cupid, Assayer.” (Essanay, Apr. 2)—A musical comedy in which a young assayer is found in a Western town in love with an old miner’s daughter. The miner brings some worthless ore to the assay office, and the young assayer buys it to please the old man. Later he is rewarded by the hand of the miner’s daughter.

“Rival Collectors.” (Mebes, Splt Reel. Apr. 2)—On the same reel with “Batty Bill’s Love Affair.” Two old men are great rivals in collecting stamps. Their children are engaged. When the old men quarrel over a certain stamp, the long-expected marriage of the two young people is threatened. It ends happily, however.

“Pathé’s Weekly No. 27.” (Pathé, Apr. 2) The news is all it claims. The number, but none is worth special mention.

“Tommy’s Tramp.” (Vitagraph, Apr. 2)—A good production with touches of comedy and a fine scene of a town where a house is wholly consumed by fire. Tommy decides to be a tramp because tramps don’t have to take baths. He sets out to walk, but soon gets so cold he goes to sleep in his tree house. The house is set on fire and Tommy is rescued by a real tramp. He doesn’t mind washing, after this experience.

“The Bond of Love.” (Selig, Splt Reel. Apr. 3)—On the same reel with “In Amadil, Italy.”

“Bunny’s Scheme.” (Vitagraph, Apr. 3)—Joan’s scheme to get a romance out of her friend, a small thief. In this sparkle, Bunny wants Flora to marry him, but she has already eloped and is now on her way to the West. Joan finally forces her to accept a clever scheme.

“A Man’s Faith.” (Lubin, Apr. 3)—A drama with a heart like that of a timbered, couple, both intemperate and irritable, find it hard to get along together. The man’s faith in women is almost entirely shattered when a minister brings the two together again.

“The Coming of Sophie’s Mamma.” (Essanay, Apr. 2)—Scene in a Mexican village, and the removal of an old cactus which had shaded the man’s house for many years.

“Tangled Web.” (Pathé. Two reels. April 3) Fraser, penniless and in debt, robs the father of the girl whom he is engaged, in order to pay his debts. Later he is found out and he kills himself on his wedding eve.

“Bill Tell, Pawnbroker.” (Biograph, Splt reel. Apr. 4)—On the same reel with “Skelety’s Birthday.” (Biograph, Split reel. Apr. 4)—On the same reel with “Bill Tell.” A funny comedy in which bad eggs play an important part.

“The Cruel Crown.” (Selig, Two reels. Apr. 6) Bill (Selig) is about to take the air in the adventure of Katuly. After many thrilling adventures Kathlyn finally escapes from Umbalba and arrives safely at a seaport town. Here she learns that her sister, Winnie, has gone back to Alaha to try to save the priest and has arrived back in Alaha in time to see her sister being crowned. Kathlyn’s mission is done here, leaving Kathlyn to ponder some way to free her sister.

“Pathé’s Weekly No. 25.” (Pathé, Apr. 6) The air picture of Prances Omerr, the national golf champion, is shown. The baseball news is excellent, and again we have more news of Mexico.

“All in the Air.” (Lubin, Split reel. April 7)—On the same reel with “The Bully’s Drum.”

“A Mix-up on the Plains.” (Selig, Apr. 7)—A comedy with an overworked plot. A school teacher finds a cow, both going to fall positions in a Western town, are met by the wrong people at the station. The usual complications follow.

“The Adventures of the Stolen Slippers.” (Edison, April 20)—The fourth of the series of John C. Lawrence comedies. The stars are Ursula, Matthew, and Dolly. The culprits in the cast are Barry O’Meara, May Abbey and Edward Rutledge. Osmore watches for a thief, and, surprising him, causes the thief to drop one of the shoes. In the heel of the shoe he finds a note, which reveals the hiding place of the burglar.

“When East Met West in Boston.” (Edison, April 20)—Professor Clark is expected to marry Ruth Maitland. The bachelor proponent of the girl, in a New York and Boston city. The scene is set on the Long Island Sound. John Perring takes the guilt of his fiancée’s brother upon himself, and in escaping from the police, is forced to dive into the icy current. In a bundle he finds clothes and direc- tions which lead him to a farm house, where he goes in a trunk to a Chinaman’s den. His face is not disclosed in the dimming of the reel.

“Memories that Haunt.” (Vitagraph, Two reels. April 21)—An interesting drama. The scene of the wrecked ship and the panic of the passengers is fine. James Moran, a Western movie actor, neglects his wife, whom he really loves. She leaves him, and in his absent-mindedness, the ship he is on is reported lost with all on board, but he is washed ashore on an island, where stands a lighthouse. To his surprise, the lighthouse keeper informed him of his wife's existence, and offers to help him find her. In the lighthouse, a man (as he gets drunk) tells of his love for his wife. His wife recognizes the man, and they are happily reunited.

"The Price of His Honor." (Essanay. April 12.)—A pathetic drama in which a girl, east and south by an author, helps him from dishonor by preventing her wife from keeping company with their daughter. In preserving her honor she-spills her own.

"A Knave of Clubs." (Lubin. Split reel. Mar. 21.)—A good comedy on the same reel with "A Knave of Clubs." Dinah, the cook, and "a Knave of Clubs" is a pain from drinking the knife's whiskey, with disastrous results to the knife.

"In the Soup." (Lubin. Split reel. Mar. 21.)—Not a very good comedy. On the same reel with "A Knave of Clubs." Dinah, the cook, and "In the Soup" is a pain from drinking the knife's whiskey, with disastrous results to the knife.

"The Helpful (?) Sisterhood." (Vitagraph. Two reels. Mar. 21.)—A drama that is not probable and seems lacking in action. A story very similar to another story, where the girl took to shopping in order to obtain good clothes.

"Canning Industry in California." (Essanay. Mar. 21.)—This fine picture illustrates ways in which peaches and apricots are canned, and shows the difference from the darkness of the film in some places.

"Wife's Visit Home." (Biograph. Mar. 26.)—This picture is taken with "Never Shrink." Rather an old plot but a clever comedy. Hubby goes to the picture with his wife and hopes to be at her father's home. He finds his wife at the beach also. The mixing of clothes cannot be talked of again.

"Pathé's Weekly No. 25." (Mar. 26.)—News of Mexico is beginning to lag in interest. Because the strike of the Electro factory are very interesting.

"Copid's Capricre." (Selig. Mar. 26.)—Father's choice for a son-in-law does not please his daughter. After quite a mix-up, the girl has her way. Rather a vague comedy containing very little live action.

"The Atonement." (Essanay. Mar. 26.)—A very vague drama. A girl robs her father of some money which he owes to a Western man. Afterwards she returns and gives it back. No apparent reason is given to excuse her for taking it.

"The Game of Politics." (Lubin. Two reels. Mar. 26.)—A very well acted drama a little inconsequent. Dick Ryder drinks himself into a frenzy for a temperance vote. Later he saves the mayor's life by encountering a man who was threatening him. Rending over the young man, the mayor realizes the price of his election.

"The Buckeye Horse Race." (Frontier. April 16.)—A light comedy that will amuse. A fine comedy which is given to the competing horses. While crossing the stream a poet by widow, eunuchs with a non-combatant.

"Dolores, the Lady of Sorrow." (Bison 101. Two reels. April 8.)—A Mexican story, the name of which seems to be a little out of place. Dolores and Miguel quarrel over the unfilial act of one. His mother is killed by Miguel and is chased by the sheriff and his posse. Dolores, in hot pursuit, attacks her and a terrible fight ensues. Needless to say, he receives his just deserts.

"Schultz, the Paper Hanger." (Joker. April 12.)—A good farce, with a great deal of the usual slap-stick comedy accompanying it. The story is impossible, of course, but will amuse lovers of this kind of humor.

"Grandaddy's Granddaughter." (Victor. April 12.)—A fine comedy. No errors ring true to 16. Well acted. The photography is good and the granddaughter is still a baby, and therefore keeps out her sister. But they are married, and their children, bring about the reconciliation. Several good comedy touches.

"Poison." (Frontier. April 11.)—A conventional story containing considerable action. A befuddled man attempts to kill his benefactor but is "shot by his own petard."

"The Little Mail Carrier." (Victor. Two reels. April 10.)—An excellent drama of the North. Pho's father is sick, so she carries the mail for him. She hurts her leg in a fall and is picked up by Bob, a city man spending a few weeks at the town. He答应 quite a bit of the other, they finally fall in love and are married. Florence Lawrence is the principal.

"The Bolted Door." (Victor. Three reels. April 12.)—A drama in the style of Robert W. Chambers. They are a large sum of money to his nephew and niece on the condition that they marry, and if they do not love each other. Their courtship comes after the wedding and they finally are happy. Warren Hymer plays the lead.

"On Suspcion." (Rex. Apr. 12.)—In this reel Lois Weber appears to advantage in a story which is quite the very end. The sheriff seizes a supposed criminal from the train and proceeds to take her away in his arms. This is the car stopped until her train companion caught up with them, when they crossed the border, which her husband father had tried to stop took place. The sheriff had arrested the wrong girl.

"Lost, Strayed or Stolen." (Crystal. April 12.)—In this reel a wonderful series weird effect is gotten by the white car which speeds along without apparently any human control. The third of "My Lady Raffles" series. Hagan, the detective, is detailed to discover who is smuggling goods into Mexico, and finds that it is taken in a white car. He cannot catch either the car or the invisible driver.

"The Mystery of the White Car." (Gold Seal. Apr. 12.)—In this reel a wonderfully weird effect is gotten by the white car which speeds along without apparently any human control. The third of "My Lady Raffles" series. Hagan, the detective, is detailed to discover who is smuggling goods into Mexico, and finds that it is taken in a white car. He cannot catch either the car or the invisible driver.

"Sadder but Wiser." (Royal. April 4.)—A humorous comedy which, although impossible in reality, works. Two actors impersonate a lost sweethearts, but unfortunately he turns up at the opportune moment.

"The Passing of Izy." (Keystone. April 11.)—The story of an excellent comedy worked. Izy obtain the aid of the undertaker to commit suicide. They aid, but Izy changes his mind.

"A Bathhouse Beauty." (Keystone April 12.)—This story takes place through a number of switchbacks, scenic railways, Ferris wheels and skating rinks provoke much mirth.

"Some Bull's Daughter." (Asolo. April 12.)—Asolo, Dell, and Fred Mace, is the principal. An Indian burlesque which is really funny.

"The Hunchback." (Majestic. Two reels. April 12.)—A hunchback adopts a girl on the death of her father and takes her to his home, where she becomes very homesick. The author that he may keep her for himself. Therefore the villain plots her death, but is arrested. The boy, not knowing this, meets the hunchback in his house, which is actually the nearest house, that of the hunchback. The latter refuses to save his life and except for the prompt action would have been forfeited. They become reconciled and the boy restores "Contentment," preceeds a pretty scene.

"Her First Lesson." (Princess. April 3.)—A comedy between two fine actors, Miss Williams. The story is of a girl who is forced to choose between love and "art." Naturally, all ends as it should.

"Texas Bill's Last Ride." (Majestic. Two reels. April 5.)—There is a reward out for the capture of Texas Bill. After a chase that is full of thrilling incidents it is finally caught. Save for, this the drama has no incident worthy of mention.

"An Intercepted Getaway." (Majestic. April 7.)—An excellent Western comedy. Two men are riding off with two city men in their automobile. They are pursued and caught by the Western and they drag a minister out and get married on the spot.

"The Fatal Dress Suit." (Komic. April 8.)—A comedy of the type, where the villain puts gunpowder in his rival's dress suit and destroys him, but he comes down and wins the girl.

"Our Mutual Girl." No. 12. (Reliance. April 6.)—Margaret spends a comparatively quiet day for a change, but some of the sights of New York and bides her friend, who is sailing on the "Independence of Susan." (American. Apr. 15.)—A good western drama. The band-grabbers try to rob Susan of her claim, but are stopped by Joe, her neighbor, who later wins Susan.

LATE CHICAGO NEWS

Chicago Has New Film Company

The Open Market Film Company, which has back of it several practical motion-picture men of Chicago, was given birth during the past week. This new organization was incorporated in the state of Illinois for $100,000.

Thomas Hyland, president of this new venture, is a young man who has had a successful career in the commercial world. With him as vice-president is associated J. B. Koppell, who has been active in motion-picture circles in Chicago for the past few years. Also M. L. Sparr, treasurer of the company, has had a wide experience in the film business. J. K. Orvis, secretary, and W. A. Barr, superintendent and accountant, are all well known in the financial world.

This new company have taken quarters in Chicago's newest and most modern building, the Brede, on Dearborn street near Washington street. They have leased the greater part of the entire third floor, which is being equipped with the most modern conveniences known to the motion-picture business.

During the coming week the president of the company will visit New York for the purpose of purchasing several features and also make arrangements for the opening of a branch and purchasing office there.

Rothacker at House Products Exposition

The Industrial Moving Picture Company, of Chicago, have been awarded the exclusive contract to maintain motion-picture departments at the Forest Products Exposition, which will be held at the Coliseum, Chicago, April 30 to May 9 and at the Grand Central Palace, New York City, May 21 to May 30. At both the Coliseum and Grand Central Palace Mr. W. R. Rothacker, manager of the Industrial Moving Picture Company, will present complete motion-picture entertainments showing every phase of the lumber industry.

One of the big features of this entertainment will be the two-reel series of pictures which the company took for the Long-Bell Lumber Company which shows lumbering in Louisiana.

To Form Feature Exchange

Simon Greiver, of the General Feature Film Company; D. R. McDonald, of the Interstate Film Exchange, and Maurice Solkin, of the Solkin Enterprises, will shortly open a feature exchange in Chicago. Mr. Greiver expects to go to New York City very soon to purchase pictures.

Sparr Resigns from Bryn Mawr

M. L. Sparr, who has managed the Bryn Mawr Theatre in Chicago, one of the finest on the North Shore, resigned his position last week to associate himself with the Open Market Film Company. Mr. Sparr is well known to the motion-picture people of the Windy City. He has had a wide experience in film circles and his new venture is being eagerly watched by his many friends who feel sure of his success.

Film Quality

Quality in the film—quality from a technical photographic standpoint is as important to the Exhibitor as is interest in the story that the film tells.

There's one film that's recognized the world over as the standard of quality—that is always used by those whose effort it is to give the Exhibitors the very best goods and the very best service—Eastman film.

And it is identifiable. Look for "Eastman" on the perforated margin.

Edward Dillon is at work on another farce comedy entitled "All for Mabel." Mr. Odier's comedies are to be released under the Majestic brand in the near future in place of Fred Mace's Three Reels.

The State Homeopathic Hospital at Middletown, N. Y., has installed a Powers' Cameraograph No. 6A. Six spotted leopards which are to be used in a forthcoming Universal release are being care fully trained by Esue Pay, of that company.

James Kirkwood, who directed "The Ganger," is now at work on a two-reel drama of city and country life by H. R. Durant. Mr. Kirkwood just completed another two-reel drama by Mary Rider Wright.

An order for a Powers' Cameragraph No. 6A projecting machine has been received from James W. Jones, executive director of the Executive Commission of Boise, Idaho. This machine will later be used at the Frisco International Exposition.

Mr. W. F. W. Hargrave, employee of the Majestic and Umania companies, has been engaged to be president of the Balboa Feature Films of Long Beach, Cal., and will play leads with Director Bracken in all the productions of Balboa Feature Films.

Under the title of "In the Footprints of Ma's," the American Film Manufacturing Company will produce, a two-part drama, utilizing for its title the life of a famous film heroine. Thomas Ricketts will have charge of the production, and has selected George Field to impersonate the great composer.

William Jossay, writer and player, who is a member of the Balboa Feature Films at Long Beach, Cal., was recently stricken with a stroke of apoplexy while engaged in his duties. He is out of danger and shortly expects to return to work.

E. D. and H. M. Horckheimer, of the Balboa Feature Films, are figuring upon purchasing an acre of adjoining property at a cost of $50,000 to enlarge their Long Beach studios.

The following sub-offices have been opened to handle Warner's Features exclusively: Wheeling, W. Va.; Bluefield, Louisville, Ky., and Portland, Ore., 322 Oak street. If the business warrants it these offices will shortly be added to the regular branches of Warner's Features, Inc.

Luisa Alvarado, the leading woman formerly with the Majestic and Umania companies, has been engaged by Barney Holkemer of Long Beach, Cal., and will play leads with Director Bracken in all the productions of Balboa Feature Films.

A novelty in motion pictures will be the forthcoming Reliance production, "The Stiletto." This is a two-reel subject and for two-thirds of the second reel one character is visible on the screen.

When the Third Street Theatre, Easton, Pa., ran the Edison multiple, "Deacon Rutledge's Downfall," Dan Mason, who starred as the Deacon, was the guest of honor. Dan is a great favorite in Easton, where he appeared very frequently before he became a photographer.

Motion-picture machines have been installed on all the steamships of the Fabre line, with an experienced operator attached to each. Dramas and comedies will be presented in the saloons every night.

Williams, Brown and Earl, Philadelphia, report that they have sold a Simplex projector to the Pennsylvania Railroad Y. M. C. A. at Tyrone, Penn.

The Pacific Coast state rights and Nevada, Arizona, and Utah have been sold outright for T. Hayes Hunter’s feature, "Fire and Sword" to Hokekinson, of 12th W., 40th Street, New York City.

Pictures of cowboy life in the early West, bucking bronchos, operation of the Pony Express, Indian fighting and all manner of fancy roping were the order of the day at Universal City, California, on March 15, when over three thousand spectators gathered at the Universal ranch and animal farm to witness the annual rodeo, held under the auspices of the Universal cowboys.

Director George Lessey sailed for Bermuda on the Arcadian April 26th with Ben Wilson, Mrs. Messey, Mr. and Mrs. Beethel and John Stormon. Several weeks will be spent on the island in making productions which only the beauty of Bermudian scenery can make possible. This is the third season that the Edison players have been sent to Bermuda.

It has come to the knowledge of the Iuta Film Company that many of their copyrighted subjects are illegally booked. All the Iuta films are strictly copyrighted in the United States. There are, however, occasional pirated copies in this country. These copies are offered to exhibitors for booking. If a motion picture exhibitor projects a pirated picture he is liable to penalties and imprisonment.

D. W. Griffith is well represented in Los Angeles, "Judith of Bethel Hill" and "The Great Leap" being featured all over the city.

Frederick Vosom, the Majestic director, has just completed a two-reel drama entitled "The Tie That Binds."

Among recent installations of Powers' Camera No. 6A projecting machines was one in the High School at New Rochelle, N. Y.

Jack Adolph, the Majestic director, is at work on a one-reel drama entitled "A Pair of Cuffs."

LASKY WINS INJUNCTION CASE

The claim of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company to the motion picture rights of "The Master Mind" was upheld last week, when Justice Page in the Supreme Court of New York County denied the Master Amusement Company an injunction against the Lasky photoplay production.

It was the contention of the Master Amusement Company that an agreement had been made, by statement, with the Master Mind Producing Company that no film production of the play would be made during the lifetime of the former company's contract. This embraced the stage touring rights to the play.

The Lasky firm, however, demonstrated that the motion picture rights to "The Master Mind" had been obtained from the estate of the author. There was no evidence that the Master Mind Producing Company had ever controlled the film rights, and Justice Page accordingly refused them a restraining order.

The $15,000 screen production of the play which is now being made, with Edmund Breese, the originator of the part on the stage, in the title role, will be completed and released by the Lasky company.

OPEN NEW FILM PLANT

The Harvard Film Corporation has established a large factory at 231 Tenth Avenue, New York City, where they will take care of the manufacturing of film and the incidentals such as developing, printing and tinting.

Although all the equipment is not yet in place, the output amounts to 150,000 feet a week and this will be increased to 400,000 later, when they are completed.

Two large drums for drying are already installed with two more to come later. There is an excellent projection-room, equipped with a new projector and screens. Other parts of the factory have been attended to in detail so that when completed the plant should be complete in every detail.

The officers are W. K. Hedwig, president; J. D. Reardon, secretary and treasurer; W. T. Erickson, vice-president; J. J. Murphy, sales manager.

COMPLETE "LITTLEST REBEL" CAST

The work of engaging the cast for the production of "The Littlest Rebel," the first feature of the Photoplay Productions Company, is completed. E. K. Lincoln, formerly of the Vitagraph Company, will star. The others are William J. Sorell, Estelle Coffin, Mimi Yvonne, Elaine Evans, Maude St. John, Martin Reigan, Bert S. Frank, Paul Pilkington and Fred Fleck.

You Must Invest Thousands to Make the Front of the Chair a Profit, Producer

You Need Invest A Few Hundred to Make the Back of the Chair Bring You in as Great, if Not Greater, Profits

MR. "MOVIE MAN"

If your Landlord should agree to accept $150 to $500 (according to the size of your Theatre) in a lump sum as FULL PAYMENT of the rental for the next 10 years, would you be satisfied? Would you be happy? Well, equip your House with the "Midget" Automatic Penny Vending Machine.

Our "MIDGET" Will Pay Your Rent During Next Ten Years

THE "MIDGET"

Is a wonderful Automatic Vender, Selling Assorted Chewing Gum of Full Value.

Occupies Very Little Room, Yet Each Holds 15 Pieces of Merchandise. When Emptied the Slide Arrangement Immediately Indicates It. It is Mechanically Perfect and Accurate and Cannot Get Out of Order.

Beautifully Finished in Highly Polished Nickel Plate and Improves the Appearance of the Inside of Theatre.

You Are Not Making All the Money Your House Can Produce Unless Equipped With the "MIDGET". Shrewd "Movie" Men are Using the Brains God Has Given Them and Realize the Wonderful Money Making Powers of This Machine and are Rushing Their Orders.

The Space on the Back of the Chair is Waste. Put These Little Penny Magnets On and It Will Pay Your Rent and Some Over.

"Midget"

Turns the Available Waste Space on the Back of the Chair into a Gold Mine
Here Are Facts and Figures Which Will Show You How These Penny Sales Will Develop Into Dollar Profits

$1,200 TO $1,500 PROFITS ON AN INVESTMENT OF $150

Figuring on the basis of 100 machines, the cost at $1.50 each is $150. At a very low estimate each vender will take in 5 cents a day, or $5.00 on the 100 machines. This figures over $1,500 a year, from which you deduct the cost of the merchandise (40 cents per 100 pieces) and you have a snug profit of $1,000.

Twice the number of machines installed, twice the size of your profit, and so on. Please remember that in paying the $1.50 for the machine it becomes YOUR PROPERTY ABSOLUTELY, nothing more to pay for Royalty, neither have you any expense in making repairs at any time during life of the machine (we figure machine will last 10 years), for the machines are sold under our Iron Clad Guarantee to REPLACE FREE OF COST TO PURCHASERS any machine that may at any time get out of adjustment or prove unsatisfactory. We do not hesitate to issue this guarantee, for we know our machine and are proud of its mechanical construction and accuracy.

SPECIAL 30 DAY OFFER

Never before since the day we obtained our Patents and put the machine on the market have we sold less than 100 machines on a single order, but if you will take quick advantage NOW, RIGHT NOW, we will allow you to order for as low as 10 machines, simply to acquaint you with this wonderful little magnet of pennies and money-maker. Get in on the ground floor and take advantage of this exceptional opportunity. Under no pretext or excuse whatever, will we sell you less than 100 machines, should your order come in one day after the expiration of this time limit, which means 30 days from date of this advertisement. NOTE THIS. DON'T THINK IT OVER, BUT ACT AT ONCE. With this 30 day offer, we will ship in for good measure machines that are already filled with merchandise. This means that all you need to do is to put up the Midget Venders on to the back of the chair and Zip, the sales begin.

Anybody without experience can attach the machines to the chairs. It takes less than one hour to install 100 machines. The only tool necessary is an ordinary screwdriver.

We pay Freight and Express charges on this Special Offer and will ship machines the same day order is received.

City, County and State Rights are Being Cobbled Up Rapidly Secure Yours and Place Yourself on the Road to a Little Fortune

We advise you not to wait a minute, but to WIRE us for reservations and we will wire you back if territory desired is still open. A $1.00 or $2.000 may put you on EASY STREET for the rest of your life, if you act AT ONCE.

ALL ORDERS FOR 10 Machines on the 30 day Special Trial Offer MUST be accompanied by Check or Post Office Order or Express Order for $15 and made payable to

STEEL GEARS vs. DIE CAST

Die Cast Gears Cost a Small Part of what Steel Gears do, because Die Cast Gears are made by pressing molten metal, consisting of Lead, Zinc, etc., into steel dies. The cold steel chills and hardens a thin skin on the surface, which soon wears through.

Die Cast Gears often last about a year (to live out the Guarantee) then the replacing of such low cost parts becomes A TREMENDOUS SOURCE OF PROFIT to the Manufacturer, but we have not used them, because we knew they would not give good service.

FIVE YEARS AGO WE DISCONTINUED BRONZE GEARS because we did not consider them good enough.

FIVE YEARS AGO WE ADOPTED STEEL GEARS, which are the most expensive gears to make, because they have to be cut out of SOLID BLOCKS OF STEEL. The other parts of our machine are designed and made with the same care and

We have returned from the "Coast" to tell you of more theatres on Broadway and its tributaries, using motion pictures exclusively or as a part of their entertainment.

The Herald Square, Broadway and Republic theatres must be added to those previously mentioned, as the homes of many musical and dramatic successes, now using motion pictures and Power's Service.

The use of Power's Cameragraph No. 6A, in the projection of high-class pictures, has become as much a necessary part of animated picture development, as the themes and scenic effects of our best known dramatic and musical producers.

Who Endorse Our Features
Three and Four Reels Only

"The proof the pudding is the eating thereof." These successful exhibitors have tried our features and have found them even stronger than we claimed them to be. Extravagant adjectives concerning an attraction don't make it go with the public. It must have undisputed quality. Read these voluntary letters of praise.

FROM B. E. CORNELL
ECHEL THEATRE, SYRACUSE, N. Y.
Box Office Attraction Film Rental Co.,
130 West 46th St., New York City.

Gentlemen: When I signed up for your entire output of four features a week I was naturally anxious, but I must say that in my entire experience your features are the best drawing cards and the biggest money-getters of any I have ever shown or any company has ever supplied me with, and I have done with over sixty companies. You can depend upon my continued use of your splendid features.

Your very truly,

March 13th, 1914.

B. E. CORNELL.

FROM N. SCHEINBERG
SAVOY THEATRE, NEW YORK CITY
Box Office Attraction Film Rental Co.,
130 West 46th St., New York City.

Gentlemen: I have had a most difficult time securing strong features before I began booking your attractions, but since I put on the first picture my troubles have disappeared. I know that I can always count upon the high standard and audience-satisfying power of each feature and therefore feel secure. I am more than pleased to testify to the high quality of your features and your service.

Your very truly,

March 21st, 1914.

N. SCHEINBERG.

FROM ARTHUR LOWY
BEGU THEATRE, NEWPORT, R. I.
Box Office Attraction Film Rental Co.,
130 West 46th St., New York City.

Gentlemen: I wish to congratulate you on your features. I have had crowded houses with all your attractions. Some of our Newport society attended our last two performances and saw your "Ben Bolt" and "The Devil Within." It is a real pleasure to deal with you. The service is the best I have ever had and your features are real features. Send me heralds on your new stuff, and I will give you my open dates. Wishing you the best of success, I remain

ARTHUR LOWY.

FROM JOHN RAVENGER
WACO THEATRE, NEW YORK CITY
Box Office Attraction Film Rental Co.,
130 West 46th St., New York City.

Gentlemen: I am pleased to state that your features, which I have been using and which I shall continue to use, are great box office attractions. Not only do they bring in the money but each makes a decided hit with my audiences. In the beginning I was very cautious in deciding which feature to book, but now I am willing to take a chance on any of your releases. They are all good.

March 17th, 1914.

JOHN RAVENGER.

FROM WILLIAM A. LEITH
COMEDY THEATRE OF NEW YORK
Box Office Attraction Film Rental Co.,
130 West 46th St., New York City.

Gentlemen: It gives me great pleasure to write and compliment you on the superb service you have given us. Last Sunday's feature, "The Secret of Adrianople," was a big money-getter, giving us the best Sunday we have had in two months. Wishing you great success because I know your policies and your methods deserve it, and assuring you of my continued support, I am

FROM H. B. ARDEN
130 West 46th St., New York City.

Gentlemen: As manager of the "Duffield Street Theatre" I have exhibited a number of your films, and have viewed others of your productions in your own exhibition rooms. It affords me pleasure to say that I found the subjects good, the photography clear, and the patrons of the "Duffield Theatre" have personally voiced their hearty approval to the ushers and other attendants. You can count on my regular patronage.

Your very truly,

FROM HARRY DE GROOT ROBINSON
MONTICELLO THEATRE OF JERSEY CITY, N. J.
Box Office Attraction Film Rental Co.,
130 West 46th St., New York City.

Gentlemen: It is the writer's great pleasure to send this letter to you as an exhibitor of your features. As you know we manage the largest and finest photo-play house in Jersey City and your features have packed our house. We congratulate you most heartily upon the treatment exhibitors receive and wish to state further that our booking with you will run all season. Wishing you the best of success, we beg to remain

Gentlemen: In spite of greater competition than ever before I have been able to increase my business and maintain the standard of my house with your features. Everything I have booked has been good, but the majority of your attractions have been simply wonderful. The audiences are always enthusiastic and often applaud. Business is better than ever and I am glad you overcame my early doubts and induced me to try your features. Your service has been prompt and efficient, and your advertising effective.

Personal—

From C. J. Hite

President Thanhouser Film Corp.
New Rochelle, N. Y.

To the Exhibitors of America:

Our recent announcement of the coming of the stupendous production, "The Million Dollar Mystery," has so overwhelmed us with inquiries from exhibitors that I take this means of notifying theatre managers everywhere that arrangements have been perfected for releasing even a greater number of reels than originally planned—I hope sufficient to take care of the tremendous demand.

The producing of "The Million Dollar Mystery" is, by far, the greatest task ever undertaken by any film manufacturer. You have, no doubt, heard that the Chicago Tribune, and 200 other leading newspapers, will print this remarkable story by Harold MacGrath, scenario by Lloyd Lonergan, simultaneously with its appearance in the theatres and that a capital prize of $10,000.00 in cash will be paid for the best solution of this mystery. "The Million Dollar Mystery" will succeed the Kathlyn Series. It will appear in the newspapers in weekly installments starting June 28th. First release, June 22nd.

"The Million Dollar Mystery" will be released through the Syndicate Film Corporation, R1421, 71 W. 23rd Street, New York. Exhibitors should write at once for information. Thanhouser releases will continue to be regular features of the Mutual Program. "The Million Dollar Mystery" may be obtained regardless of what program you may be using.

This announcement is made to assure exhibitors that we are using all our tremendous resources to supply every theatre manager who has applied for these films and to make "The Million Dollar Mystery" the most successful motion-picture production that ever has been brought out.

Truly yours,

C. J. HITE, President.

Prudes, Politicians and Pictures

CENSORSHIP means the exploitation of motion picture producers by the reformers for the benefit of the political crooks. Nothing more nor less.

This does not mean that the reformer will be the voluntary ally of the grifter.

It does mean that he will be the tool, the catspaw of the predatory politician, because the reformer always becomes the tool and catspaw of the politician whenever he summons the politician, in his law-making capacity, to his aid.

THE reformer of the type now lifting up his voice against motion pictures spends his life in a frantic endeavor to regulate the amusements and entertainments of the people with laws that make him the regulator. He is the lineal descendant of the Roundhead of 1650, who regarded all theatres as disorderly houses and abolished them.

That is what the motion picture reformer would do if he had his way.

This prude who dignifies himself by the name of "reformer" works himself into a hysterical frame of mind over the "evils" of motion picture exhibitions.

Then he raises the cry for legislation. The sincerity of his motive there is no need to question.

But into whose hands does he fall at this point?

INTO the hands of the grafting politician.

This is just the moment the political grifter has been waiting for. He has observed the phenomenal strides toward prosperity that the motion picture manufacturer has been making.

He has been looking for an excuse to "shake down" the producer and make him pay for his prosperity. The average American politician has no other reason for being in politics. When he is not plundering the State treasury, he is devising laws to levy tribute from the business interests of the country.

WILL he oblige the reformer by assisting him to place a law on the statute-books, regulating motion pictures?

Of course he will!
Will he overlook so golden an opportunity to fatten himself on the moneybags of these newly-arrived millionaires?
Not if he knows it!

If any motion picture producer fancies that the politicians would not waste their time over positions on a board that are worth only $1,500 a year apiece, he does not know the stuff that those gentlemen of the State legislatures who make a profession of legislating the people's money into their own pockets are made of. All is fish that comes to their net.

It's all valuable patronage for their hangers-on. They are already scheming how to get control of those places.

And once they get control of them, the $1,500 salary will be the smallest item in the incumbent's yearly remuneration.

ONCE again, the censorship question resolves itself to this:

Shall the motion picture producer contribute to the support of the politician and his machine by paying him for the right to do business? Must the business purchase his right to make a living?

It is for the motion picture manufacturers to say whether they must, whether they shall.

WHEN THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS charges that there is a political "nigger" in the censorship "woodpile," the News knows whereof it speaks.

THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS HAS THE FACTS IN ITS POSSESSION.

These facts will be given to the public in the near future in this paper.

They will create a sensation that will stir the country. They will prove that the censorship situation is already honeycombed with corruption.

Does the manufacturer require proof that the censorship laws are nothing but sandbags and blackjacks in the hands of political highwaymen?

The proof will be speedily forthcoming.

Crowds Flock to Strand Opening

First Nighters, Thirty-five Hundred Strong, Gather at Premiere Performance in Big Metropolitan Motion Picture Palace

PROBABLY the largest crowd that ever assembled to witness a motion picture exhibition in America assembled in the largest American theatre devoted to motion pictures on Saturday evening, April 12, when the Strand, at Broadway and Forty-seventh street, New York City, formally opened its doors.

Thirty-five hundred people filled the seating capacity of the theatre. Hundreds clamored outside for admission and were glad to get standing room. It was a signal proof of the prestige that motion pictures have won during the last year.

The first hour and a half after the actual opening of the doors the spectators spent in acquainting themselves with the architectural details and equipment of this epoch-making theatre.

The Strand is intended by its manager, S. L. Rothapfel, to be a Mecca for exhibitors from all parts of the country, and its entire policy of management is to make the house a model of motion picture theatre operating, so that Strand methods and Strand ways will become a national standard.

If anyone is capable of so standardizing a theatre, it is admittedly Mr. Rothapfel, whose views on programs, music, the discipline of employees and other essential matters are of the soundest and most progressive sort.

Variety and quality ruled in the selection of the opening program. The Edison picture, “The Star-Spangled Banner,” was the curtain-raiser, so to speak. A musical intermission, during which the Second Hungarian Rhapsody of Liszt was played, followed, then “A Metropolitan Incident,” “Our Mutual Girl” and “Pathé’s Weekly” held the screen in their turn. The first half of the program concluded with a Keystone comedy, “The Bathing Beauty,” which set the entire house in an uproar.

By this time the audience was on edge for the big number of the evening, “The Spoilers.” The penetrating atmosphere of the Alaskan scenes and the swift-moving action held the spectators perfectly, despite the unusual length of the picture. The scene of the fight was acknowledged a masterpiece. For all that, it did not dull the recollection of the merry comedy that had preceded it, and “The Bathing Beauty” and “The Spoilers” tied, it would seem, for first place in the minds of the audience.

It is almost gratuitous to mention that the projection was of the first order. It could hardly be otherwise in such a house. Two Simplex projectors threw the pictures with perfect precision upon a Radium Gold Fibre Screen, which played its part in the general excellence of the result.

THE MASTER MIND’ NEXT LASKY PICTURE

The third release of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company will be “The Master Mind,” in which Edmund Breese, the dramatic actor, will play the leading part.

Mr. Breese interpreted this role for eight months in the original. The picture will be made in five reels and is now nearing completion.

Cecil B. DeMille and Oscar Apfel are directing the production.

GRIFFITH FILM AT WEBER’S

“The Battle of the Sexes,” or “The Single Standard,” which was produced some time ago by D. W. Griffith, of the Mutual Company, under his own brand name, is now running at Weber’s Theatre, New York.

The picture is the first made by Mr. Griffith since assuming charge of the Mutual interests, and is notable for its strict adherence to accepted truths of life, and the moral lesson which it teaches.

Although five reels in length, only six scenes are used, three of which appear but once or twice throughout.

BATTLE FOR SUNDAY OPENING IS ON

Police Court Judge Finds Albany Exhibitor Guilty Under Nuisance Law, Despite Late Judge Gaynor's Decision—Clergy Put Forth Strong Efforts to Check Exhibitors in Rochester, N. Y.

The authorities of the cities Rochester and Albany, New York, seem to be irrevocably opposed to the exhibiting of motion pictures there on the Sabbath day, and the mayors of both places have announced their intention of refusing any license to that effect.

This stand, which is the outcome of a long-fought battle, is mainly the result of indignation meetings by ministers, many of whom probably have never been inside a motion picture theatre in their lives.

Petitions have been circulated by them, and through this means the authorities have been forced to uphold the clergy, although there is a decision handed down by the late Mayor Gaynor, when he was on the supreme court bench, which states that such licenses are not against the law.

It is thought that this is but the beginning of another fight. The film men have prepared themselves with petitions signed by their patrons and are getting ready for a second test case, the first one having been decided in Albany.

Robert McDermott, an exhibitor of that city, allowed himself to be arrested last month in order to make a test of the validity of the law requiring them to close. After a number of adjournments the district attorney refused to prosecute, stating that there was no law, it is said, which forbade the opening of the theatres on any day.

Section 2415 of the Penal Code was quoted as the law which governs that, and this law had already been interpreted as not having to do with motion picture theatres. The case was therefore adjourned to await the written opinion of the judge.

Police Court Judge Brady, in finding McDermott guilty, said in reference to the interpretation rendered by Justice Gaynor:

"I approach this subject with deference, owing to the fact that I am called upon as a justice of the police court, an inferior court, to determine a question which apparently in its makeup contains all of the phases of the case of the People vs. Hemleb, which case the learned attorney for the defense argues has settled the law in this state as to the legality of motion picture shows on Sunday. As I say, the case at bar is in most respects similar to the Hemleb case, the one apparent difference being that in the case now under consideration, we find the allegation that the repose and religious liberty of the community were seriously disturbed.

"After an exhaustive study of the cases, I find that the Hemleb case in the second department, is the only case relative to the legality of motion picture shows on Sunday which has ever reached an appellate division for judicial interpretation, and in only three or four judicial districts of the state has the matter been presented for consideration by justices of the supreme court.

"The Hemleb case was decided in June, 1908, by a divided court, the prevailing opinion being written by Justice Gaynor, with Justices Woodruff and Jenkins concurring, while a vigorous dissenting opinion was written by Judge Hooker, with which Judge Rich concurred.

"Viewing the law, and construing it as I do," concluded Justice Brady, "I must first conclude that the law at all times intends to preserve the sanctity and dignity of our Sunday, and that the motion picture show as complained of was a public show and as such disturbed the repose and religious liberty of the community, and that there is sufficient in the complaint to charge a violation of law, and the facts being admitted, to convict the defendant for a violation of the section alleged to have been violated, namely, section 2415 of the penal law."

Rochester, the sister city, has not as yet made a test of the law, as far as can be learned. The entire trouble there is between the exhibitors and the clergy, and not so much the authorities. Houses are prohibited from opening on the Sabbath, but there seems to be but little friction between the officials and the film men.

A. N. Wolff, president of the Rochester branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, in an interview gave utterance to views which may be taken to voice those of the others.

"We have not given up our endeavor to have the city ordinance amended so that motion picture houses can open on Sunday, and thousands of cards prepared by us have been signed by those in favor of the movement."

"This bill providing for the closing of all motion pictures in New York State, which was introduced in the legislature recently, has not discouraged us any, for we do not believe that those in the legislature or outside of it who have the comfort, happiness and moral well being of the majority of people, who desire a reasonable, respectable means of entertainment within their means, aside from what their churches, societies and home give them, on the one day of the week when there are able to indulge in their preferences, will give it their support.

"There may be cities in the State where such a law might work benefit, but not in Rochester. Motion picture houses in this city are conducted with due regard to the proprieties, regardless of the day, and from past experiences it is found that pictures exhibited are not objectionable and that the houses aim to please the class of patronage that comes from among the honest workers of factory, stores or shop, many of whom include churchgoers as well as those who do not attend church."

One of the chief troubles in the present agitation against Sunday opening comes from those who possibly never have attended a motion picture house and who cannot speak from a practical point of view as to the good or bad done by them. Not only is it more open to criticism or suggestion than are the proprietors of Rochester houses and a careful inspection of all films is made by the managers before any of them are shown to the public. I believe that municipal jurisdiction over the houses is best, for each city is better able to regulate conditions according to circumstances.

"Practical experience in Sunday opening in other cities has, I believe, been the best proof of the result of such experiences, for in answer to fifty letters sent out by us to chiefs of police not one reply has been received where there was the slightest objection found. The closing of motion picture houses on Sundays would not add one additional member to any church or the opening of them will not keep away any who desire to attend divine worship.

Wisconsin Convention a Success

Exhibitors and Exchange Men Get Together at Green Bay—Delegates Chosen to Dayton Convention—Other Matters

More than forty exhibitors, from every section of Wisconsin, and a large number of exchange men, were in attendance at the state convention held at the Hotel Beaumont, Green Bay, April 7 and 8. Not only was the business of the state league well taken care of during the meeting, but the exchange men, too, transacted an unusually large amount of business, especially in connection with late features.

On Tuesday, the first day of the convention, an open meeting was held, attended by both the exhibitors and exchange men. Through the courtesy of Syl DuQuine, proprietor of the New Bijou Theatre, arrangements were made, during the meeting, for a public showing the next day of some of the late multiple reel pictures.

A closed meeting was held Wednesday morning when all private business matters were taken care of and delegates to the national convention at Dayton, Ohio, in July were elected as follows: A. H. Grey, Oshkosh; W. E. McCamie, Appleton; H. H. Burford, La Crosse; Henry Goldman, Green Bay; John R. Ek, national vice-president, Oshkosh.

The time and place of the next state convention was left for decision to the executive committee.

The pictures shown during the convention included: "The Gangsters of New York," Reliance; "Zingo and the White Elephant," Warner's; "Mysteries of Paris," Eclectic; and the one reel Keystone comedy, "Mack at It Again." The exhibitors were well pleased at the showing and many bookings were secured by the various exchange men, among whom were the following: I. A. DeSommers, Western Film Exchange, Milwaukee; Phil Solomon, Warner's Features, Chicago; Walter A. Baier, Pan-American Film Company, Milwaukee branch; Carl Hartill, Union Film Company, Chicago; Paul H. Bush, Eclectic Film Company, Chicago; H. A. Wolfgram, World's Film Corporation, Minneapolis; W. C. Brimmer, Universal Film Exchange, Milwaukee; O. H. Jacobs, theatre supply man of Milwaukee; and H. R. Hedden, Wolverine Feature Film Company, Milwaukee.

Others conspicuous from start to finish of the convention were C. J. Ver Haken, Chicago manager, Monroes Picture News, and M. G. Watkins, manager of production of the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation, Chicago, who secured several contracts for making local pictures in various Wisconsin towns this spring.

It is needless to say that the convention was a huge success in every way. The visiting exhibitors expressed themselves as having had a great time socially and otherwise.

South Carolina Convention Plans

Exhibitors' League Gathering Will Unite with Independence Day Fête to Turn Charlotte, N. C., Into a Gala City

Charlotte, N. C., April 15

CHARLOTTE is going to have its municipal hands full from May 18 to May 20. On the one hand, she will be celebrating North Carolina's Independence Day on May 20. On the other, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America will be holding a twin State convention, for both North and South Carolina, on the three dates enumerated above.

The two events will naturally merge into one grand celebration in many respects. The motion picture men are preparing to take a prominent part in the Independence celebration, and this festival, in turn, will lend a brilliant background to the gathering of the exhibitors.

The committee of the motion picture league convention has made arrangements to have the exhibitors and their friends to march in the great parade and to have a float called "Exhibitors' League."

The committee of the convention is preparing a souvenir program to be mailed to the exhibitors of North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, Tennessee and Georgia, to invite them to come and join in making the affair a big success. It is expected that many will respond to the invitation. The manufacturers wishing to be represented in the Exhibition Hall, the program and the parade can address North and South Carolina Motion Picture Convention, Stonewall Hotel, Charlotte, N. C.

The committee said that the Universal Film Supply Company, a new industry for Charlotte, the Mutual Film Corporation, the General Film Company, the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, the Greater New York Film Rental Company and others are making preparations to have floats in the parade to represent the motion picture industry as they are related to it.
WHERE PERSONALITY COUNTS

The Smaller the Town, the Bigger a Factor Personality Is in Making a Motion Picture Theatre Pay—This Article Tells How One Man Took Hold of a House That Had Been Idle Two Years and "Brought It To Life"

If I only had the capital I know I could make a success out of a motion picture theatre," remarked Don Barker to his pretty young wife one night, as they returned to their three-room apartment.

"It certainly is a crying shame that a mere matter of dollars stands between you and success, Don," replied his wife, who had implicit faith in her husband's ability to make his mark in the world. "How much would it take, dear, to buy up one of the small theatres in this locality?"

"Far more than we have," was the blunt answer. "At our last accounting, our bank book showed a balance of slightly more than $300. It would take five times that amount to get a theatre that's any good at all!"

"Can't you borrow the money (from some of your relatives or friends)?" queried Mrs. Barker.

"They would demand better security than a motion picture house; my ability at theatre management has never been tested."

"Well, dear, can't we go to a small town where our limited capital will give us a start," his wife suggested.

Such an idea had never occurred to him, and it gave him food for reflection, although he said nothing to his wife about it at the time and their conversation drifted into different channels.

Don Barker was the drummer in the leading motion picture theatre in Evanston, Ill., and his wife was the ticket seller. They were of the same age, twenty-two years, and had been married less than a year, shortly after their graduation from high school, where they had been sweetheart.

Life in their small apartment did not hold any charms for his wife, and shortly after their marriage she had prevailed upon Don to get her the position as ticket seller at the theatre where he worked.

On the morning following their discussion of Don's theatrical ambitions, he rose early and telling his wife he had an appointment with a friend, caught a train to Chicago. There he made straight for the exchange through which the theatre at which he worked secured its pictures.

"Do you know of any Illinois town of two or three thousand inhabitants where there is a good opening for a motion picture theatre?" queried Don of the manager of the exchange.

"Let me think," came the meditative reply. "Oh, yes, there is a place of two thousand inhabitants near Springfield, Ill., where we used to send films, but it was closed up more than two years ago. An old fellow started it and it lasted only a few months. When he closed up he wrote in and told us if we could find him a buyer he would sell out for $250 and give good terms."

After he had learned all he could about the prospective location and secured the exchange's best terms for film service, Don returned home. Then he unfolded his plans to his wife.

An exchange of correspondence with the owner of the closed theatre followed, and before two weeks had elapsed a sale had been effected. The terms were half cash and the other half on a year's time.

Unused to small-town life, the first week put the young couple to a real test, but they survived it. During that time they had the theatre building—an old wooden structure—rebuilt, redecorated and renamed. It was now the Lyric Theatre. Its seating capacity was two hundred and the admission was fixed at ten cents.

For the first two months Barker adhered to the advertising methods used by his former employer and obtained but indifferent results.

"I have gauged the situation wrong," remarked Don to his wife one night in the village hotel where they were living for appearance. "After making a careful study of the existing conditions I have decided to follow a new avenue of attack to win success."

Within a week he had established ten regular poster stands, six in the business district and four on prominent corners in the residence sections. In the town's weekly newspaper he advertised the high-class shows he conducted. Heralds were used for all his feature pictures, which he ran three nights a week. And he and his wife had moved to a cottage.

While his new advertising schemes brought results, yet he was not satisfied. He was establishing a fair, regular patronage; but he believed it could and should be doubled.

Instead of cleaning out the theatre himself for a week, Don hired a boy to do it and spent the forenoons loitering around the business houses and participating in the "cracker box" gossip. It was a profitably spent week, for it gave him the key to success.

Personal contact and appeal was what was needed, he decided.

By taking tickets the new manager had become acquainted with all of his regular patrons. Those whom he had never seen in his theatre he called on in person and invited them over to his show, giving them complimentary tickets. To aid him in this he enlisted the aid of several members of the town's commercial club, who had proffered their assistance.

Before six months had passed the Lyric Theatre was being packed to capacity at the two evening shows.

From his place of vantage as ticket taker, Mr. Barker was able to know just who attended his shows. When the patron would be absent several evenings, Mr. Barker would make it a point to mention the fact at their next meeting, in an offhand manner.

An intimate acquaintance with the president of the village board resulted in the latter's becoming a regular patron, and as he was a prominent man in the community, other prominent people followed suit.

Saturday was the only day of the week on which the Lyric had a matinee. It catered entirely to the children, and two extra reels of comedy were added to the regular evening program to make it attractive for the little folk.

Whenever possible, Mr. Barker secured a good educational picture and gave a complimentary matinee exhibition to the school children. The slight cost was far more than offset by the ultimate results, as it made motion picture "fans" out of many of the children.

As the town was a residence community exclusively, Mr. Barker ran only high-class pictures, never showing any questionable films. His space in the weekly is now devoted exclusively to telling of his coming attractions, while his poster stands and heralds do the daily advertising, together with his "personal" appeals.

It has been three years since Mr. and Mrs. Barker landed in the village, but they are not always going to remain there.

As soon as they have saved $3,000, which will only take another year, they are going back to one of Chicago's suburbs and open a theatre—the kind they dreamed about while working in Evanston.
West Is Strong for Features

SOL LESSER, president and general manager of the Golgate Feature Service of San Francisco, has returned to the Coast from New York, having purchased features enough, he says, "to stretch from coast to coast." Among Mr. Lesser's purchases are "Old Curiosity Shop," "Pantomas Series," "The Cloister and the Hearth," a number of Apex features, "Judgment of the Jungle" and the following Great Northern Preferred features: "Acquitted," "The Gambler's Penalty," and "Paradise Lost."

There is a big demand, Mr. Lesser says, throughout his territory for big features, but they must be strictly high class. Anything over five reels "must have the goods," that is, they must be high class through and through, and the titles must have drawing power.

Only the large theatres, however, demand such features. The smaller houses want good films, of course, but their demand is for three and four reels with single and split reels to fill in the program.

Mr. Lesser is buying now only on screen examination. In his estimation, there is an over production at present of small pictures and not enough of the big high-class pictures.

The competition in San Francisco for big features is very keen on account of the number of large theatres there.

Mr. Lesser's idea in renting features in this city and other large cities is to give one house exclusive service on the feature, with the provision that the same picture will not be booked again in this city for one year. This will enable the theatre to advertise extensively and run the film for a longer time at a higher price of admission, which he contends is necessary to stimulate the production of high-class features.

The smaller or district houses will then secure this feature at the end of the year on a lower rental basis.

A bien enthousiastic, says Mr. Lesser, prevails to-day in Denver on account of the low prices charged at the theatres. The ruling price is five cents, no extra charge being made for the showing of high-class and well-known features. Such pictures, for instance, as "Arizona" have recently been shown there for five cents. This condition of affairs is ruinous to exhibitor, renter and manufacturer alike.

Florida Exhibitors Convene Elect Delegates to Dayton Convention—Increase in Membership Looked for at Next Meeting

Tampa, Fla., April 14

The Second Semi-Annual Convention Florida State Branch No. 33, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, was held at Sanford, Fla., April 5, 6 and 7.

Nearly all exhibitors who have joined the league in Florida were present. While this meeting was chiefly for the purpose of enlarging the membership, many things of interest to exhibitors were discussed. Several new members came into the league and the prospects for the next meeting, which will be held at West Palm Beach, look very favorable. It is expected the enrollment will go beyond the century mark.

President Griffith tendered his resignation to the league, but it was not accepted and was laid by until the next meeting, when the regular election of officers takes place.

Louis Kalbfeld, of Patalka; Alfred Tano, of Kissimmee; A. H. Labeile, of Tampa; Carl Kettler, "The Moving Picture Man," of West Palm Beach, and L. P. Davis, of Arcadia, were elected delegates to the National Convention, at Dayton, Ohio.

The entertainment and welcome extended by the Elks of Sanford was greatly appreciated by the exhibitors, for they placed their club rooms at the disposal of the exhibitors during their sojourn there, and many enjoyed their hospitality.

Joseph Klein, from the Atlanta office of the Warner's Features Company, was the only representative of the film companies present.

After the meeting adjourned the exhibitors in a body attended "The Last Ghost Dance," exhibited by Mr. Moline at the Star Theatre, which was greatly enjoyed by all. The following day the exhibitors took an auto trip to Orlando, and from there to Kissimmee, as guests of Mr. Tano, of the Dixie Theatre, Kissimmee.

Uncle Sam as an Exhibitor

The National Public Health Service Is Preparing Health and Hygiene Films for the Education of Every American—Those Now in Use Touch on Immigration Conditions, Preparation of Anti-Toxins, Plagues and the Like

UNDER the direction of Assistant Surgeon-General William C. Rucker, the United States Public Health Service has entered significantly into the motion picture business. This official is an advocate in the usefulness and teaching quality of cinematography and he means to develop this branch of the service to the fullest extent.

In an interview with General Rucker he was most enthusiastic on this subject.

"It is my plan to popularize public health and hygiene in all walks of life," he said, "And the most effective means of accomplishing this end is through the motion picture.

"At present I have at my disposal a mile of film which presents subjects and problems which interest some and assist others. A part of this gives a concise account of the work now in progress in this service, containing many scientific and instructive topics that may be carried into the homes, the hospitals and the colleges.

"The problems that confront the big Hygienic Laboratory of the nation at Washington are touched upon. The examinations necessary for the sale of antitoxins, serums, and vaccines in interstate traffic tell the story of Uncle Sam's caution in this direction. This is in itself so vast a subject that it will be given greater detail in future reels.

"The experiments at the Baby Milk Station will interest everyone, especially the feminine public. Comparative tests for feeding infants have furnished statistics of vital importance, for the nation recognizes the fact that the children of today mean the backbone of the future nation.

"The preparation of antitoxins and virus and the standardizing of drugs form a part of this mile of celluloid ribbon. Some lessons for the home may be derived from that section which depicts the chemical and biological examination of water and sewage. In this connection the United States Battleship "Bratton" is being employed for the sanitary investigation of the Potomac watershed. It is interesting to note that this vessel bears the name of the hero who gave his life in fighting the yellow fever.

"Nor do we intend to stop in our home waters. We anticipate adding other reels to this subject which will extend into the Ohio Valley and the Great Lakes. Such studies and investigations will mean much to the health of the nation.

"One of the most interesting films which the Public Health Service has secured is that which depicts the arrival and quarantine of immigrants at Ellis Island. Special emphasis is laid upon the caution with which Uncle Sam safeguards his ports against contagious diseases from foreign lands.

"Co-equal with this care is the kindness with which the immigrants are treated, especially the children. The wholesome food, the hygienic surroundings, and the humane consideration tendered these strangers in a strange land have made our country an asylum for the poor and oppressed. From the delight and exclamations of the youngsters, it is safe to say that they never before enjoyed any approach to such luxury.

"It will be by the frequent use of the animated camera that we will be best prepared to study conditions at our immigration ports. These will at all times be scenes as they happen, with no staging for effects.

"ANOTHER educational reel is that which presents views of the Marine Hospital at Stapleton, Staten Island. The day's routine is entertainingly shown, laying special stress on hygiene conditions.

"The reels which depicts a problem which is now causing serious consideration by national and state legislature are those of the California quarantine station at Angel Island. This is the great guardian of the nation against oriental invasion and from the pictures an intelligent idea may be gained of the causes for considering restriction of such immigration.

"It is the great care exercised at this port which has kept out of the United States many of the epidemics of diseases which are prevalent in the East.

"A film which tells the housekeeper how she may assist in health and hygiene condition is that of the Bubonic Plague. It pictures the rat at work causing the spread of this pest and shows how these messengers of contagion may be decreased by the proper covering of garbage and refuse, by doing away with trash piles and by keeping clean the dark, damp corners. As the rat is the carrier of the Bubonic Plague, so the ground squirrel perpetuates the disease. The film also tells of means for eradicating this bothersome earth animal, whose decrease has already been found beneficial to San Francisco.

"OF course our work in motion pictures has only begun," went on Col. Rucker. "We have other films in the course of preparation, while the many subjects I mean to put before the animated camera are too numerous to mention.

"Among the first things I shall picture will be a series on diseases which may be lessened by public solicitation, such as the hookworm, typhoid fever and malaria.

"Another series will be for the house and farm on the insect pests which disturb the health of the community and which could be greatly minimized by attention. The housekeeper will be given simple lessons on the care of food, proper ventilation, dust, sunlight, etc., which will add to home comforts and save the doctor's bill.

"Oh, there are lots of things to be taught by motion pictures and every day presents some new subject for the animated camera."

WHEN questioned as to how these programs are to be circulated, Gen. Rucker said, "That point has not quite been determined, but plans are now under consideration whereby..."
our films may effectively reach the public. We mean to attract the people—\(all\) the people.

"So far our films have been exhibited only at conventions and private assemblies, but they have created favorable comment from the laymen. Many of the pictures which we shall make may be beneficially shown in the public schools.

"Already we have had applications from colleges for copies of the films we have and for such others on certain subjects as we may issue in the future.

"I might add," continued Col. Rucker, "That not all of our motion pictures will be purely educational or scientific. Many subjects in the future will be put into plays which will teach some specific lesson of hygiene or health. It is only through this entertaining form that we can impress youthful minds and people of small intelligence, as well as the man who is so busy with his own affairs he does not stop to think of others.

"I aim to make health and hygiene as much a part of household economics as eating and sleeping and working.

"This is to be a country-wide campaign with the motion pictures as my publicity agent."

FOURTEEN MASS. CITIES PERMIT SUNDAY OPENING

Fourteen cities in Massachusetts permit motion picture theatres to operate on Sunday, according to a canvas made by police chief G. H. Hill, of Worcester, who consulted the police chiefs of twenty-six cities of the Bay State on this question.

The cities permitting open theatres on Sunday are: Gloucester, Lawrence, Lynn, Fall River, Springfield, Chicopee, Holyoke, Northampton, Westfield, Pittsfield, Chelsea, Lowell, Newton, Holyoke, Pittsfield, Chicopee, and Marlboro. Medford occasionally allows open houses for purposes of charity.

The municipalities which forbid the theatres to operate on Sunday are: Cambridge, Newburyport, Taunton, Northampton, Brockton, Malden, Woburn, Fitchburg, Beverly, Everett, Waltham and New Bedford.

EXHIBITOR GOES BANKRUPT

The Fitzhugh Hall Amusement Company, of Buffalo, N. Y., were forced into bankruptcy on April 1, by seven creditors filing their claims in the United States District Court in that city. The company operated a motion picture theatre.

The creditors include the Victor Film Service, of Buffalo, with a claim of $441.37; the Rex Film Exchange with a claim of $510.40 and the Warner Features Company with a claim of $271.67.

Shipping Film by Parcels Post

System, As Yet, by No Means Perfect, Although in Most Cases Rate Is Cheaper Than That of Express Companies

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., April 15.

PARCELS post as an agent in the handling of films is one of the latest innovations in the motion picture business. Uncle Sam's regulation permitting packages weighing up to fifty pounds to pass through parcels post went into effect in February with the result that film service companies have since been giving the new postal department a tryout.

The post-office department, however, has placed one restriction on the handling of motion picture films—they will only carry the films 150 miles from their mailing point. This limits necessarily the express business that might go to the government, but post-office officials in this city say that reports from Washington are to the effect that the parcels post system will be enlarged just as soon as the new department is noted that the express business is bound to smooth working order.

Fred S. Meyer, of the Laemmle Film Service Company of Minneapolis, is one who has been experimenting with the parcels post as a means of handling the films of the company throughout the State of Minnesota.

"There is now too much delay when you send films by parcels post," said Mr. Meyer in discussing the question recently. "Then there is the exposure and rough handling, which films get in passing through the mails, that in my opinion makes the system still inadequate for practical use to film agencies. Of course in many instances the parcels post rates will be a little cheaper than the express rates for handling the films, but when you take into account the inefficiency of the government system you realize that it does not pay. At least not under the present management of the parcels post.

"Express companies will insure your films and can accommodate you in many other ways, which parcels post officials will not grant you. Until faster handling of the mail occurs and provision is made for carrying films more than 150 miles from the point of sending, I do not think parcels post will prove satisfactory to the motion picture man."

In comparing the rates of the parcels post system with that of express companies running out of Minneapolis, the facts are that express companies mail carries fifty pounds of films within the first zone of fifty miles for the flat rate of fifty-four cents. Taken with all points considered, this is a great deal more expensive than the rate offered by express companies for the same haul, for under the parcels post system the fifty-four cents will be charged whether the films are to go only eight miles from Minneapolis or the full fifty miles. A charge of only twenty cents is made by express companies for handling fifty pounds of film for eight miles, while the rate for a point fifty miles from this city would be sixty cents, a little higher than that offered by the parcels post system.

In comparing express company rates with parcels post rates in the second zone of the post-office department, or 150 miles from the sending point, the mailing limit allowed by the government for fifty-pound packages, it is found that the mail system, in outward cost, is a great deal cheaper than that of the express companies. The same rate for fifty pounds of films in the first zone, which is within a limit of fifty miles from Minneapolis, for carrying of which fifty-four cents is charged, is exactly the same rate that is applied to the second zone, which is within a 150-mile limit from Minneapolis.

The express rate for carrying the parcels post weight limit of films the distance of 150 miles is ninety-five cents or nearly double the postage rate required by the government for handling the same amount of film.

"When the parcels post system becomes reliable, that is, when you can count on the delivery of your films without delay and when they increase their service so that there is not so much delay in handling the films, then the parcel post department will become a good business agent for the motion picture film service," said Mr. Meyer.

FILMING OCEAN'S DEPTHS FOR THANHouser

Carl Gregory, of the Thanhouser forces, has sailed for the Bahamas via the Ward line. Here he will take the submarine scene which will be one of the thrillers in "The Million-Dollar Mystery," now being made at New Rochelle for the Syndicate Film Corporation.

It is expected that this underwater scene will be one of the most wonderful of its kind ever taken. Mr. Gregory will lower himself in an especially constructed steel chamber to a depth of one thousand feet, if necessary, and there take the scene.

"The Million-Dollar Mystery" is to be produced by the Thanhouser Company in serial form and it gives promise of being one of the most exciting pictures of this sort yet produced.
Outrageous Taxes Burden Exhibitors in Italy and Holland—$120 a Day Tax on Largest Houses Is Threatened—New Film Firm Will Produce Operas—Big Theatres Go Over to Pictures

A SYSTEM of taxation that will bring every exhibitor in Italy to the brink of ruin if adopted has been formulated by the Italian Government. It is so exorbitant as to be almost incredible, were not the figures given here vouched for as authentic by the press of Italy and France.

For the purposes of the tax the motion picture theatres are divided into three groups, according to their seating capacity. Theatres of the first class are those accommodating 1,000 persons. Those of the second class 500 persons, and those of the third class 350 persons.

The tax is imposed for each performance, or show. Theatres of the first class are to be taxed sixty-six francs, centimes, or about $12.25 per show. The second class twenty-six francs, fifty-five centimes, or about $5.15 per show. Those of the third class fourteen francs, ninety centimes, or about $3 per show.

A French trade journal, "The Film Review," estimating that each theatre gives nine performances a day, declares that at this rate theatres of the first class will be paying the unheard of daily tax of 600 francs, or $120 a day, and 217,751 francs a year, or, in round numbers, $43,556.

The situation is a grave one for the Italian exhibitors. They, together with all the producing companies of the kingdom, have placed their interests in the hands of able counsel.

So keenly did the producers of Italy realize the danger of destruction that menaced them, that a commission, headed by Signor Pasquali, who has just been made chevalier of the crown of Italy, waited upon Minister of Finance Facta, and pleaded with him to hesitate before advocating such a fatal measure.

As a result of the conference, it seems likely that the small exhibitors may be exempted from the burdens of the tax. The minister assured the committee that the government appreciated the importance of the motion picture industry and the good it was doing, but held out no definite hope that the general features of the tax would be materially mitigated.

Grasping Taxation in Holland

The motion picture theatres of Amsterdam, Holland, are in a desperate condition, according to the Dutch correspondent of "Le Film," of Paris. Severe competition is telling on the prosperity of the individual exhibitors and, as if this were not enough the municipal governments are harressing them with exorbitant taxes.

The city, for instance, exacts a fee of 13 per cent of the receipts, and as it is the city authorities who furnish the cinemas with tickets of admission, they have a controlling hand on the amount of the receipts at each house.

The exhibitors of Amsterdam have formed a Protective Association, and have entered into negotiations with the municipal authorities for a reduction of these heavy duties. They declare that unless they are lowered many of the houses will be forced to close. Several of the large ones have suspended business.

In Rotterdam the authorities have begun to cripple the motion picture business by absolutely forbidding all children under fifteen years of age to attend the theatres. The exhibitors protest that this ordinance is an injustice unless it is made applicable to all kinds of amusements and will probably fight to have it rescinded.

To Screen Grand Opera

A producing company, to be known as "Musical-Film," has just been formed in Milan, Italy, to make screen versions of the principal grand operas, light operas, opera bouffes, musical comedies and the like.

Signor Sontzogno, the music publisher, is one of the leading spirits in the enterprise. The music for their first production will be composed by Mascagni, the composer of "Cavalleria Rusticana."

Big Theatres Yield to Films

Much to the dismay of the legitimate theatre, the popularity of the motion picture seems to be sweeping everything before it in more than one country in Europe. In Milan, the "Dal Verme," which seats nearly 5,000 persons, has been converted into a "cinema" by one of the large producing companies. At Rome, the Apollo and the Argentine, both large theatres, have succumbed to pictures.

Two of the biggest houses in Genoa have gone the same way, and one in Turin.

At Genoa the fashionable Cafe "Roma," which was once the rendezvous of the elite of the city and of distinguished visitors from other countries, is to be replaced by a large motion picture theatre.

Not only in Italy are theatres being worsted by competition with the cinemas. The Theatre of Hamburg, Germany, is in such straits that the director, M. Loewenfeld, has offered his resignation. The theatres of Switzerland are equally desperate.

The latest defection from the "legitimate" ranks is that of the "Lirico" in Milan, the next largest theatre to La Scala, which has just begun its career as a motion picture theatre.

A School of Cinematography

A school of cinematography will shortly be opened in Turin, Italy, where it is proposed to give instruction in every department of motion picture activity to their pupils.

Report on Films in Schools

An exhaustive report on the question of motion pictures in the schools will be made to the Fourth International Congress of Education which will be held in Leipsic, Germany, September 25 to 29.

A "Palace of Cinematography" will be one of the features of the International Exposition at Dusseldorf, Germany, in 1915. The municipal council of the city are preparing to erect the building within the exposition grounds, and it will be devoted to the illustration of scientific and historic films.

A motion picture theatre seating 700 will be one of the noteworthy parts of the Hygiene Exposition at Stuttgart, to be held in October.

Court Upholds Exhibitors

The problem of admitting children to motion pictures has taken on a peculiar aspect in Hamburg. The public prosecutor has obtained an ordinance forbidding the entrance of children under sixteen years of age into the cinemas.

Recently this law was the subject of a court trial. Strange to say, the court held that it was invalid. When the public prosecutor recovered from his astonishment he promptly took an appeal. But it is probably the first time in the world's history that the power of the police or the city government to prohibit children from entering motion picture theatres has been challenged.

Drastic Censorship

A rigorous censorship law is already in operation in Wurttemberg, one of the states of the German Empire. No film is permitted to be shown there without the authorization of the censor. Even then, if a question of local policy arises, the police can further prohibit the showing of a picture the censor has passed. Children under seventeen years of age are absolutely prohibited from the motion picture theatres.
A NOVELTY THAT WILL WIN
In these days when chewing gum is probably as universal an occupation as can be found, and space is increasing in value all the time, the Inter-State Vending Company, of 1476 Broadway, New York City, has devised a plan that can hardly fail to attract the exhibitor. The connection between chewing gum and space may not be, at first blush, apparent. Nor was it until the Inter-State entered the field with their "Midget" automatic vending machine.

The proposition involves the utilization of the backs of the seats in the motion picture theatres, as that same spot is used in vaudeville and legitimate theatres at the present time.

Each "Midget" holds fifteen pieces of chewing gum, to be sold at a penny a piece. The machine costs $1.50. The manufacturers estimate that, at the lowest returns, one hundred Midgets would bring in $3 a day. A goodly percentage of them would return more inevitably. The chewing gum itself costs forty cents for every one hundred pieces. The purchase price makes the machine the property of the exhibitor, and at any time the machine is out of order or proves unsatisfactory, the company guarantees to replace it free of charge.

CONSUL SEES "QUO VADIS"
Signor Conti, Italian consul stationed at Milwaukee, Wis., recently witnessed a performance of "Quo Vadis?" The signor recognized in some of the scenes the Villa Pia and the Villa Pedrosa.

"I marvel," said Conti, after the show, "at the influence that was brought to bear on the King of Italy to permit pictures to be taken in these villas, as they have been closed since 1871, during which time no one has been allowed to enter the gates. Even the shutters have been tightly closed and fastened."

FILMING HISTORY
One of the good uses for motion picture films is for recording historic events. Not long ago the King of Roumania ordered the production of a film of no less than 3,000 yards' length, this being a reproduction of the Roumanian-Russo-Turkish war, which determined the independence of that country. The film will be kept in the archives of the realm.

In order to carry this out the army lent 8,900 men in uniform with arms and baggage, led by the officers.

Another case is that of the Italian government, which is collecting all the films taken during the war in Tripoli. In England the same thing is done for the films of the king's coronation events.

Europe Wants Exclusive Service
So Says "Dick" Edmondson of London and New York—Open Market Has Declined Sixty Per Cent—Other Conditions Abroad

"DICK" EDMONDSON, manufacturer, renter, agent and exhibitor, with offices at 19 Cecil Court, London, W. C., and 220 West Forty-second street, New York City, also a rapid-fire visitor at the various continental cities, is in New York for a few weeks on his twenty-sixth trip across the Atlantic.

He is the same "Dick" Edmondson, big, hearty, likeable, whom practically everybody in the film industry on both sides of the ocean has known since he started with it in California, when the first pictures were made and shown in this country.

Nearly all of the renting being done abroad at the present time, says Mr. Edmondson, is on the exclusive service basis. The open market has declined sixty per cent in the last two years. The change came, Mr. Edmondson recalls, following such instances as the "Black Mark" film of which he sold one hundred and ten copies in England, Australia and South Africa, with the result that the majority of exhibitors were showing the picture at the same time.

Every popular film like this had much the same experience. The result was that business was so divided that each house had a struggle not to lose money. The exhibitor now demands to be protected. Hence the growth of the exclusive idea. Mr. Edmondson does not believe that an open market will ever prevail in this country.

The demand for pictures abroad has practically settled down entirely to three-reel subjects. These are shown on the programs with a split-reel comedy or a scenic. There is little demand for anything over three thousand feet.

The continental films, says Mr. Edmondson, are enjoying a wider market than ever before. The reason for this is that they are not so provincial in character as formerly. The continental manufacturers are using English scenarios and scenes in an effort now successful, of making their pictures appeal to the English-speaking countries.

The demand abroad is for the film with the "punch" in it. By this, however, is meant the picture that is sensational, only because of good action and not because it depicts immorality.

Detective plots are greatly in demand. There is a decided antipathy to slave traffic pictures and representation in general of the underworld. Censorship conditions in England are in general satisfactory. Business in Germany is very bad. Good pictures are being made but not sold there. Decided friction still exists between the manufacturers and exhibitors.

The most significant change in the motion picture situation abroad is the fact that the better classes of people are patronizing the theatres everywhere. The popular admission prices to the picture theatres are twelve and twenty-five cents.

There are more theatres in England, according to the population, in Mr. Edmondson's estimation, than in the United States. In and around Manchester, for instance, within a radius of sixteen miles, there are nearly one thousand theatres. Most of the theatres have special music for each production.

Mr. Edmondson is advertising the brands of films he handles in the London subways. Large posters are used, featuring the production and with some such catch-line as "Have you seen this in your local theatre?"

BUY AND SELL POSTERS
The Davis Brothers are conducting a business at 158 Eddy street, San Francisco, Cal., buying posters of from first run to sixty days. They are also making posters and post-cards of well-known screen artists. They report that the sale of "The Perils of Pauline" posters and pictures of Pearl White is very large.
EDITOR'S NOTE.—It is the desire of "The Motion Picture News" to include under this heading novel advertising ideas, successful schemes in the management, decoration and equipment of the theatre—everything, in fact, done by the exhibitor to stimulate his trade. We invite every exhibitor to write us about any new enterprise he has; also to come to us for advice or information along any line.

HOW ONE EXCHANGE SAVES MONEY

W. C. BRIMMER, manager of Western Film Exchange, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, one of the branches of the Anti-Trust Film Company, of Chicago, and handling the Universal program, has insured himself against excess toll charges by the telephone company.

Long distance calls are frequent in practically all exchanges, and the bills are far from small. To obtain an accurate record of his bills Mr. Brimmer has had attached to his telephone an instrument known as a toll-meter.

It works on the principle of a stop-watch. As soon as the call is received, and the long-distance wire opened to conversation, Mr. Brimmer starts the second-hand of the toll-meter by pressing a small lever. The second-hand in turn, gauges the movements of the minute-hand, so that when the call is discontinued there is a record of the exact number of minutes and seconds. The time is entered upon a small pad attached to the instrument.

"It has saved me uncertainty regarding the size of our toll bills," explains Mr. Brimmer, "and I am able to check the time down to the fraction of a second. I now always know in advance just what the toll bills will be."

A MODEL "THEATRETTE"

EAST POINT, GA., is getting a lesson in what a motion picture theatre ought to be in the new house that J. J. Mack is building in that little Southern community. The theatre is practically ready for its patrons, and its "unveiling" is expected almost any day now.

Mr. Mack, it appears, learned the science and the art—it's both!—by being an exhibitor in the North and then went down to Atlanta to seek his fortunes in a new field.

He selected East Point as the scene of one of his first operations, and set out to work constructing a theatre that should be modern in all particulars and a "little beauty" of its size.

The house will only seat 300, in fact, it's a "theatrette," but Mr. Mack has taken as much care to make it above reproach as if it were to hold 3,000.

The new theatre will be equipped with Wisconsin opera chairs of the latest and best type. Oscillating and exhaust fans will insure ample supplies of fresh air. Imitation ferns are being skilfully used as part of interior decorations.

Two Simplex machines will furnish the projection, and electric pianos will provide the musical accompaniment for the pictures. Not the least attractive part of the building will be the lobby, where nine brass frames will give Mr. Mack ample opportunity for effective displays and announcements.

FOR HIGHER PRICES

Editor The Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Dear Sir: I wish to express my appreciation of the notice which you gave our theatre in your issue of March 14, and to thank you for the same.

I am heartily in favor of your campaign for higher prices, not only for features but for general admission daily.

I do not believe in the nickel theatre. We charge here ten cents for three reels daily and also for four-reel features. As there is a strong sentiment against a raise in prices I have discontinued using features of more than four reels, except in rare instances.

However, I am studying the situation and before long think I can evolve a plan whereby I can use the longer features and also get more money for them.

I shall be glad to advise you as to what plan I put into effect and also how it works out.

Very truly yours,

M. M. MacCORMACK,
Austin, Texas.

DISLIKES COMMON NAMES

O. F. Langworthy, manager of the "Thee Show," is a believer in uncommon names, hence his theatre title. He says there is far too much duplication, and very little originality shown in the selection of a name.

His theatre in Sisterville, W. Va., is spoken of as one of the neatest in the State.

A LIVE WIRE MERCHANT

M. D. Brennan, a hardware merchant at Kilkenny, Minn., realizing the demand of local people in his town for “movie” entertainments, has turned a room in his store over to motion pictures and with bright lights displayed in front of a sign bearing the words “Downland Theatre” is inviting the town people to drop in work at 7 p.m. and see the latest in motion pictures.

HEARD IN THE LOBBIES

A recent deal has given Frank Puckett, of Pueblo, Colo., the Photoplay Theatre in addition to his own house, the White City.

Messrs. Olsen and W. O. Powers will operate the new motion picture theatre that is being built at Glennwood Springs, Colo.

The Lear's Theatre Supply Company, of St. Louis, has contracts for the refinishing of several large motion picture theatres during the summer season.

The Maffitt Theatre, St. Louis, which recently passed into the hands of “Billy” Goldman, is reporting consistent success under his direction. Sedalia, Mo., is “serenically” speaking, owned and operated by Mr. Brill. For some time he has owned four out of the five motion picture theatres in the city. Then he bought out his sole surviving competitor, and is now “monarch of all he surveys.”

Spirited negotiations are going on for the control of the Stanount Theatre in Staunton, Ill. The liveliest bidder for the house is the publisher of the St. Louis Sunday Evening "Telegraph," Maurice Engel.

A new motion picture theatre is in process of construction in Rocky Ford, Colo., and another at Raton, New Mexico.

William F. Bennett has just erected Maple Theatre in Richmond Hill, L. I., at a cost of $35,000, with a seating capacity of 600. Mr. Bennett is an old show man and is thoroughly conversant with the picture business.

The North Branch, Minn., opera house has been renamed the “Family Theatre” and under the management of W. E. Stothoff has been turned entirely over to motion pictures.

The Watkins Amusement Company have purchased from J. A. Frachette the Watkins Theatre, Watkins, Minn., and have opened it as a motion picture house.

Gilbert Sandland, of Long Prairie, Minn., has opened up a new motion picture theatre at Nymore, Minn.

“It is one of the safest theatres in the Northwest,” said Fire Marshal Arthur Price, of Minneapolis, Minn., following the installation of a $2,000 sprinkling system in the Saxe Brothers’ Lyric Theatre in that city last week. J. F. Schwee is manager.

Jay W. Craig has purchased the Wonderland Theatre at Tracy, Minn.

Ladies’ Entertainment: Mrs. F. W. Baker, chairman; C. A. Penn, secretary; A. M. Wells, vice-chairman; Chas. Kein, R. J. Kastle, Chas. Gross.

HIGH GRADE IN A NEW FIELD

The High Grade Feature Film Company, who have been doing business for some time under that name in the Candle Building, 220 West Forty-second street, New York, as states rights buyers for New York and New Jersey, have decided to increase their business. Renting new offices in the same building and selling all the films on which they owned territory, they have become purchasers of films from abroad, which they intend selling all over the country.

“The Divine Law” will be their first picture, released April 15, and others will follow at the rate of two a month.

Large offices have been fitted out and space allotted for a projection booth. As soon as this is finished, active business will commence.

J. Joulsohn, the president of the company, intends going to Europe in May to complete arrangements for the purchasing of good four- and five-reel features.

The officers are: J. Joulsohn, president; L. D’Estere, treasurer; and F. M. Wells, secretary.

Trade Notes

To Clean Films without Danger
Benzone or benzole for cleaning films is most inconvenient and also dangerous. Not only has benzone a disagreeable smell, but its vapors are poisonous and inflammable as well. Other products exist which are used in various industries as solvents or grease removers, but none of these have yet been applied to the film industry.

Trichlorethylene is one of the best and would suit the film industry better than any other, if used instead of benzole or benzine. Trichlorethylene is liquid, and not only is it a cheap product but it is absolutely non-inflammable, and besides does not affect the body of the film. It has other virtues also. It dries speedily, and cleans equally well celluloid and acetylcellulose (non-inflammable) films.

Warning!
The German Motion Picture Paper "Projektion" contains this week a warning against the German Edison Company known as the "Deutsche Edison-Kinetophon-Gesellschaft" having its offices at Berlin and Vienna and all other infringers of the German Patent 177,685 covering a system of talking pictures and belonging to the German firm "Meester's Projektion."

An Interesting Book
Those operators who have a knowledge of the French language will doubtless find much that is valuable in reading the "Manuel Pratique" published by "Le Courrier Cinematographique" of Paris.

The book in question is not purposed exclusively for operators, but for all those who are interested in the motion picture industry. It is no more possible to become an operator by studying the "Manuel" than by studying any other book, but a good operator will certainly find a number of interesting things in the "Manuel," which are hard to bear in mind and which can only be found in a small library of reference books and other publications.

The book is fully illustrated and the various technical details dealt with are explained with great simplicity and clearness, so that with the aid of the drawings and illustrations very little French is really necessary to understand the subjects.

How to Write on Films
If you cannot find a good indelible ink, here is a formula which will enable you to make some yourself:

Take 500 parts of water and dissolve therein 56 parts of sodium fluoride and 7 parts of sodium sulphate, cover the solution and put aside. Take a second vessel and put in 500 parts of water together with 14 parts of zinc chloride, add 56 parts of concentrated hydrochloric acid.

Mix equal quantities of each solution and add a small piece of dry china ink or a little India ink, or any other which will contrast with the color of the film, after which you can use the product.

The ink, prepared as described, should preferably be kept in rubber containers, as it affects ordinary glass bottles.

ANOTHER BROADWAY HOUSE IN PICTURES

The Globe Theatre, on Broadway, New York, long the home of musical comedy, has entered the ranks and will open on April 27 with "Neptune's Daughter," a Universal picture.

This seven-reel feature, in which Annette Kellerman plays the lead, was made by Herbert Brenon in Bermuda, and it was in the taking of it that Miss Kellerman and he were injured. The scenario written by Captain Leslie T. Peacock was especially constructed so as to feature Miss Kellerman.

NEW KALEM STUDIO

The Kalem Company has just opened its new $25,000 studio at Jacksonville, Fla. The opening was celebrated with a banquet and a dance, at which President and Mrs. Long were among the guests. The new studio is built near the old Ostrich Farm, and its grounds extend for more than a block along Tallyrand Avenue, Jacksonville. It is said to be one of the best studios south of Philadelphia.

Exhibitors Protest Building Code

Pittsburgh Protective Association Votes to Reject First Clause of New Standard by Harrisburg Code Commission

Pittsburgh, Pa., April 15.

The second annual meeting of the Motion Picture Protective Association since becoming a permanent organization was held in the Columbia Theatre, Sunday afternoon, April 12th. The Standard of Motion Picture Theatres, as drawn by the code commission in Harrisburg, was read and each member given a copy. This code met with the disapproval of the body, which voted to eliminate and correct most of the sections in Section 1, which reads:

"All buildings hereafter erected or remodeled for the exhibition of motion pictures, must be of approved fireproof construction, and main auditorium of such motion picture theatre shall not be above or below the ground floor. Nor shall any new motion picture theatre be permitted in a building on a lot of less than 25 feet in width."

This section was voted to be taken out by all but three members, the exhibitors being under the impression that a group of men who control a string of large photoplay houses and are still building, wants to push the little theatre out of their way.

Treasurer M. A. Rapp's report shows a balance of $488.26 in bank.

The complaint of J. A. Wright, of Irwin, Pa., regarding high taxes levied on motion picture houses in the boroughs was given to the committee to look up the decision handed out by a judge in the Allegheny County courts that the boroughs did not have to pay any amusement tax. The information was furnished by F. J. Herrington, who claims that he remembers the decision.

James Delves, who visited Philadelphia last Wednesday to confer with the committee of the eastern part of the state, reported that Mr. Wheeler, president of the Exhibitors' League of Philadelphia, says that there is no protective association in that city, but that the league will amalgamate their forces with either Pittsburgh organization to contribute to and fight unjust legislative acts.

H. B. Miller made a motion, which was passed, to send a committee to Harrisburg to put the many complaints of the out of town exhibitors before John Price Jackson regarding the attempts of Inspector W. G. Wilson to close up their theatres.

The meeting came to a close after the complete body voted that a new section be added to the building code stating that the complete code would not affect theatres now in operation or the plans of new motion picture houses that have been passed by the building inspectors. The next meeting will be at the call of the chair.

First Progressive Picture Coming

"Master Cracksman," with Harry D. Carey, Will Be Ready for Release About May 1—Other Productions

The Progressive Motion Picture Corporation will make their first release on May 1, offering "The Master Cracksman" as their initial production, with Harry D. Carey, formerly of the Biograph, in the title role. By a combination of circumstances, Mr. Carey is star, director and author of the forthcoming drama.

"The Master Cracksman" is a typical drama of the underworld, designed to illustrate Mr. Carey's ability to portray such types, in which he has in the past showed considerable ability. As an actor in such roles, he is conceded to occupy a unique position.

This release will be followed by the first of the "Buzzy Izzy" series, all two-reel comedies, with George Sydney at the helm.

Thereafter, as soon as possible, the Progressive will issue from their City Island studio Carey's Western romance, "Montana," which will be followed by "St. Elmo," "Kitty McKay," and "The Widow by Proxy." The last two are the work of Catherine Chisholm Cushing. Miss Cushing has been retained to write feature scenarios exclusively for the Progressive.

Harry D. Carey, general producer, director and star for the company, has had a varied career in the motion picture world for the past five years. Formerly a playwright and actor in the theatrical world, he first became identified with the Reliance Motion Picture Company as assistant director and scenario writer. Later he was general producer and director of the Washington Motion Picture Company and the National Film Distributing Company.

For the past year and a half Mr. Carey has been assistant director and leading man with the American Biograph Company, and played in one hundred Biograph productions.

Mr. Carey has written more than one hundred motion picture scenarios, and he has written and produced over fifty feature pictures.
Live News of the Week

W. H. Bell, well known in motion picture circles here and abroad, has just returned from an extended business trip to Europe, where he made his headquarters successively in London, Paris and Berlin. "Big doings" are afoot, Mr. Bell sagely remarked as he stepped off the Imperator on Tuesday, but to all pleas for details he was inexpressible. These will come later, and very soon.

Mr. Bell was the organizer of the General Film Special Service in Kansas City not long ago, and was also associated with the management of a large chain of theatres in Australia. On both sides of the equator and the Atlantic he is a familiar figure to motion picture men.

Harry Spingler, who plays the part of the Count de Carojac in "The Banker's Daughter," is an actor of much experience. He has played in "Twickenham Ferry," "Higher Justice" and "Caught in the Web." He has also been with the Mutual Company.

For the enlightenment of the New York Morning Telegraph's "Moving Picture Weekly" and Tracy Lewis, attention is called to the fact that the Radium Gold-Fibre Screen at the Strand Theatre is not a "huge steel curtain"—we quote the above-mentioned "Telegraph"—"absolutely fireproof, which separates the stage from the auditorium."

It is merely the screen upon which the pictures which Tracy probably witnessed at the opening were projected.

The technical expert of the "Moving Picture Weekly" was probably away on his Easter week-end vacation when the interesting news just quoted was written.

The Pathescope was exhibited to the faculty and pupils of the Washington Irving High School, New York, recently with reference to its adaptability for school use. Seventy-five teachers attended the demonstration.

"Trapped in the Great Metropolis," made by the Rolands Feature Film Company, is reported to be having successful runs in New York and Philadelphia.

The Universal Film Exchange, of which Mr. Hoffman is the manager, has moved from 111 East Fourteenth street, to 115 East Twenty-third street, New York, where they occupy an entire floor of 8,000 square feet.

The Florida Feature Film Company, H. C. Dorsey, manager, Mutual Life Building, Jacksonville, Fla., are handling the rights for "The Three Musketeers," Cosmos Film Company's picture, for Virginia, North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Florida. The picture opens on April 20 at the Odeon, Savannah.

Greta Wiesenthal, a "legitimate" actress, plays the leading part in "Kadra Safa," a five-part release of the Wil-Kar Film Company. Miss Wiesenthal has been a pantomimist for years.

"Between Savage and Tiger," released by George Kleine, was exhibited recently by Mrs. George W. Gould in her home at Lakewood, N. J., to a party of friends.

Arthur J. Aylesworth, of Edmonton, Canada, has entered into negotiations with the Pan-American Film Manufacturing Company, of New York, for the establishment of a studio in the Rocky Mountains in Canada, where pictures involving wild animals can be easily obtained.

K. W. Linn, who opened the offices of the Eclectic Film Company in 1912, and has been the manager there ever since, has sailed for Europe, departing April 15 on the Imperator. Mr. Linn will continue with the Eclectic and will act as purchasing agent for them to secure the best films possible on the other side. He will make his headquarters in London, coming to this country but once or twice a year, in order to keep thoroughly in touch with the American market.

Arthur S. Kane will succeed him in the New York office and will assume the title of manager of branches.

Sol Lesser, president and general manager of the Golden Gate Film Exchange and the Golgate Feature Service of the Pacific Coast, appointed George McIntyre, on his recent trip East, as his New York buyer. Mr. McIntyre was formerly manager of the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company, and will have his office in the Candler Building, New York City.

Among the Mutual personnel who are members of the Photoplay Authors' League are D. W. Griffith, Frank E. Woods, Russell E. Smith, Jack O'Brien, Edward Dillon, James Kirkwood, W. Christy Cabanne and Irene Hunt.
Murray F. Beier has taken the position of office manager of the Emby Feature Film Corporation with offices at 145 West Forty-fifth street. Mr. Beier was formerly manager of the World Film Corporation.

The de Renca Art Studio, 149 West Thirty-fifth street, New York, have made a statuette of John Bunny, the comedian, one of which has been forwarded to this office. "I should Worry" is the line on the base of the statuette. Very Bunnyesque!

Fourteen more theatres joined the ranks of users of "Sherry Service" of Famous Players and Lasky features during the past week.

The Blinkhorn Feature Film Company, of 110 West Forty-sixth street, New York; the Greater New York Film Rental Company, of 118 East Fourteenth street; and the William L. Sherry Feature Film Company, of 126 West Forty-sixth street, are among the companies that are using the Multicolor Film Improving Company's process for softening, improving, renovating and cleaning films.

Constance Bennett, who has rivaled Rodman Law for daredevil work, posed for the Animated Weekly recently in the peculiar accompanying picture. Miss Bennett was requested to do something risky, and so suggested.

There are very few in the motion picture business that know that R. R. Neihls once graced the pulpit. However, as he says, "It didn't take," with the result that the motion picture business has a valuable asset and the Keel Fellows' Club a "real" president.

The work on the plant of the Willat Film Company, in Fort Lee, N. J., is progressing very rapidly. The contract was let to Robert Carleton of that borough.

The Pan-American Film Manufacturing Company have contracted with the Capital Film Corporation of California for the exploitation of their entire product. The first production entitled, "The Cross in the Wilderness," is ready for release May 1.

The Pathé Company will release "A Militant Suffragette" on April 27. It is said to be a masterpiece and is in five reels. It is built around the recent disturbances in England caused by the feminine enthusiasts who have stopped at nothing to gain their ends.

Matt Moore, who probably gained much of his popularity in his impersonation of the policeman in the Universal white slave picture, "Traffic in Souls," is Irish through and through. He is at present playing opposite Florence Lawrence in Victor productions. The three brothers, Tom, leading man for the Kalem Company; Owen, a Mutual Company "hero," and Matt, are the best of friends inside and outside of business. They are all outdoor sportsmen, and when not "working" are busy at baseball or tennis. Matt was born in Ireland in 1885 and came to this country six years later. When nineteen he commenced his stage career in stock.

The Edison Company has secured the motion picture rights to the Hanlon Brothers' extravaganza "Fantasma," which has been playing for some time. The trick scenes lend themselves to the motion picture art. Charles M. Seay will direct.

E. F. Murphy, recently with the Imp Company, has taken charge of the factory and laboratory of the New York Motion Picture Company in New York City. He will handle the Broncho, Kay-Bea, Keystone and Domino pictures.

"Photo Life" is the title of a little four-page booklet issued by the Famous Players Film Company of New England to advertise their releases. The pages are neatly and well made up, a good grade of paper being used. The first issue came out on March 28.
J. K. Burger, of the Ecclectic Film Company, is in Cleveland, Ohio, supervising the opening of a branch exchange in that city.

Ralph Stuart, who is playing in the "Hearts of Oak" company near Portland, Maine, while climbing a tall rock, some seventy-five feet from the ground, slipped back and nearly fell the rest of the way. He was unhurt, however.

Among those who attended the private performance of "The Banker's Daughter" at the American Theatre, New York City, on April 10, were the following: Mr. and Mrs. Richard Harding Davis, Mrs. Bronson Howard, widow of the author; Wm. A. Brady, Mr. and Mrs. F. Hopkins Smith, Isidore Wimark, George Bronson Howard, Evelyn Hamilton Eden, Duncan McRae, Mrs. George C. Riggs (Kate Douglas Wiggin), Bruce McRae, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Craven, Louis Joseph Vance, Mrs. William Halsted Purdy, B. T. Blake, Templar Saxe and Karethyn Browne.

Margaret, "Our Mutual Girl," made a personal tour of inspection of the battlehip "Arkansas," a new super-dreadnought, by virtue of special permission of Josephus Daniels, secretary of the Navy.

The Manhattan Feature Film Company have purchased the United States rights to nineteen foreign productions. Offices are to be opened from which the films will be booked. The officers are Joseph E. Arnett, general manager; Percy K. Werneck, president; E. B. Stanley, vice-president.

Representatives of the Mizrach Film Company, of Odessa, Russia, who have brought pictures of the Holy Land to be exhibited in America, are producing a picture depicting the life of the Jews in this country. This will be directed by S. L. Goldin and is to be exhibited in Russia.

"The Drug Terror," the Lubin six-reel picture, has aroused the interest of New York exhibitors. The DeKalb Theatre, Brooklyn and the Prospect Theatre, New York, paid $1,000 weekly rental, it is said, to the Sociological Research Film Corporation, controllers of the picture.

The William L. Sherry Feature Film Company will entertain a large party of invited guests at the opening of "Brewsters' Millions" at the new Strand Theatre, New York.

Grace Cunard, who is playing the title role in the "Lucile Love" series with the Universal, nearly had a very serious accident recently. She fell from an elephant and twisted her ankle, but continued playing.

Midgar Features will shortly release a three-reel drama entitled "On the Edge of Shame." This picture is made by the Imperator Film Company.

Lloyd Ingraham is the latest addition to the staff of directors at the Universal Pacific Coast studios. Mr. Ingraham is directing the Rex Company in which Robert Leonard is starred. He has had a wide stage experience before coming to the screen. He was obtained by the Universal from the Essanay Company and is at present producing "The Fox."
SCREEN ACTORS FOR THE SCREEN

STEVE RICKETTS is a branch of the cinematic art, separate and distinct from stage-acting. It does not follow at all, simply because a man or a woman is a great actor or actress before the footlights, he or she can step in front of a camera and achieve an instantaneously successful. Many good stage actors have failed miserably on the screen, because they neglected to learn how to adapt themselves to the peculiar conditions of acting before the camera. This is commonplace now, but not until very recently has the truth of the matter been universally admitted.

"The why and wherefore of the legitimate actors or actresses' failure to equal their stage success before the camera explained by a screen actor"

"One great difference between motion picture players and those of the speaking stage is that the first must be primarily actors or actresses, while the latter are often in readers or lives. "The speaking voice covers a multitude of sins on the speaking stage. It cannot do so in motion pictures. The player on the screen has but two methods of conveying thought: expression and pantomime. He learns these. He becomes a master of the art and enlarges upon his vehicles till they are sufficient. "The player on the speaking stage relies all too often on a quaver of the voice to convey pathos or mirth and other tricks of the trade which are of no use in pictures. The use of the speaking voice differentiates between the two very largely.

BLANCE BATES, the emotional actress, for one, knows this. I was interested in a recent speech of hers to the graduating class of a school of acting. 'Preserve your speaking voice,' she said. 'It is all that stands between us and the motion picture players. If it is not worth the extra two dollars, what is to become of us?' "Miss Bates was right in that the speaking voice does stand between the two. And when a player from the speaking stage comes to pictures where his silver throat does him no good, he is as handicapped as a whist player would be if his hand was stripped of all its trump cards. "On the other hand, the folks who have been playing in pictures know just what is required of them. The camera catches exactly what they want it to catch. They know what photographs well and what does not, and they enlarge on the one and endeavor to eliminate the other."

RICKETTS IS SUCCESSFUL

Tom Ricketts, one of the American Film Manufacturing Company's producers, is very much encouraged by the approval accorded some of his more recent productions by the exhibitor as well as the public at large. Some of his recent successes are "The Trail of the Lost Chord," "Where the Road Forks," "In the Firelight," "The Hermit," and others.

Mr. Ricketts strongly advocates quiet and natural acting and is remarkably successful in bringing out what there is in a situation. He develops an unobtrusive but forceful action and he enjoys the profoundest respect of his entire company.

Our decision to compose the company of screen-players has been reached because we know beforehand just exactly what to expect from their work. They understand the technique of the business. It is foolish, I believe, to expect to transplant a speaking actor or actress to an entirely new atmosphere and method of procedure at once and expect him or her to get the best results.

"This idea is amply borne out by the appalling number of failures that have been made recently by legitimate stars in expensive motion picture productions.

"I believe that it would not be placing the average too high to say that not one in ten of these great people of the spoken drama have been satisfactory in their work in pictures. In several instances they fell down utterly. Sometimes it is the exaggerated artistic temperament which prevents the star from getting into the spirit of the work but as a general rule it is an absolute lack of knowledge of picture-acting that causes the trouble.

"With reasonable training and some real hard study of the basic requirements of this brand new art, the real actors of the legitimate stage mould most readily into fine picture-actors, but usually they are drafted at a big salary to work in one picture, and they have "fallen down" and gone out of the game before they have grasped even the elementary details of picture-acting.

E. K. LINCOLN

While I do not wish to decry the work of legitimate stars in any way," said Mr. Lincoln, "their appearance in motion pictures has impressed on me the fact that oftentimes a very smart person may not understand another's business. The art of the photoplay differs from that of the stage. Even "making up" is done differently.

"Then the working lines must be understood. Playing before the camera is far different from playing before an audience. To get the best results one must have experience and have studied.

"That is my opinion and it is the policy of the Photoplay Productions Company. Mr. Frank A. Tichenor, the general manager and myself have made an exhaustive study of this phase of the producing end of the motion picture industry. We wish our pictures to reach the public as the highest form of visualization of the plays from which they will be adapted.

"Take our first production, "The Littlest Rebel." It has played in every hamlet from coast to coast and as a play ranks among the most popular. Now we will present it in motion pictures, and naturally we want to do it in the best possible way. After studying the work on the screen of players who have made a success as motion picture players and of the players whose reputations have been gained by work on the speaking stage, we decided to make up our cast of persons experienced in the silent drama.

The Architect and Contractor

The selection of an architect for the construction of a theatre, like the selection of an architect for any type of building, is not generally done with that care and consideration which should surround so important a matter. It is often merely a matter of friendly choice instead of sound business judgment.

To serve you ably and with the greatest of efficiency, and best ultimate result, your architect must have earned and must bear an unblemished reputation for honesty and integrity. If he has not those qualities, he will not think straight nor plan straight. He will spend his time contriving how to beat the laws, instead of planning how most efficiently to comply with the requirements in the most economical manner. You cannot place your trust in him, nor will contractors have that confidence in him that will cause them to take his word as law.

His early schooling should have been a combination of a college training and years of experience in study with well-established and successful architects. In the former he receives a broadening of ideas, the benefits of general contact with men of all nations and all fields, and if he has been wise enough to have taken a course in a college of architecture, he has at the same time received a firm foundation in the study of the fine arts, the sciences and the engineering branches of the profession.

A college training does by no means make a man the finished product, but if he is made of the sterner stuff, he will find it has made him to know the value of study, it has shown him how to study, how to do research work, and it will make him anxious to delve to the very depth of every subject he undertakes.

The value of the man who has not had the training is not to be depreciated, but it cannot be gainsaid that two men of equal natural abilities and ambitions, the man that has had the additional advantage of a thorough college training will surely prove himself the more valuable.

Years of association in the office of successful architects is invaluable for the knowledge stored up of practical construction and design, of business systems, of the knowledge of materials, of superintendence and the knack of governing and controlling men.

This second schooling is most important in conjunction with the first. It need not be entirely supplemental, for it is even better to have the college training in between two periods of office practice.

With such a foundation one is then ready for the real school of hard knocks. Real strength is developed after years of independent practice. Select your architect with great care, judge him by the aforementioned standard, and then judge him by the character and quality of work he has done for himself. Give consideration to his present practice and his office organization.

If you desire to build a special type of building in a district where there is no architect specially fitted for such a problem, and yet you have confidence in a general practitioner for the qualifications aforesaid, you should see to it that he forms an association in the particular work with an architect who has the desired ability, that a successful solution may be the result.

Such consultations and associations with specialists are on the increase in all professions, and architecture is no exception. In this way even the country theatre located distant from the active markets may be built with the highest efficiency and with the greatest economy.

From the time the architect has been selected to the time the plans are ready for estimating, a long and important period elapses. Hints on the essentials of the designs will be the subject of papers to follow, but let us now have a word as to contractors.

There are numerous ways of having a structure built. Firstly, the work might be done by a contractor on "time and material plus a percentage for profit" basis. In this way the work is always done the quickest, and is entrusted to a responsible and honest contractor. Every community has a few of them.

The contractor will charge every item of expense on the entire job at what it costs him and will receive as a profit a percentage based on the costs, most generally ten per cent. The owner pays the true price for what he gets. He does not in this manner speculate with the contractor as to who gets the best of the other. It is, however, a fact that but few buildings are erected in this manner, and the system is seldom followed except by large and rich corporations. Its disadvantage is that one does not know the cost of a structure until the work is completed, unless a maximum price agreement be made between owner and contractor, which has lately become the vogue.

There are two other ways of handling the construction end of the problem. One is to have all the work done under one general contract, and the other by dividing the work to be done by a few or many individual contractors, divided according to trades.

In the former case, there is the advantage that with one contractor a definite time for completion may be agreed upon and liquidated damages easily collected, whereas with a division of the work under separate contracts it is extremely hard to fix that part of the delay each contractor causes.

The work under one contract has this disadvantage. No general contractor does all lines of work. They are almost entirely "jobbers" and after they get the contract it is hard to tell which irresponsible sub-contractors may be given the work, only too often parties that would not be owners' and architects' selection at any cost.

Better results and generally at a lessor cost are obtained by a division of the work under a few contracts, such as one for electrical, one for plumbing and heating, and a third for the remainder of the work.

In selecting your contractors, give careful consideration and preference to responsible local firms. Everything being equal, engage the parties nearest the site. Their personal interest and attention to the work will be invaluable. They must be financially responsible, must bear a reputation for good work and for willingness to accept an honest decision against them. Contractors who are proverbial scrappers must be avoided.

Having purchased the site, selected your architect and the latter having completed the necessary working designs and specifications, and then having selected your contractors, you are now ready to break ground and watch—step by step—the construction of your enterprise.

Construction Notes

California

O. W. OLFE, of Los Angeles, is negotiating a deal for a site for a motion picture theatre in Escondido, near San Diego, on Grand avenue between Lime and Maple streets.

Work on a $20,000 motion picture theatre to stand at the southeast corner of Eighth street and Broadway, San Diego, has been under way for three weeks. Excavations were made on March 29. The house will seat 1,010 persons, and will form part of a $45,000 structure. Walter S. Kellar is the architect. E. A. Edwards, a paper-mill owner of Wisconsin, is the holder of the property under a ninety-year lease.

Connecticut

Construction work on a motion picture theatre in Manchester. Birch street, is very near completion.

Illinois

"The Plaisance," on Parkside avenue, Austin, is now nearing completion. It has been leased to A. M. Gallos, who operates several motion picture theatres in Chicago.

A new motion picture theatre to be erected on Michigan avenue, Chicago, at a cost of $125,000, has been announced. Another to be built on the North Shore will cost $150,000, it is estimated.

McComb, Ill., is shortly to have another theatre. It will be built and operated by Charles Nunn and Clarence Foster.

Iowa

The Le Mars Realty Company, of Le Mars, has filed articles of incorporation with capital of $50,000 and will build a motion picture house. The theatre is expected to seat 600 people, and will be of reinforced concrete construction and fully modern.

Louisiana

The Mutual Theatre Company, of Shreveport, is planning to erect a theatre on the north side of Texas street, between McNeili and Louisiana streets, Shreveport. Plans are being drawn by Ed F. Neil. The stage will be of standard design. A pipe organ will be installed. Rest-rooms for women and a smoking-room for men will be features of the theatre.

Massachusetts

A motion picture theatre will be fitted up in the building now being constructed at 15-21 Green street, Worcester, for Maurice Barsky.

Continental Hall, at 184-188 Main street, Worcester, will probably be equipped as a motion picture theatre by its new owners, J. A. and Charles R. McDermott. Transite papers were filed late last month.

Maryland

Frederick Wright will erect a motion picture theatre at Hagerstown, on the C. Hennaheger property, a transfer deed of which was recently filed in the court house at that town.

Michigan

The Pastime Theatre, East Tawas, has been sold to Alva Wood, Jr., who is preparing to make extensive improvements in the building.

Montana

H. M. Wilson, manager of the Orpheum, Glasgow, has taken out a building permit for the construction of a new motion picture house. The building will be of reinforced concrete and will be fire-proof throughout. The new house will cost $18,000.

V. K. Karr, of Boise, Idaho, has taken the lease on the new picture house being constructed at Havre by Mrs. S. A. Harrington, of Chicago, Ill. The theatre will be 30x150 and will be fully modern. The cost is $15,000.

Eugene Morin will open his new motion picture theatre in Missoula in two weeks. The theatre is on North Higgins avenue and cost $18,000.

New Jersey

A building permit has been issued to Louis Gatz, of 549 Main street, Paterson, for a one-story brick motion picture theatre to cost $4,000.

A $30,000 motion picture theatre will be erected at the southeast corner of Bergenline avenue and Golden lane, Union Hill, for the Temple Theatre Amusement Company, by De Riso Bros.

A one-story brick theatre, to cost $8,000, is being planned by Oliver R. Parry, of Philadelphia, for Bullett & Edwards, to be erected at Cape May.

New York State

Rochester will have a theatre seating 2,100 persons on South Clinton avenue within a year. It will stand between the Temple and Victoria, with a fine frontage on Clinton avenue. The men behind the deal are William H. Craig, president of the penitentiary, Clarence Jennings, proprietor of the Bartholomay Pavilion at Charlotte, and Albert Feinberg, the restaurant man.

Vincent White is planning to build a $5,000 motion picture theatre at 70x95, at the northwest corner of Pearl and Main streets, Medin, if successful in his negotiations for the property, on which a dry-cleaning establishment now stands.

Ground will be broken this week in Buffalo for a modern fire-proof motion picture theatre at Broadway and Madison streets, for the Broadway Amusement Company. Percy S. Lassdowne and Louis Newman are behind the schemes.

A two-story brick motion picture theatre will be built in Albany at the west side of Broadway, north of De catur street, for the Mills Brothers, by Charles Wukie, 15 Hull street. L. Allmendinger, 926 Broadway, is architect. The cost will be about $10,000.

Majestic Hall, at Riverhead, L. I., will be used as a motion picture theatre. The auditorium is the second floor of the newly completed A. O. Jones building.

A $25,000, two-story brick motion picture theatre is about to be erected in Woodhaven, L. I., on the south side of Jamaica avenue, forty feet west of Boyd street. Lott & Gansy, owners, are now taking bids. George E. Crane, 2706 Jamaica avenue, Richmond Hill, is architect.

Philadelphia

A one-story brick theatre, seating 500, will be built at 357-31 South street, Philadelphia, for S. S. Freedman. Bids are being asked for. Architect, M. Haupt, Drexel building.

A motion picture theatre at Forty-sixth and Market streets, will be built for William Mitchell, under the direction of Allen Wilson, architect.

A $2,000 motion picture theatre at 2715 Germantown avenue, to seat 450 persons, will be built by J. T. McCormick, for Miller, Hill & Smith.

Plans have been completed for a new front elevation on the motion picture theatre owned by John J. Conner at Fifty-second street and Greenway avenue. Allen Wilson, architect.

The hall property at 405 North Sixty-fourth street will be remodelled at once into a motion picture theatre for Piero Pardimone at a cost of $6,000.

A stone and brick motion picture theatre, to cost $5,700, will be built for Herman Beyer & Company at Sixty-first and Vine streets. The building will be 44x610. Architect, Samuel G. Morrison.
A Disturber of the Peace

Maj. M. L. C. Funkhouser, the Pooh-Bah of Chicago’s censorship imbroglio, is again disturbing the peace of the motion picture interests of the Windy City. This time it is because he refused to view, in person, a film he was about to condemn.

Such an attitude on the part of the Major is, of course, anything but surprising. It is merely exasperating.

The Major’s behavior toward motion pictures is similar to that formerly in vogue among Turkish customs officials toward Christians. The “Sons of the Prophet,” when collecting duties from a Christian, always received the money in a long-handled basket, from which it was taken out and fumigated before they touched it.

In the same way the Major refused to be contaminated by direct personal contact with the abhorred film. Holding his own sacred person inviolate, he sends out his subordinates, and issues his fiat on their reports.

Is our worthy Funkhouser afraid to look at a picture lest he be converted to a common-sense attitude regarding them?

Or has the good man been so busy making raids that irritate his superiors that he has had no time to dabble in censorship?

Neither one, it seems.

“They can’t make me review a film if I don’t want to,” is his defi. This has a familiar sound.

“‘Cannot’ is false; and ‘dare not’ is falser. Tell them, Caesar will not come!”

A Second Deputy of Police in the role of dictator!

“Upon what meat doth this our Cesar feed, That he is grown so great?”

* * *

Why all this bluster and bravado from Funkhouser, when he was simply asked to discharge the duties of his office himself, instead of leaving them to his assistants?

Very properly the owner of the pictures Funkhouser condemned has taken legal measures to compel either Mayor Harrison or Chief of Police Gleason to give the pictures a fair examination.

He should also take legal steps to have Funkhouser summarily deposed from his self-constructed pinnacle.

By what right does Funkhouser refuse the right of appeal from his subordinates to himself?

While we have censors, let us have men who will fulfill all the duties of their office, not a pompous bureaucrat who is too dainty in his ideas to do the work of his position himself.

It is high time that Funkhouser was taught a severe and lasting lesson.

A Short-Sighted Judge

A Police Court Judge of Albany, N. Y., has decided that motion picture theatres, when operated on Sunday, “disturb the peace and the repose of the community.” In other words, the motion picture theatre is a public nuisance when open on Sunday.

Needless to say, the exhibitor who was convicted under this decision has appealed to the County Court.

The Motion Picture News would like to ask Judge Brady just what it is that makes a motion picture theatre a nuisance on Sunday, and not on any other day during the week? And incidentally, we wish to remind Judge Brady that the day of “Blue Laws” has passed. Country clubs are opened on Sunday and no law has ever designated them as a nuisance. Many other wholly secular institutions flourish on the Sabbath as on every other day and do not “disturb the peace and repose of the community.”

Without impeaching, for the present, the soundness of Judge Brady’s decision, we wish further to call his attention to the effect of Sunday motion picture shows upon the “peace and order” of certain towns and cities in Great Britain.

In one of them, a few months after the town council had permitted the opening of the motion picture theatres on Sunday, the chief of police reported a remarkable decrease in cases of drunkenness and disorderly conduct on that day, and in cases of assault upon women and girls on the Sabbath. Similar results were testified to in other communities.

If this is “disturbing the peace and order of the community,” then it had better be disturbed every Sunday in every city and town in the United States.
These are the famous Pathé Players who are making

"THE REDEMPTION OF DAVID CORSON"
(Famous Players)
REVIEWED BY LESLEY MASON

THE Famous Players' productions, from the first to the present one, make it possible for an admirer of them to borrow the advertising slogan of a well-known New York firm long enough to say, "Famous Players' stamped on a film, means 'Standard of Merit.'" This is not attributing perfection or infallibility to these productions. It simply means that they have maintained excellence in all things more consistently and habitually than any other American company of the same kind. There is less resort by the Famous Players to inferior or mediocre ways and means of achieving their effects and results than in any other firm exclusively producing features on this side.

THE CROWD FLOWS TO HEAR CORSON

of the water. True, they were among the first in the field. But they have never suffered, nor will they ever suffer, by comparison with the products of other companies which have since arisen, so long as they are loyal to the principles to which they have hitherto adhered.

"David Corson" is worthy, as a whole, to rank with any of the photodramas that have come from this house. All the merits that are common to their productions are to be found in this one—directing that amounts to strategy in its compassing of the ends to be attained, photography rarely below the best and companies that are generally well-balanced and efficient.

"Clothes" and the Mary Pickford series are plays of, for and by women, but "David Corson" is pre-eminently a play of manhood, a play for strong men, with strong men as its best and worst characters. Only two women have parts of any consequence, and of these even the role of the heroine is a meagre one.

Men and manhood is the theme. The whole play revolves around three types, all men of mental and physical strength—David Corson, the eloquent Quaker; Andy, the lumberman, whose experience with David makes him a preacher; and Dr. Paracelsus, street fakir and medicine man. These three characters are of such vital importance to the drama that, provided they are well cast, the rest of the parts may be left to take care of themselves.

In finding actors for these roles the Famous Players have scored a triumph. A stronger trio than William Farnum as Corson, Hall Clarendon as Andy and Robert Broderick as Paracelsus it would be difficult to find.

Farnum's delineation of the hot-blooded Quaker is one of the most brilliant pieces of acting the screen has seen. Bro- derick, as the Doctor, effects that absolute identity with his part which is absolutely essential to realism. The finesse of his acting where the temptation was so strong to overdo and thus undo his work, is admirable. Clarendon's portrayal of Andy is warranted to make him a favorite in this and other parts of a similar character.

The one weak spot in the production is Constance Moli neaux's enactment of Pecpeta, the Gypsy. It is fortunate that she is not one of the major ones in the play, for such a weakness might have proved a disaster. The woodlessness of her acting was all the more noticeable because of the contrast afforded by the flawless work of her three colleagues. She retrieved herself to some degree in the latter scenes, but frankly missed most of her opportunities in the earlier part of the play. It should be repeated that Miss Mol ineaux's inferiority to the rest of the cast has no real effect upon the strength or excellence of the production as a whole.

Pages could be written about the fine photography and thrilling scenes of "David Corson." Enough, however, to know that they are there. The exhibitor and the audience will find them out.

"THE GHOST"
(Pathé)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSION MICHELL

A THREE-REEL story of the old days when buccaneers held full sway over the seacoast, robbed where they would and destroyed what they could not steal. The plot is carried out in an enviable manner, making a picture that will thrill every full-blooded American boy and man.

The melodramatic parts are not overcome in the least. The action is absolutely clean and thrilling. The cast, consisting of Claire Rae and Crane Wilbur in the leading parts and M. O. Penn in the rôle of villain, is worthy of commendation.

The feature is the work of M. O. Penn in his part of the buccaneer, who, believing he has killed his brother, sees his 'ghost' on his return to the home of their father. The audience is treated to some of the finest emotional work ever witnessed upon the screen. One can slowly see him going crazy, and watch his terrible anguish. Outside a storm is raging and this adds realism to the scene.

A good love story runs throughout. On the death of their father, Gabriel and his brother, who have been cut off without a penny, go out to seek some lost treasure. They locate it after some work and start on the return trip. Gabriel in crossing a quicksand bed sinks, Peter refusing to rescue him. He is saved by some fishermen and returns to confront his wicked brother, with the effect already described.

"SHORTY ESCAPES MARRIAGE"
(Broncho)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

HERE are four reels to this piece, that might be called dramatic-comedy or comic-drama, either way will do. It is to be released in two parts and no doubt will create a lot of interest. The plot is novel, one that is seldom used; there is some fine, fast riding and a few hot skirmishes between cowboys and Mexicans. The photography is clear and distinct through the entire four reels.

Shorty, in a skirmish, is captured by Mexicans. After many attempts to find him, the ranchers finally give him up for lost. In the meantime an important letter has come for Shorty: they open it and find that Shorty is to have a large sum of money if he marries his cousin, who has started for the ranch. Brown, another cowboy, agrees to take his place until he returns. He has to marry her in the end as the required time is up. Shorty, returning, is furious at first because he has lost a large sum of money, but finally is reconciled.
"THE BANKER'S DAUGHTER"
(Life-Photo Film)
REVIEWED BY LESLEY MASON

The Banker's Daughter" is a picture that would bring credit to any producer, and will bring double credit to the company whose maiden effort it is. So many pictures bear witness to the headlong haste and culpable carelessness with which they are turned out, that it is refreshing to find one which is the product, scene by scene, of thought and care, guided by intelligent directing, and expounded with photograph that defines and emphasizes.

Taken from the famous drama by Bronson Howard, the photoplay is blessed with a powerful, well-constructed story

STREBELOW LEARNS HIS WIFE'S SECRET

Pathos and tenderness are paramount in the episodes where little Natalie, the daughter of Lillian and John Strebelow, puts forth her childish powers to bring peace between her parents. These are but a few of the principal features of a thoroughly good photodrama.

The Banker's Daughter" is a play without a villain, and Harry Spingler should be commended for making the Count de Carojacl no more than a hot-tempered, but polished, Frenchman. David Wall's impersonation of John Strebelow is full of dignity, charm and amiability. Miss LaSalle's Lillian is somewhat colorless, but it has the merit of not being "stifly," as a more emotional performance might have been.

serves all the success the original drama has had.

"LUCILLE LOVE, THE GIRL OF MYSTERY"
(Gold Seal)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

The second part of "Lucille Love, the Girl of Mystery," to be released April 21, is even more exciting and ends even more mysteriously than the first. The crowning scene in this installment is a large ship at fire on the sea. It starts in the boiler-room and overruns the entire ship, spreading terror and consternation among the passengers. Most of them, panic-stricken, jump overboard; a few are saved in the life-boats.

The cast is practically the same as in the first part, no new characters of any importance being introduced. The photography leaves nothing to be desired in clearness and light effects.

Lucille, still in pursuit of the spy, Hugo, lands on the steamer Empress, after a long trip in the air. Mutual recognition follows her arrival on board the ship. Hugo, to cast suspicion on General Love, sends a message broadcast, via wireless, to the effect that Love stole the papers.

He then disables the wireless apparatus so that no more messages can be sent or received, but in doing this he receives a severe shock. Lucille acts as a nurse to him, and finds the papers in his room. She promptly possesses herself of them. After they have been sailing for many days an explosion occurs in the boiler-room, it spreads so quickly that the whole ship is soon on fire. No help is obtainable owing to the wireless communication being cut off.

LUCILLE IS CAST ASHORE

The fate of Hugo is left to be followed in another installment. Lucille is cast on an island inhabited by savages, half dead from floating around in the water for many hours. Hundreds swarm around her, and here the film ends.
"THE TREASURE OF ABDAR RAHMAN"
(Pathé Photoplay Masterpieces)
REVIEWED BY LESLEY MASON

This picture is one of those that prove the claim, now being more widely advanced than ever, that many motion picture features deserve classification as "photo-stories" or "photo-novels" rather than as "photo-plays." There are great novels that could not be reduced to stageable dramas without losing many, if not most, of the episodes and characteristics which make them great. But here the screen is broader and more powerful than the stage, for the great majority of such novels could be dealt with justly and adequately in motion pictures, and translated into a "photo-story" which would forfeit none of its strength because it was only secondarily a drama, and primarily a story.

Such a story, pictorially related, as absorbing as any drama could be, abounding in dramatic situations, centered around the baleful influence of a certain treasure upon its various possessors, is "The Treasure of Abdar Rahman." A story like this one might be transplanted from the page of Flaubert or Gautier to the screen, but never to the stage—any dramatization of it would be a feeble approximation to the original.

To add to the power and interest of the picture, the scenes were taken in Morocco, in the very country where the incidents of the story are supposed to have been enacted. The result is a series of scenes, marvelous for their strange beauty, impressive by the grandeur of the desert and mountain landscapes that furnish gigantic settings for the human action.

The story, as unusual as the other elements of the picture, runs as follows:

Abdar Rahman, returning from a raid upon a neighboring tribe, brings with him Romelka, the daughter of its shiek, who finally ransoms her. Romelka's rescuers give warning of the intention of her father to return and capture the jewels left in ransom. Fearing the vengeance of his enemy, Abdar buries his treasure and writes in code its secret resting place. Not long afterwards Romelka's people assail the palace, capture its inmates and kill Abdar, but are thwarted in their search for the treasure by a faithless servant who obtained the code and secretes it.

Three hundred years later, at the time Morocco is occupied by the French, a native woman discovers a strange-looking box on the hillside. It is taken to her tent and later sold to an army officer, who, upon opening it finds a faded manuscript, the writing of which he is unable to understand. A translation is made by a native merchant in the market place, who dexterously deciphers its real meaning and goes to unearth the treasure for himself. The translation given to his patron appears at first to be a meaningless combination of words, but he later discovers its real meaning and immediately goes in search of the jewels which have been so long buried.

By the time he has overcome the contending obstacles and reaches the place of the buried treasure the thief had succeeded in unearthing it and is well on his way. A chase is instituted after the fleeing man. In the meantime the fugitive tries to hide the treasure in a desolate place. He is prevented from carrying out his purposes by the presence of lions, who frighten him away, leaving the box on the desert, where the beasts stand guard over the strange object.

"THE GOD OF VENGEANCE"
(Chariot)
REVIEWED BY A. DASSON MICHELL

Suspense has been made the keynote of this four-reel film. A picture possessing this quality is of necessity good, for it holds the attention of the spectators. Yet it is one of the most difficult qualities to obtain. The story may be excellent, the photography and the other requisites of a good picture may be perfect, but if suspense is not found the picture is lacking in strength. This story has been worked out in a most skillful fashion.

The director has taken great pains to have neither too much melodrama nor too little. The characters are not allowed to do anything that seems improbable, that will allow for suspension on the grounds that it seems unnatural. And yet the suspense is kept up throughout.

The East Indian religious fanaticism is utilized for the plot. Having stolen some valuable jewels while in India from a religious sect, Colonel Burns is followed to his home by two of the members who have been pledged to recover the stones. Yosara and Osada, the two commissioned to undertake this perilous mission, are constantly watching the chief and awaiting their chance to attain their object.

Through many adventures we trace the two, always watching Burns. Yosara finds his work made harder for him because he finds himself in love with the Colonel's daughter.
"FORGIVEN," OR "THE JACK O' DIAMONDS"
(Stellar Photoplay Company)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

PHOTOPLAYS, like books, may be said to generally belong to two classes, those which are seen by everybody for the time being and thereafter seen by no one, and those which are seen by someone forever. To the former class the recent flood of white slave "dramas" may be said to belong; to the latter, a number of our better productions; to both, a very few select films, of which this may be said to be one.

It is not over often we have a thoroughly good film, possessing nothing but admirable qualities. A picture that is so nearly perfect that we cannot pick that the proverbial holes in it is worthy of the highest praise.

A strong cast, picked with evident care, and assigned to parts only after much careful consideration, is greatly responsible for the excellence of the film. Edwin Forberg, who played opposite Dorothy Donnelly in "Madame X," handles the title role in this picture. Caroline French, the leading lady, formerly played with Tully Marshall in the All Star production of "Paid in Full!"

The remainder of the cast with the positions played are as follows: Frederick Burton as Willard Graham, the heavy part; Luke J. Loring as Denver Dan, the gambler pal of Jack; Hector Dion as Frank Popham, the drunken husband; Ricca Allen as Aunt Cordelia; Fritzi Brunette as the grown-up Leonie Diamond; Lois Alexander as little Leonie, and Daniel Bertona as Pedro, the Mexican. The scenario was written by Bennett Musson and was directed by William Robert Daly. The story in brief is as follows:

John Diamond, known as Jack O'Diamond, a professional gambler, meets Annie Denison and her suitor, Graham. He saves Graham from some card sharpers and wins Annie's respect, which Graham tries to hurt. He tells her he is a gambler and tells how he became one. Graham is being followed by Popham, whose wife he had stolen years previously. Annie promises to marry Jack if he will renounce cards, which he does.

Seven years later we find them in a happy home, with Jack working for the railroad. He is discharged through Graham and leaves for the West, but misses his train. He returns home and finds Graham encouraging his wife to leave him. She leaves him that night, taking their child Leonie with her.

Ten years later Jack is a ranch owner and meets his daughter Leonie. Through her he again meets his wife, but will not become reconciled. Graham also locates her and begins to annoy her. A duel between the two men is arranged for. Graham pays Pedro, a Mexican, to stab Jack before the fight, in which he is frustrated by Denver Dan, Jack's pal. Graham, just as he is to shoot Jack in the duel, is shot by Popham, who has followed him. The wounded man's confession unites the long-parted couple.

"THE FLAMES OF JUSTICE"
(Primagraf)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

PRODUCED in five reels by Irving Billig, of the Primagraf Film Company, in New Rochelle and New York City. Julia de Kelety, the European prima donna, is featured in the leading part, and does her work with a nicety and technique born only of years of experience.

The plot, melodramatic in character, offers ample opportunity to both cast and director for clever work. There are a large number of settings, the last one being of particular excellence and costliness. A house in which several people are presumably imprisoned, burns to the ground.

"LET HIM COME BACK TO ME"

Marie and Conrad desire to marry one another, his father opposing the match. The old man is killed by the son, in self-defense, and Conrad is forced to run away. Some time later Marie and Conrad meet again. The boy is arrested by the police while with her. She, in order to save his life, is forced to sell herself to the judge's son and a baby is born.

Marie leaves the child in the care of strangers, intending to kill herself. She is prevented and becomes the keeper of a gambling house, the money for which is furnished by a rich man.

Her child is adopted by a wealthy family, and on growing up saves her foster brother from her own mother's gambling house, not knowing the relationship. Years pass by. Her lover, Conrad, is in prison and Marie is a penniless outcast. She bargains with Clifford, the judge's son, to sell the girl to him, neither knowing the victim is her own child. At the last moment it is discovered by the black cross which the girl wears, and which had been given her by Marie years before.

Clifford and Conrad, now released, meet, and in the fight the lamp is overturned, Clifford perishing in the flames. The two women escape, Conrad carrying them out. Marie dies in her faithful lover's arms.

"THE SEACOAST OF BOHEMIA"

A TWO-REEL dramatic offering of the finest calibre. The plot is an unusual variation of a conventional story, told in a clever manner by Leah Baird, William Shay, Edmund Mortimer and Charles Eldridge. The audience's sympathy throughout is given the two people who, although married, are forced through circumstances to live apart.

An heiress is threatened with loss of her fortune unless she shall marry within a stated time. Meeting an artist, whom she does not know, she pays him to wed her, and then exacts a promise of secrecy from him. Their love grows unwittingly, and years later they are joined together by their mutual desire.

Co-operate with Your Orchestra

(Editors' Note.—E. A. Ahearn, the author of the following article, is an experienced motion-picture pianist, and the author of "What and How to Play for Motion Pictures." Mr. Ahearn has arranged and contributed a series of articles, describing the music that should accompany every known type of picture an exhibitor may use. These will appear at suitable intervals in this department.)

Most of the criticism directed at the musical accompaniment furnished with the pictures at a good many theatres is levelled at the musician. To a certain extent, the musician is to blame. But the exhibitor is at least as much at fault as his pianist or orchestra leader, and these little jibes, while they are intended by the parties making them to point a remedy, convey the impression that the musician thinks of nothing but pay-day.

If these critics understood the real cause in many cases, they would direct their complaints to the exhibitor. It is for him to say whether the musician shall have an opportunity to do himself and the pictures justice.

And in many cases, because of the exhibitor's indifference to music as a factor in improving his program, the musician does not have this opportunity.

"How can the exhibitor help his musicians or musician?" will be asked. What has he to do with the music? He engages someone to do this for him. He has no time to waste on music. That is what the leader or pianist is for.

Very true. But the exhibitor, for one thing, can give the musician a chance to show what he can do in the way of furnishing appropriate music for his program, by running off the pictures in advance, and letting him arrange his music ahead of time.

This is a matter of simple justice to the musician. Incidentally, it will enable the exhibitor who knows his music is unsatisfactory and doesn't know whose fault it is to find out where the blame lies. Such an experiment will show up an incompetent musician and make it possible for the exhibitor to engage an efficient man or woman at once.

Let me illustrate what the average orchestra or pianist is up against by an experience I had in an Idaho town recently. Scores of musicians who play for motion picture theatres can supply this with troubles of their own.

The theatre in question was showing "Homer's Odyssey." I had a brief talk with the orchestra leader before the show.

"What are you going to play for this picture?" I asked.

"I don't know," he replied with a sly smile. "I never know what we are going to play with any picture until five or ten minutes before the show."

This man knew that the music required was not Indian or Chinese. But that was about all.

That evening I dropped in to see how he got along. Taking everything into consideration, he did pretty well. In one of the scenes there was a storm at sea. My friend was playing "The Melody in F!"

Very nice music—in its place. But he might as well have played Mendelssohn's "Spring Song," or "Sweet and Low." It would have been just as appropriate.

Suppose one of the critics we were talking about had been at this performance. Doubtless his verdict would have been something like this:

"The picture was perfect in every detail, but oh, you pianist! Where were you when the lightning struck?"

Whose fault is this? If the leader had stopped for an instant to find music that would fit the picture, down the manager would have come, demanding to know what the trouble was.

The pianist, perhaps, could correct his mistakes of the first night and play the picture perfectly the second night.

But what of the people who were there the first night?

Would they be good walking advertisements for the house? They certainly wouldn't be as enthusiastic over the show as if the music had been what it ought to have been.

Some exhibitors may think a little matter like this isn't worth the space it takes here to discuss it. If they do, let them visit a theatre where the pictures are run ahead of time for the benefit of the orchestra, and see the difference between the music at that theatre and at his own.

What is to prevent exhibitors everywhere from doing as the Regent, in New York City, does? There there is a showing of the pictures every day for the orchestra, and the music at the Regent has elicited national praise.

For most exhibitors the operation would only take an hour or an hour and a quarter, and cost perhaps fifty cents for "juice." The results would be inestimable in the satisfaction of patrons and the reputation the house would acquire.

Why have music at all if it doesn't blend with the pictures? We might just as well return to the days of electric pianos and no salaries. The only expense then would be a little oil and juice, and an occasional new roll of music.

I realize that it is difficult for some exhibitors to follow these suggestions, especially if they have a daily change of program. But it can be done, and where a program runs for more than a day, there is absolutely no excuse for not doing it.

E. A. Ahearn.

THE OTHER HALF of the NOTE
3 PARTS
General Film Co.
PROGRAM
“Miss Nobody from Nowhere.” (Imp. Two reels. April 20.)—This picture shows the dark side of New York life most vividly. The scenes on the Bowery are extremely realistic, and the story holds one’s interest throughout its entire length. The last scene, in which Bob meets his just end by falling down an elevator shaft, is a thrilling finale.

The story is that of a Bowery girl, who, until she becomes a great dancer, her benefactor proposes, but her brother, “Bowery Bob,” leads him to believe that she is his wife, and he loses faith in her. After many experiences his faith is restored and they are reunited again.

The sheep belonging to the “Circle Dot” ranch wander over the boundary line set by the “Seven Bar” ranch and ruin the cow pasture, thus starting a feud. The owner of the sheep interests a woman, is rescued from a runaway by Dave, the owner of the cow ranch. Valdez, her foreman, places his men in an ambush for Dave’s men when they come to water their cattle.

She learns of this, and hurries to the scene, in the effort to prevent the battle, and disperses her men. Dave and Myra arrange for a compromise. On his arrival, one of the disgruntled men rope him and he is tied to a horse’s tail to be dragged on the ground. The girl rescues him again. They agree to share their lands and live in common.

“The Floor Above.” (Reliance and Majestic. Four reels. April 16.)—This thrilling Universal feature is adapted from “The Mystery of Charleco Mansions,” by E. Phillips Oppenheim, and staged under the personal direction of D. W. Griffith. The cast includes Estelle Colman, Henry Walthall, Dorothy Gish, Earle Fox, and Ralph Lewis. The drama is rather involved, but interesting from start to finish.

Stephen proposes to Grace, an old friend, but she refuses him. He sets out to know the reason why, and discovers that Grace is supporting her sister Stella, an actress, who is leading a fast life. From here on the story deals with Stella. Bartlett, one of her friends, is killed by Jerome, another friend, in Stella’s apartment. Stephen, to save Stella from suspicion, moves the body into the apartment directly above. The police can find no trace of the murderer and the affair is dropped. Later Stella’s husband comes home, successful in business, and she resolves to give up her extravagant ways, having learned a lesson from the tragedy enacted in her apartment. Stephen and Grace, it is to be supposed, are married.

“The Greater Love.” (Pathé. Two reels. April 9.)—Pathé has a good many “lost sailor” stories and this is a new addition. However old the plot may be, this drama holds the interest throughout. It is full of action and there are several tense scenes. The last scene, when the two lovers are slowly climbing up the high precipice by the aid of a rope, and the old lighthouse keeper standing at the top meditating whether to cut the rope or not, surely keeps one on edge all the time.

Jack and Mary are engaged, but Jack goes away on a long voyage and Mary believing him dead marries an old lighthouse keeper, a former friend of her father’s. Then Jack returns, and after a hard struggle with himself the old captain resigns in favor of the younger man.

“A Son of the Sea.” (Kleine-Cines. Two reels. April 7.)—An interesting drama containing numerous good scenes. Ross, who was cast on the shore when a baby, being the only survivor of a wreck, invents a new motor which is very successful. Later, when his firm is bidding against a rival in the same business for a government contract, Ross finds that the president of the rival concern is his father. They are happily reunited and the father is glad to see that Ross has won the contract.

“The Navajo Blanket.” (Kalem. Two reels. April 15.)—This drama may safely be called entirely new and original in more ways than one. A noticeable difference between it and other dramas is that not a white man appears on the screen until the very end and then the few that do appear have minor parts. The subtitles are all written in blanket verse on the style of Longfellow’s “Hiawatha.” The Western scenery is wonderful and the photography is clear throughout.

The story is that of Mona, loved and wooed by Gontzo, the chief of the Navajo tribe. She is at work on a blanket, and in the pattern of the blanket she weaves designs which tell, in the Indian language, her life. She relates how her tribe has been attacked by the Apaches and how the Apaches were defeated and rescued the captured ones. When the blanket is done a trader buys it and sells it to a wealthy tourist who proudly tells his friends the story of Mona’s life.

PRODUCTIONS FROM ALL PROGRAMS

GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

"Wifje's Night Out." (Pathé, Split reel. April 2).—On the same reel with "Ancient Ruins at Tunis, Egypt." A comedy in which Wilhelmina cuts her husband's wife, but she cleverly turns the trick on him.

"Stage-Struck" (Vitagraph, April 1).—A comedy which takes the stage amount of Mrs. Blair thinks she is cut out to be an actress. Mr. Blair is of the opposite opinion. Mrs. Blair is fooled very nicely through the connivances of her husband and a book agent, and finally gives up the stage idea.

"A Queer Quarantine" (Essanay, April 1).—Don Caesar who, it is thought, is going to "hold" the market with eye, is kept in a fake quarantine by Jack and his sweetheart, the rich Mrs. Potter, until he is supposedly ruined. The story is well told and ends on the outing that the Don is backing and not ready.

"Wifje Picks a Partner" (Pathé, April 1).—A good comedy. Bashful Wifje goes to a matrimony agency to obtain a wife. He has gone on queer experiences before he finally sets one.

"The Story of Diana." (Selig, April 2).—This Greek mythology tale, being produced by the Selig Company. These stories are full of the flavor of the old mythology, but the effect given by changing the old Greek gods and goddesses into modern people is ludicrous at times. The public might appreciate these stories more if the original myth were preserved. The characters are modern, the plots of the old tales have gone, and Oron, a mortal, is in love with Diana, the goddess, but Diana is "married" to Apollo, who has asked the mortal to marry her. Oron objects to marrying his sister, and after many futile attempts he finally succeeds in bringing about the young man's death at Diana's own hands.

"Pathé's Weekly, No. 29." (Pathé, April 9).—There are two excellent views from Russia in this number, the shattering of the Dnieper river by dynamite and the breaking of the sea over the town of Soufriere. Pictures of the men in the opposing forces in the Canal Tolls. Repell Bell fight are interesting.

"Fine Feathers Make Fine Birds." (Melles, Split reel. April 9).—On the same reel with "Batty Bill Wins a Baby." Bill has a child thrust on him. On the day of his wedding it causes him a lot of trouble.

"The Root of Evil." (Lubin. Two reels. April 9).—The comic story of an Englishman who comes to this country in order to learn to play golf. Incidentally he learns how to work and goes home to his native land a good bit wiser than before. He also takes with him a wife.

"Snakerville's New SHERIFF." (Essanay. April 9).—A comedy in which two neighboring families are foes. The sheriff captures a notorious bandit, more by accident than intention.

"When a Woman Guides." (Biograph. April 9).—A far-fetched drama, but interesting. The mayor sacrifices his chances of becoming governor by passing a bill to "clean up" the teeming. The President of the Women's Political Union aids him.

"The Fire Jugglers." (Selig. April 9).—The trouble the two jugglers can bring on herself and her family are shown in this drama.

"The Nurse and the Counterfeiter." (Kalem. April 22).—A fine drama. The action is rapid. Mainly through the efforts of a young woman and the counterfeiters are brought to bay. The leader of them has formerly been a patient in the hospital in which the nurse was employed.

"A Salt Mackerel Mine." (Kalem. April 22).—A comedy containing many comic scenes. The main plot is the dispatch of two men for the hand of the same girl.

"The Secret Formula." (Kalem. Two reels. April 22).—On the same reel with "Batty Bill Wins a Baby." He falls in love with Miss Williams, daughter. Other Fred is accused of stealing a valuable price, but he frees himself from suspicion and finds the real thief. The ending is romantic and very pretty.

"Fraid Cat." (Vitagraph. April 8).—A slow drama in which a money lender's heart reptiles when he meets the little boy of his dreams.

"The Bargain Hunters." (Essanay. April 2).—A musical comedy. The hunters have a strong taste for bargains. They obtain a house at a small price, but after numerous expositions of the house, they are almost disappointed in their purchase.

"The Grafters." (Pathé, Split reel. April 8).—One of Pathé's animated reels. It is a hearty laugh from beginning to end. On the same reel with "The Grafters."

"The Termite." (Pathé, Split reel. April 8).—Showing the manners of living and the traits of the termite, a species of ant. On the same reel with "The Grafters."

"The Rube." (Selig. April 8).—A drama in which an awkward country boy, the joke of the town, goes away to college and there is the means of winning the final football game of the season.

"On the Brink." (Lubin. April 8).—A drama of Weiber. Won as a very light action. The discontented wife of a rancher plans to run away with another. Her husband causes her to realize her folly and she remains with him.

"An Easter Lily." (Vitagraph. April 10).—A Joan of Arc cartoon with interesting scenes. Sonny Jim takes a little negro to church on Easter Sunday to the dismay of his parents. His fine Easter spirit conquers them all, however.

"Red Head Introduces Herself." (Selig. Split reel. April 10).—On the same reel with "Red Head Introduces Herself." It is just the kind of a comedy that the title implies, containing little red humor.

"All Mixed Up." (Selig. Split reel. April 10).—On the same reel with "Red Head Introduces Herself." Just the kind of a comedy that the title implies, containing little red humor.

"Rings and Robbers." (Biograph. Split reel. April 10).—On the same reel with "Rings and Robbers." A comic stunt with the "ringle" police force.

"The Treachery of Broncho Billy's Pal." (Essanay. April 11).—Broncho Billy and his pal are in love with the same girl. Billy goes out to claim her. His pal in jealousy bireses Mexican Pete to shoot him. He is not wounded seriously, his pal relents and they are friends again.

"The Battle of the Weak." (Vitagraph. April 11).—A drama which shows that the woman, conveying the idea that all the rich advocates of socialism don't practice what they preach. But the weak and the strong are united in this story.

"The Bendage of Fear." (Biograph April 11).—An excellent drama in which a hero rescues a young woman. The executions of a counterfeiter, who is her brother.

"Pathé's Weekly, No. 30." (April 12).—Out of a series of recent events, the most important are the scenes of the fire in St. Augustine, Florida, which destroyed half of city.

"The Three Geese." (Melles. April 12).—An opponents' plot, numerous amusing scenes, and subplots, helps to make this a poor comedy. There are some good scenes, without which it would be worthless.

"The Cherry Pickers." (Selig. Two reels. April 12).—Another extremely humorous piece of comedy. The new managing editor of the Comet doesn't believe in women reporters. He is convinced of Dolly's ability, however, by the fine story that she brings in. It is the story of a runaway couple who misinterpret each other. It is so pathetic that it is not published.

"At His Expense." (Lubin. April 11).—A comedy-drama containing little action. An inebriate is uplifted by a good friend. He leaves his kindness at first, but well repays him later.

"Detective Kelly." (Pathé. Two reels. April 12).—A comedy-drama full of action and stirring scenes. Kelly runs down a crook through a thrilling chase in water, air and over ground.

"The Girl from Prosperity." (Vitagraph. Two reels. April 11).—A comedy-drama. Bill is an innocent young fellow who thinks he is wiser than New York. He finds to his sorrow that he is mistaken, and is reunited with his girl in Prosperity.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"Their Honeymoon." (Nestor. April 21).—A comedy that is a laugh from start to finish. A young married couple are taken to a lunatic asylum, by mistake, while a pair of lunatics are received into a private house. The troubles of the honeymooners and the antics of the lunatics are extremely comic. Matters are finally straightened out.

"Mountain Law." (Rex. April 28).—A fine drama depicting an ancient feud of two neighboring families. The two feudal families desire to become friendly and sign papers declaring peace. Later Bill Tyler kills the leader of the other house in a quarrel. Bob, the heir of the dead man, pins a note on his father saying that he killed him, then he runs away. The wind beats him and the adherents of the dead man start to fight with Bob. He relents again, and the girl realizes what a sacrifice Bob made.

"Pitfall." (Powells. April 17).—Edna Marion and Edwin August in the principal roles. The remainder of the cast was unimposing.
usually strong. Photography above average. A good love story, telling how a boy, loving a girl, wins in favor of his brother, whom the girl loves.

"The Seacoast of Bohemia." (Imp. Two reels. April 16.)—The plot of this story possesses distinctive novelty, but it is so enacted and the story so good that it will be enjoyed by all. William Shy, Leah Baird, Edmund Mortimer and Charles Eldridge form the cast.

"At least in order to retain her wealth, is forced to marry, and picks out a man, another way she should know. Of course, she learns later to love him.

"How Green Saved His Mother-in-Law." (Cleartone, One reel. April 23.)—A story written by Grace Cunard. There are a number of excellent fire scenes. Green saves his wife's mother, believing her to be his wife. Finding out the truth, she is sent back into the flames.

"Lured from Squash Centre." (Powwers. April 14.)—A burlesque on white slave pictures which is excellently worked out. The "above" weighs about 500 pounds on a rough guess.

"The Taint of an Alien." (Powwers. April 24.)—This picture was shown for a review without subtitles. The story therefore was obscure to the public, while the criminal injected in another's veins causes his murder.

"Animated Weekly, No. 10." (Universal) —Minute automobile races in California and the quizzing up of the steamship Munro are the most interesting items.

"In the Days of Old California." (Gold Seal. Two reels. April 29.)—Played by Edwin August, Helen Case and Eugene Ormonde. The story deals, as the name implies, with the days of California. The costume is excellent. Settings were good. Captain Mercedes and Dolores were after a brief courtship, the former dies after leading a successful life, his son inheriting his dissipated ways. It is in the army and is disgraced. His captain allows him to go on leave of honor and retain his sword to visit his dying mother. He returns on leave with the intention to marry the daughter of his old captain.

"The Stranger at Hickory Nut Gulch." (Imp. April 30.)—The plot of this drama has been used many times, but here it is varied sufficiently to seem almost new. An revenue officer goes to arrest some moonshiners. After many experiences he finally marries the daughter of their leader.

"A Narrow Squeak." (Powwers. April 20.)—A very funny comedy that is absolutely clever. It is the story of a bank robbery that will set across anywhere. A p. c. kept between the bank and the police, gives the criminal an opportunity to breathe ghosts are in the house.

"Charley's Rival." (Crystal, Split reel. April 21.)—Good photography and plot. Typifies the American way of life. On the same reel with "Si Puts One Over."

"I Puts One Over." (Crystal. Split reel. April 21.)—On the same reel with "Charley's Rival." Si, the hayseed rival wins the girl by antagonizing the other competitors against each other.

"A Neighboring Quarel." (Frontier. April 23.)—A huss noise causes some trouble when turned on the wrong person. The police go through a hunting for their quarry.

"The Lion" (Victor. April 20)—A drama, featuring J. Warren Kerrigan. Nola, called the "lion," because of his temper, thinks he has killed Hartley in a quarrel. His friends send him out of the city and he obtains work on a ranch. Later he finds out that Hartley is not dead. The experience, however, has taught him the virtue of perseverance.

"Almost a Bridegroom." (Crystal. April 26.)—An excellent comedy. Charlie is in love with the girl, but she intolerably hard on him. To make a different ending to the old story, Charlie does not succeed in winning her and is made very hard.

"His Servant." (Edlar-Universal. May 3.) —An unusual drama containing very little real story and very abrupt, is tawed from swindlers by his humble butler, who happens to have more brains than his master.

"Splotted." (Crystal, Split reel. April 28.)—On the same reel with "For the Love of Baldy." A moral story, and one of iniquity. The complications that arise are humorous.

"For the Love of Baldy." (Crystal, Split reel. April 28.)—On the same reel with "Splotted." Not a very good comedy. Buddy tries hard to win an old maid and finally succeeds.

"Nugget Ned's Ward." (Frontier. April 25.)—A drama replete with thrilling scenes. Two mining partners are in love with Neb. The one she selects is the other becomes rich. Years later he returns and seeks the hand of the woman his friend secures. The turning up of some old papers he is proved dishonest and the match is broken.

"Cuckooville Goes Skating." (Frontier. April 30.)—Some funny antics follow when the population of Cuckooville is put on skates.

"The Slippery Spy." (Eclair. March 29.)—Another clever Eclair comedy, with a plot somewhat similar to the others. A child dreams he is a spy and gets captured. The prison cannot hold him, and the "cleverest woman in the world," and they are freed.

"Lutie's Lovers." (Toker. April 22.)—Comedy of an irresponsible child. Elle plays with the hearts of two lovers, and a juxtape of the two finally she loses both. Rough and tumble in places.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

"Love vs. Duty." (Kay-Bee. Two reels. April 17.)—Not a new plot by any means, although the key to the situation is different from many. Callahan, the detective, is in love with Mary Kelly, the daughter of a wagon thief. One evening a murder is committed in front of the police and Callahan goes across Kelly. He permits himself and later is rewarded by the hand of his daughter.

"The Musician's Daughter." (Hanhouse. Two reels. April 18.)—There is so much marring, divorcing, marrying again and dying in this drama that it is exceedingly hard to follow. After many trials and tribulations with different step-fathers and step-mothers the musician's daughter is finally restored to her real father.

"Too Much Turkey." (Princess. April 19.)—A laughable comedy of two elders. At Christmas both decide to buy a turkey. The girl's parent sends her a turkey and the boy's father tells him to bring his wife home. The husband arrives at home, and the wife and Turkey are at each other's throat.

"Captain Junior." (Broncho. Two reels. April 16.)—Captain Junior's father, the sergeant, goes off across the plains to meet his new wife. One day, the steamship captain, father of a woman is unknown to him. He makes his presence known when too late to do back. Re-turning, the sergeant leaves his new wife and boy and goes off to investigate an Indian raid. The detachment commanded by Captain Junior is attacked by Indians and all the soldiers are killed. Junior, however, rescues his mother and so learns to love her.

"David Grey's Estate." (American. April 22.)—A moral story, and one of iniquity. The subtitles are written in poetry. A blacksmith is unsatisfied with his lot; he envies David Grey. He finds later that his own happiness lies in his children.

"The Right Dope." (Konic. April 15.)—A comedy. Dr. Killers and Dr. Curem are both in love with the same girl and after fighting over her for some time, a third doctor comes between them.

"Hubby's Surprise." (Royal. Split reel. April 11.)—On the same reel with "It Came by Freight." A boy who has been a surprise for him. He thinks it is a baby, but learns to his disgust that it is only a dog.

"It Came by Freight." (Royal. Split reel. April 11.)—On the same reel with "Hubby's Surprise." A picture of mother-in-law came by freight and suffers a lot of trouble carrying it home to Hubby. Then he had to hang it, but—dropped!

"His Punishment." (Majestic. April 14.) —A striking drama, true to life, containing a lot of adventure. Modern machinery is in factories and the tragedy that the lack of it brought on one home.

"Our Mutual Girl, No. 12." (Reliance. April 13.)—Margaret views the whole of the St. Patrick's day parade, meets Miss Else, and speedily gets lost of the day trying on an assortment of hats.

"The Silent Witness." (Broncho. Two reels. April 23.)—An interesting drama, in which a guilty man is brought to bay and the innocent one freed, by the use of a record taken at a daring robbery.

"The Godfather." (Reliance. Two Reels. April 11.)—Ben, a young gambler, goes West. There he meets his godfather who is running a gambling house. Each helps to reform the other and at the back end. Ben renews his mother. A strong drama.

MISCELLANEOUS

"At the Hour of Dawn." (Gaumont. Three reels. April 11.)—A stirring drama. The scene is laid in Nocera, a small town in Central Italy, during the time of the Roman cen-

"The Master Criminal." (World Film Corporation. Four Reels. Jaque Collins, a con-

"Count Zarka." (Great Northern. Three reels. From the novel of the same name. A Count Zarka, an adventurer, desires Philippa, a ward of Lady Countess, Rosal. For a large sum of money he contracts to kill her and steal some treasure for a foreign country. Rosal, Zarka's cousin, loves him, her love turning to hatred on his coldness. Determined on revenge, he finally manages to free him after a long fight with the police. Rosal marries one of the friends of Roal, while Philippa and Roal are joined together.

Gene Gauntier, who is producing three reel pictures for Warner's Features, was the recipient of a letter from a Arabich Sheik recently requesting her hand in marriage in return for a horse, according to their press.

Edna Masion, of the Universal studio, is taping with the lead which will be in a drama called "The Iron Claw," being produced by Otis Turner. In Mrs. Masion will be featured at the head of her own company with George Stanley as director. Mrs. Masion is now producing the Primitive Company after a short holiday. Russell Bossert, who has been with the Universal for some time, has formed his own company and is producing the "Severed Hand" with Cleo Madison in the lead. The pictures will be produced in the studio and will feature a new formula in the studio and will feature a new formula in his show which is currently being done in his show which is currently being done
WRITER, ACTOR AND PRODUCER

George K. Rolands, who is preparing to follow "Trapped in the Great Metropolis" with another production on a similar scale, has had experience as an actor, a director and a writer of photographs, as well as producer. His formation of the Rolands Feature Film Company with Samuel Q. Edelstein, was succeeded by the appearance of the New York police-pay just mentioned.

"The Lure of New York" and "Mendel Bellis," the latter founded on the recent "ritual murder" trial in Kiev, Russia, which commanded the attention of the entire world, are both productions of Mr. Rolands. By a coincidence, the three pictures that he has put out were shown at the same theatre in New York City recently.

FILM DELIVERY BY AUTO

Taking advantage of the speed of the light motor truck, the Empire Service Corporation of New York has been formed to distribute films for the big film companies.

After a film has been shown in one theatre it is quickly transferred to a waiting motor truck and immediately rushed to a house further downtown. In this way patrons of many houses are able to view the up-to-date films on the same evening.

"QUINCY ADAMS SAWYER"

(Furistan Special Feature Company)

REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

ATMOSPHERICALLY this picture is perfect. The country general store, the husking bees, the town-hall dances are all shown with a cleverness that even the speaking stage could not better with ingenious dialogue. The action and settings of the original book and play have been followed very closely.

It has been roughly estimated that 10,000,000 have read the book, and the play has been seen by twice as many at least, for except for "East Lynne" it is without a peer in its class.

The cast is made up of a number of very clever people whose names unfortunately are unobtainable. Many of the scenes were taken on a farm in New England, in a village which is somewhat like "Mason's Corners," which accounts for the realism.

The love scenes were directed with great care. Quincy and the blind Alice, Hiram and his "gal," Zekial and Lindy and all the others have our absolute sympathy throughout. Even Bob Wood, the town bully, draws a smile by the manner in which he avoids meeting Quincy after the one thrashing. The one snow scene might have been bettered; aside from this the four reels are excellently executed.

"THE BATTLE OF THE SEXES"

"THE Battle of the Sexes," as it is now called, was reviewed in the issue of March 7 of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS. The picture, which is the first release of D. W. Griffith, since his installation as head director of the Mutual interests, is one of the most thoroughly fine pictures ever made.

The review was under the name "The Single Standard," which is the last half of the present title, and at that time the full name.

RIGHT OFF THE REEL

Richard Stanton, leading man and George O'Brien, character man, of the Kay-Dee, Broncho and Domino films have graduated from the ranks. The International Bible Students Association, producers of "Creation," have placed an order for ten Simplex projectors. These are for road purposes, and will be equipped with aluminum pedestals.

A Simplex projector has been installed by the Life Photo Film Corporation, 101 West 10th street, New York.

Al. E. Christie is busy with his Nestor comedy company production "The Newly-weds Dilemma," a one-reel laugh producer by Inez Royce.

A contract executed April 4 between the Occidental Motion Picture Company of California and the World Wide Film Company of New York, gives to the Pan-American Film Company the world rights in Darrow's "Darrow's labor,photo play entitled "From Dust to Dawn" for a term of three years.

“ANIMATED SONGS”

Perfect Synchronism of the Human Voice. All the oldtime and popular songs in motion pictures. First run service as low as $10.00 a week.

Just think of a Motion Picture that is guaranteed to bring applause from your patrons. “Imperial Singing Pictures” do this wherever shown. Exclusive service in cities and towns under population of 50,000. The Warner and a Union Telegraph is handy, so hurry. No matter what service you are handling you can use “Imperial Singing Pictures” and thereby strengthen your program. If you are a wide-awake exhibitor, do not sit idly by and allow your competitors to “beat you to it.” You will eventually be compelled to show “Imperial Singing Pictures” for your patrons will demand them. You will have no other alternative. If you wire now for our first release, you can get the exclusive right for your city. First come, first served. Do you remember how your patrons demanded song slides when they first became the rage? Will not “Imperial Singing Pictures” create a far greater demand? Why not? After perfecting “Imperial Singing Pictures” the Originator of the Idea, Mr. J. Mahan, gave a private demonstration on the American Roof, New York City, to the Recognized Leaders in the amusement world, namely: representatives of the United Booking Company, Marcus Loew’s Enterprises, Jones, Lincoln & Schaeffer Co., and others. These gentlemen represent and control the majority of large and small theatres in the United States and Canada, and were high in their praise of “Imperial Singing Pictures.”

JONES, LINCOLN & SCHAEFFER, of Chicago, were the first to book “Imperial Singing Pictures.” Mr. Exhibitor, close your eyes and imagine you were sitting in a theatre, and a beautiful voice started singing, when all of a sudden, there appeared these words, “HOME, SWEET HOME.” Following came a motion picture portrayal of John Howard Payne’s immortal song, “HOME, SWEET HOME,” in twelve scenes, with human pathos in every scene. Would you sit up and applaud, or would you fall asleep again as your patrons are doing daily, owing to the same-ness of your program? “Get something new,” they are always crying. “Imperial Singing Pictures” are brand new and your opportunity to please your ever-changing patrons is within your grasp “if you are a live one.” We have different forms of contracts to offer you, viz: weekly rental, consecutive service, State Rights and exclusive box office. “Imperial Singing Pictures” are photographically perfect. Our first release, May 11, is a Motion Picture portrayal in ten scenes of the present New York City big hit, “THE HEART OF THE CITY THAT HAS NO HEART.”

While this action is being portrayed, the singer is singing. The lyrics fit the action perfectly. Operator, singer, musicians or piano player finish simultaneously. You will be able to run a much shorter show and get twice the money in the box office. If you book “Imperial Singing Pictures,” films are released through the “HOME OFFICE,” Broadway at Forty-second Street, New York City. Second release, May 18, a song portrayal of “HOME, SWEET HOME,” staged at the home of John Howard Payne’s direct descendant, Mrs. Clara Payne Boyce, Kingsbridge, New York, and at East Hampton, Long Island, showing John Howard Payne’s lovely thatched cottage home. Third release, May 25, the OLD TIME SONG, “Silver Threads Among the Gold,” two beautiful one-sheets, four colors, full set photos, two copies of music, full set of orchestrations, and full instructions with each film—FREE.

Animated Song List. Released in the order named. Subject to change:

“IN THE HEART OF THE CITY THAT HAS NO HEART.” “HOME, SWEET HOME.” “SILVER THREADS AMONG THE GOLD.” “TWO FLORAL WREATHS.” “SWEET ALICE, BEN BOLT.” “THE OLD GAKEN BUCKET.” “SHADOWS.” “TONGUE’S MY LAST NIGHT SING.” “WHEN YOU AND I WERE YOUNG, MAGGIE.” “ANNIE LAURIE.” “LAST ROSE OF SUMMER.” “PUT ME IF ALL THOSE ENDEARING YOUNG CHARSES.” “SONGS MY MOTHER TAUGHT ME.”

THE BATTLE OF THE SEXES
OR THE SINGLE STANDARD

Produced in Five Fascinating Reels of Constant Drama

By D. W. GRIFFITH

The Battle of the Sexes is the Great Conflict of Modern Society. It is the War of Opinion over the question of the Single Standard of Moral Responsibility for Men and Women. This powerful photo-drama demonstrates the utter degradation of any theory justifying the husband in conduct violating the marriage vow.

This is the story of the Great Battle of a Good and Faithful Wife against her Husband's Forgetfulness of All Home Ties. It shows the Regeneration of the Man and the Total Defeat of the Unscrupulous Temptress.

This drama all takes place in the most luxurious New York surroundings, and includes glimpses of one of the most fashionable Tango Halls along The Great White Way.

Now being released at all MUTUAL and CONTINENTAL Exchanges

Here it is at last! What?

DOYEN'S GOLDEN RADIIUM CONDENSERS. They give a Soft Sunlight Picture on your screen. We are the Original and only manufacturers of the Golden Radium Condenser. None genuine without the name Doyen's Golden Radium stamped in the glass. These Condensers are made of the highest grade of French Optical Glass, colored with pure gold of a special tint. You can start a show earlier in your summer garden with a pair of Doyen's Golden Radium. We send a pair on ten days' trial on the receipt of five ($5) dollars, and at the end of that time if they fail to do what we claim, return our goods and we return your cash. Be careful to look for my name, Doyen's Golden Radium, for no one can use the name Doyen, therefore you will be certain to get the genuine article. In ordering kindly state if A. C. or D. C. is used. We take this opportunity to thank our numerous patrons for letters of congratulation, having given entire satisfaction.

Film Quality

Quality in the film—quality from a technical photographic standpoint is as important to the Exhibitor as is interest in the story that the film tells.

There's one film that's recognized the world over as the standard of quality—that is always used by those whose effort it is to give the Exhibitors the very best goods and the very best service—Eastman film.

And it is identifiable. Look for "Eastman" on the perforated margin.

OR

The Jack of Diamonds

FREDERICK BRYTON, in this wonderful melodrama, reached the hearts of the American public for years—hundreds of thousands of dollars have been spent in advertising the play and it is known in almost every home. One of the strongest stories ever written. Laughter, tears, tragedy, in fact, the whole gamut of human emotions. It is now offered to you in photoplay form. Some of the most beautiful scenic effects ever shown in pictures. A remarkable race track scene—a realistic round up—a thrilling rescue—in fact, every element necessary for an ideal picture—photographically perfect.

Fire Marshal Sends New Regulations to All Exhibitors; Asks Cooperation—Close One Theatre—Start Duluth Probe

St. Paul, Minn., April 13. STATE Fire Marshal Arthur Keller lately sent out to all motion picture houses in the State a new book which he has prepared relating to the subject of construction and arrangement of theatres in the State, so that they come within the law and are as near fire-proof as possible.

The State fire marshal was given authority by the last legislature to regulate conditions that are a menace to life and property and he has first turned his hand to an inspection of the motion picture houses in the State.

In the booklet Mr. Keller states that hereafter all electric wiring in motion picture houses must be brought into the operator’s booth in iron conduits and to insure against fire, all films in the booth must be kept in a metal case and not removed except when being transferred to the machine.

The prohibition against smoking and the keeping of matches within the booth is one of the most important restrictions he has made. In relation to the theatre proper, the State fire marshal says that all seats shall be not less than 30 inches from back to back and the seats must be securely fastened to the floor.

Brick, tile or concrete booths must have walls of not less than eight inches thick.

Every motion picture machine must be installed in a compartment of fire-resistant material, not less than 5x5 feet for one machine nor less than 10x7 feet for two machines.

“It is hoped,” said Mr. Keller, “by getting the cooperation of managers of the ‘movie’ to place Minnesota in the front ranks of states which are taking cognizance of the rapid development of the motion picture as a source of amusement, and are endeavoring to make these places of amusement so far removed from fire danger that the general public can attend them in safety.”

Fire Marshal Closes Theatre

Wayzata, Minn., April 12. Fred W. Nye, deputy State fire Marshal, reported today that he had closed the Lake motion picture house in this city which is operated by Walter Schmall. He said the machine was not in a fireproof booth as required by law and that the theatre had not the full number of exits as required by the law.

Schmall has not decided yet whether he will rebuild the theatre and open again or not. As the theatre is within a short distance of Lake Minnetonka, a great summer resort for Minneapolis and St. Paul people, it is a haven for motion picture enthusiasts during the summer, and in case Schmall does not reopen it is expected there will be several bidders for the theatre.

Investigate Duluth Theatres

Duluth, Minn., April 12. Fire Chief Randall, of this city, together with City Electrician Hough, were recently ordered by Mayor J. C. Prince to investigate all motion picture houses in the city as to their fire safety conditions. Special attention will be given to the machine booths and also to the wiring of the buildings.

Following an inspection of the theatres, which is not expected to be completed until May, there will be a slight revision in the ordinances governing them, Mayor Prince said.

Edward Peple's great dramatic success.
Five reels.

A thrilling and deeply pathetic episode of the late Civil War enacted by famous motion picture players and intensified by a series of spectacular and realistic battles.

An entire state militia—whole troops of V e t. Regulars—400 horses—all the riders of a well known wild west show and over a thousand soldiers are employed in these scenes.

A photoplay of surpassing excellence, produced on a massive scale with the utmost attention to detail.

Right off the reel
Jacques Spreck, who directs the retooling of Warner's Features in New York, most of New Jersey and a part of Connecticut, is a busy film merchant these days.

"Cigar Bums," directed by Albert Hale, is an entertaining little story of a cigar-smoking bandit in the park.

Bert Emard, of the Eclair Company, is taking a flying trip through the South, West and Middle West. He reports excellent business.

The comic band on the Mutual program will be discontinued after April 29. A new Reliance release will take the place of this picture each week.

Herbert Brenon, the Imp director, who was injured while in Bermuda, is to direct his assistant director, Mr. Brenon being too weak to take an active part. He will be back in harness again in two weeks.

Leah Baird, the Imp star, is to be featured in several new dramas which the Universal Company have been actively buying and arranging for her acknowledged talents.

Louise Glaum has formed a little club of her own which is unique in that she personally selects the members. All are actresses in the motion pictures, and they agree not to say "mean" things about other people, but to talk over things which will improve their profession.

Dave Kirkland is to produce comedies at the Universal. Jess Meredyth will play the leads.

Milton H. Fahrney, the producer at the Alouette Company, is directing a Western "Warner's Feature Film Company" entitled "The Luck of the Tribe."

George Cooper, later of the Vitagraph, has joined Allan Dwan's company at the Universal. The third of the Luck of Love, Girl of Mystery stories, is well under way and Francis Ford and Grace Geanard are pursuing their way and are at present in the South Seas Islands. There is a big parade in this number in which a large number of animals take part.

Henry King is taking the lead in "Caged," produced by Henry Otto at the Animal Company. Belle Bennett and Gypsy Abbott are also in the cast.

Bess Meredyth of the Universal West Coast studio, is having a special series of comedies written around her. William Wolbert and Eddie Roland will act in support.

Fred MacMurray has engaged the Majestic studios at Boyle Heights, Cal., for his "Fred MacMurray Feature Film Company," and from there the "Macm Film" will be produced. Harry Revere will be in charge of the laboratory.

Carlyle Blackwell, who resigned from the Salem Company, is playing the lead in "The Little Queen," a Famous Players production.

Mr. Blackwell will later come on to New York and star with that company.

W. We have returned from the "Coast" to tell you of more theatres on Broadway and its tributaries, using motion pictures exclusively or as a part of their entertainment.

The Herald Square, Broadway and Republic theatres must be added to those previously mentioned, as the homes of many musical and dramatic successes, now using motion pictures and Power's Service.

The use of Power's Cameragraph No. 6A, in the projection of high-class pictures, has become as much a necessary part of animated picture development, as the themes and scenic effects of our best known dramatic and musical producers.

THE business press of America, at its last convention, made the following declaration:

"We believe the highest efficiency of the trade publication can be secured through circulation of quality rather than of quantity—that character and not mere numbers should be the criterion by which the value of a publication should be judged."

In the discussion that preceded this declaration a number of very interesting points were brought to light. The meeting, of course, was held in the interests of the trade journals themselves.

THE circulation problem was analyzed from the standpoint of the publishers' benefit, not that of the advertiser.

But the final consensus of opinion was that the two interests are identical; and it would have been profitable for the advertiser to have been present.

The controversy simmered down to bulk versus quality circulation. And the sole argument in favor of bulk circulation was along these lines. "Oh, well, figures are impressive. The advertiser doesn't stop to analyze them." * * *

"He doesn't ask you to analyze them. On the other hand, if you quote him a small circulation it is up to you to prove its value and that takes time and money."

All of which is generally true.

Most advertisers do not analyze circulation. * * *

IT is strange, but the same man who will only buy raw material or labor upon the closest examination will buy circulation with his eyes shut. He only asks the amount of it. Yet the amount of circulation is in reality the least consideration.

* * *

HERE'S a point for instance:

The writer once placed advertising in two trade publications. One had over 50,000 circulation; the other less than 25,000.

There was no question about the amount of the 50,000 circulation. It was all there and paid for.

THERE was no apparent waste in it. It went to the very field the advertiser wanted to reach. The news-stand circulation was but 20 per cent of the gross.

And yet the publication with just half the circulation pulled ten times as many inquiries. Why?

BECAUSE the smaller circulation was a responsive one. For some reason this paper drew responses from its readers.

And the reason was this: That because of its editorial value it was closest to the minds and hearts of its readers.

They were used to writing letters to it.

And the paper that draws letters from its readers draws letters for its advertisers. * * *

EVIDENTLY the bigger circulation was forced—in some way.

It was a paid circulation, but the subscriber didn't take it for its own sake alone.

Now, if this is true of a paid circulation—paid in such a way—of what value is a free circulation to the advertiser?

It doesn't matter how large it is. It won't give results.

A big circulation isn't difficult to acquire. You can buy it, or give it away, or secure it by news-stand circulation. * * *

BUT mere figures don't mean circulation value. In fact, they are dangerously misleading.

Circulation should not be counted but weighed.

The paper that weighs up is the paper the subscriber wants, and needs.

This is quality circulation, and the way to estimate it is simply to estimate the value of the reading pages.

Do they appeal broadly, deeply, to the man you, as an advertiser, want to reach?

Then this is your paper.

BIG PLANS FOR CAROLINA CONVENTION

The convention of the exhibitors of North and South Carolina which will be held in Charlotte, North Carolina, May 18, 19 and 20, will be at the same time as the great Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence celebration, and will therefore obtain much publicity. The exhibitors will have several floats and do all in their power to advertise the industry.

The parade, which will take place on May 20, will be in the following order: Section 1, history of Charlotte illustrated by costumes and floats. Section 2, civic parades. Section 3, army and navy. Section 4, industrial parade to be headed by the motion picture interests. Section 5, fraternal orders. Section 6, agriculture.

A number of camera-men have applied for permits and will make pictures of the event. These films will be shown in several of the local houses which have already contracted for them. The manufacturers have been requested to contribute a small sum each, to build another float to show the motion picture industry and to tell the power of the films.

The national organizer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League, John Bradlet, will be in New York some time this week, and will visit the manufacturers with this idea in mind.

PREPARING FOR MICHIGAN CONVENTION

Preparations are well under way for the convention of the Motion Picture League of Michigan, to be held in Detroit, June 19-21. The entire roof garden floor of the Hotel Tuller has been reserved as headquarters for the league.

There will be a large film exhibition room, a convention hall and booths for exhibitors of motion picture supplies on this floor. There is also a banquet hall and lounging rooms.

Entertainment will be found in the numerous opportunities for boat excursions on the lakes and river.

There are 1,200 motion picture theatres in Michigan and the greater part of them will be represented at this gathering.

NOVELIZE ECLECTIC STORIES

The Eclectic Film Company, in collaboration with the Hearst papers, is publishing all of their multiple reel releases, in the form of serial stories similar to the "Perils of Pauline."

"Loyalty," an elaborately colored picture, is the first of these and will be followed by a story called "War," which describes the action of the film "War Is Hell." The Eclectic company report this as being a tremendous advertising proposition.

Plans for Rochester Convention

Mayor Will Deliver Address of Welcome on May 5—Grand Ball in the Evening as Finale

ELABORATE plans for the fourth annual convention of New York State Branch, No. 11, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, to be held at the Hotel Seneca, Tuesday, May 5, are under way and it is expected that a large number of delegates will be present.

Among those who have accepted invitations to attend are National President M. A. Neff, of Cincinnati; National Secretary George H. Wiley, of Kansas City, Mo.; and National Vice-President F. C. Pierce, of Geneva; N. Y. State Secretary Morris L. Fleischman, of New York City, and First Vice-President I. L. Davis, of Binghamton, N.Y., have also announced their intention of being present.

Mayor H. H. Edgerton has been invited to address the delegates at an open meeting to be held at 10:30 a.m. in the ballroom of the Seneca. Current affairs in the motion picture world will be discussed by the national officers at this meeting. At 2 p.m. the convention will go into executive session and reports from the various officers will be received. Election of officers for the coming year will follow.

The chief purpose of the convention is for the election of delegates to attend the national convention, to be held at Dayton, O., the week of July 6. This convention probably will be the largest and most successful one in the history of the national organization. It is expected that over 10,000 delegates and their families will attend.

A grand ball, to be held in Convention Hall in the evening, will wind up the state convention. W. C. Hubbard, chairman of the committee of ar-
THE declaration of war by The Motion Picture News on censorship and the politicians two weeks ago has met with a response from the exhibitors, particularly those in Ohio, as if it were a veritable "call to arms."

How truly The Motion Picture News sounded the keynote of exhibitors' opinion, and gave utterance to the ideas that were taking shape in their minds, is demonstrated by the letter from Sam Bullock, corresponding secretary of the Cleveland Motion Picture Association, reprinted below.

The letter needs no explanation. It speaks for itself, and for the representative character of the editorial policies of The Motion Picture News.

The exhibitors of Ohio have resolved to espouse the cause which the Mutual Film Corporation is fighting before the United States Supreme Court. While that battle is being waged in Washington, the exhibitors of Ohio will concentrate their whole energies on putting the Ohio Censorship Law in its true fight before the voters of the state, and urging them to demand its repeal.

THE Mutual Film Corporation was the only producing firm willing to take the matter into the courts for the benefit of the exhibitors and themselves and fight for common justice and protection from gangs of political hooligans who were preparing to descend upon the industry.

It was quite natural, therefore, that at this juncture the exhibitors should reciprocate, and by means of the power of the screen, carry the war into the enemy's country, while the Mutual conducts the legal fight in Washington.

With the exhortation of The Motion Picture News, "Unite! Co-operate! Fight!" as their slogan, the leaders of the Ohio exhibitors are recruiting their adherents for a war, with the screen and the projection machines as weapons, against the political chieftains of the state who have plotted to plunder the motion picture industry.

THE appeal will be to the people of Ohio.

A repeal of the "lawless" law will be sought, by popular petition.

The exhibitors of the State are confident that the censorship law foisted upon them last spring at Columbus was not the will of the people, but an artifice of grafters, jammed through the legislature by pull and influence and methods even worse.

The people of Ohio have the power to smash the politicians and their law if they choose. That they will do so not an exhibitor who has committed himself to the fight doubts for an instant.

Mr. Bullock's letter of congratulation to The Motion Picture News is here reproduced. The manifesto of resolutions subscribed to by the Cleveland Motion Picture Association follows:

The Editor, Cleveland, Ohio, April 15, 1914.

"The Motion Picture News."

"New York City."

"Dear Sir: You have SOME paper now! "IT BEGINS TO LOOK AS THOUGH THE EXHIBITOR NOW HAS A MEDIUM OF COMMUNICATION WITH HIS FELLOW-SHOWMAN,—something besides 'synopses' of everything on the market.

"I have been getting it from the news-stands for quite a while, and to-day I told the boys at our special meeting that I figured your current issue (that of April 18) worth at least a dollar a copy.

"Your slogan is ours, from now on until this censor 'snake' is killed,—UNITE! CO-OPERATE! FIGHT! I wrote the resolutions I am sending you the day following the court's decision, and, using your editorial as a text, I introduced them at to-day's meeting. The members enthusiastically passed them by unanimous vote.

"We are going to inaugurate a campaign of education among Buckeye exhibitors that will put backbone in the members of the fraternity from Maine to Prisco.

"We have dabbled with this vital question too long, and that makes the fight all the harder, but the ultimate victory will be complete and sweet.

"Under Ohio's new constitution we can effect a complete repeal of this legalized graft proposition, without consulting the politicians in the least. We do not want to go into politics; our movement will be strictly non-partisan.

"BUT IF CERTAIN POLITICIANS WHO HAVE HERETOFORE SHOWN A DESIRE TO OPPRESS US STILL MAINTAIN THAT ATTITUDE, WE SHALL MAKE SPLIT-REEL COMEDIES OF THEM.

"We have the right of petition, and we can get the required percentage of voters on the petition for repeal easier than any other class of business men in Ohio.

"WE SHALL APPEAL TO THE PICTURE FANS DIRECTLY THROUGH THE MEDIUM OF THE SCREENS OF ONE THOUSAND THEATRES IN OHIO. And we are satisfied to abide by a decision of the voters of the state.

"We cannot do otherwise, neither will we allow a little coterie of politicians to do otherwise. It is to be a fair, open fight, a state-wide battle of ballots, AND WE EXPECT AND SHALL DEMAND THE CO-OPERATION OF ALL WHO ARE INTERESTED IN THE INDUSTRY, EXHIBITORS, EXCHANGE MEN, MANUFACTURERS, MATERIAL MEN AND NEWSPAPERS.

"The blow is aimed at the entire industry, with 'Old Buckeye' as the 'goat.'

"We must uphold the Mutual in this appeal to the highest court, by getting the sentiment of at least one state upon this great, red-blooded American question—Censorship vs. No Censorship."

"SAM BULLOCK;
Chairman of the Committee."

THE resolutions adopted at the meeting of the Cleveland Motion Picture Association are as follows:

RESOLUTIONS

WHEREAS:—The Mutual Film Corporation of New York, having responded to the demands of the exhibitors in making a court test of the Ohio State Censor Law; so called and

WHEREAS:—The said court test has resulted unfavorably to said Mutual Film Corporation, its customers and all exhibitors and the trade doing business in the State of Ohio; and

"Brewster's Millions" at the Strand

Lasky Production, Which Leads Big Theatre's Bill Next Week, Is a New Kind of Comedy

BREWSTER'S MILLIONS, the five-reel screen version by the Lasky Feature Play Company, of the McCutcheon-Smith farce with Edward Abeles in the leading role, will have the honor of heading the second bill at the new Strand Theatre, New York City.

The Lasky production of "Brewster's Millions," in five parts, is the forerunner of a revolution in screen comedies. The success of this photo-comedy means that the true comedy, which has reigned supreme on the stage, will take its rightful place on the screen.

"Brewster's Millions" is the first challenge to the supremacy of slapstick. The pell-mell, helterskelter comedy of riot and antics and buffoonery must yield now to the comedy of real life, of manners, situations and personalities.

This picture is proof positive that a story worthy to be called a story, full of romance, yet bubbling over with comedy, now leaning toward melodrama, now skirting the edge of farce, can be put into five reels and hold its audience every moment of the hour and a half required to show the production.

"Brewster's Millions" has broken ground in the new field of comedy—old to the stage, but new to the screen in America, at any rate. From that field will come all the great photo-comedies of the future.

"The Littlest Rebel" Is Under Way

First Reel of Photoplays Production Company's Feature Finished—Frank Tichenor Goes South to Join Producing Forces

FRANK A. TICHENOR, general manager of the Photoplays Productions Company, is now in Augusta, Ga., where Edward Peple's great drama of Civil War times, "The Littlest Rebel," is being produced as a five-reel photoplay. The first reel has been completed.

"I don't care how much money it costs or how long it takes" said Mr. Tichenor, when interviewed in his office at 220 West Forty-second street on the day of his departure. "We are going to make every foot of this film bear the individuality of our new idea, and live up to the standard we have set. We are depending upon four strong points to hit 'The Littlest Rebel' to a high plane. First of all, there is Mr. Peple's play. It seems made to order for our purpose. It touches the deepest note of pathos. It mingle highly imaginative romance with the thrill of unusual facts. Through it all runs the rumble of war, without diverting attention from the central theme, or causing the slightesthalt in the action.

"Next comes our new method of production. We believe that experienced motion picture actors are the only ones who may be depended on for capable characterization in motion pictures. The short history of the feature film constitutes an appalling record of failures in big expensive features that have relied upon well-known legitimate stars to pull them through. We are taking no chances in this department. Our cast is made up of tried and proven screen actors.

"Third comes the infinite care and painstaking attention which we are giving to detail. A Confederate uniform is a real Confederate uniform—a cannon of '63 a cannon that saw service in '63—a satin dress is a satin dress and a burning mansion is a burning mansion, indeed. Fakes have no part in the making of 'The Littlest Rebel.'"

"Last of all comes the big spectacular battle scenes. In this work we have employed prominent Civil War veterans and active military experts of the present day. Every move has been studied out and charted and is directed by regular army officers. The troops are over fifteen hundred strong, with a large percentage of regulars and State militia men.

"With a definite line of procedure like this, I think I am justified in predicting that 'The Littlest Rebel' will win."

CHECK FORGER IS NABBED

One of the alleged check forgers, against whom the trade has been warned, has been apprehended, and exhibitions are cautioned to be on the lookout for others. This man, calling himself B. W. Sommers, was caught at Johnstown, N. Y., and brought to New York City for trial. He is accused of forging the name of Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Film Company.

Facts and Formulas Which the Exhibitor and Operator Ought to Know About the Surfaces on Which Pictures Are Projected—Values of Various Substances in Relation to Reflection of Light Discussed

THE motion picture screen is based upon the general principles of optics, according to which rays of light encountering the surface of an opaque body are arrested by the latter, much as a moat serves to protect a castles. A certain part of the rays is absorbed, and the remaining parts are driven back into the medium from which they proceed.

The reflection of light varies according to the material which is used as a screen and the degree to which it is polished or roughened.

If light falls upon a uniformly rough surface of an opaque body, each point of such surface becomes the focus of a pencil of reflected light, the rays of which diverge equally in all directions from this focus.

Mirrors are surfaces which possess reflecting power in the highest degree, but for this very reason they cannot be employed as screens.

When a screen for projection by reflection is opaque and its visible surface imperfectly polished, a part of the light received on it is regularly reflected and forms the optical image of the object from which the light proceeded, another part of the light is irregularly reflected and renders the surface of the screen perceivable and finally a certain part of light is absorbed by the surface and entirely lost to the eye.

Errors are often made by those who attempt to make screens without considering these facts, as well as many others.

The angle of incidence also has a great deal to do with projecting screens, as a screen may be practically perfect when the light falls perpendicularly on it or when seen in front, but suddenly turn black when looked upon at an angle.

In order to be able to see the images on the screen even at an angle, various systems of corrugated surfaces have been tried, which in fact gave more light on the sides, but the amount of light directed laterally or at an angle was lost to the front.

The screen problem is obviously a difficult one, as the ideal screen must show a perfect image whether one is in front or at a slight angle. It must also return most of the light without strain to the eye, and it is a well-known fact that tiring the eye can only be avoided by sacrificing a part of the light. The white wall or curtain sacrifice too much and for this reason require about 75 amperes, where a proper screen will give a perfect image with only 20 amperes.

Those who believe that a white curtain makes a good screen are much in error, for the reason that the white fabric curtains were originally only intended for use when placed between the public and the operator.

Some twenty years ago exhibitors occasionally tried to compensate for the poorliness of the pictures by hiding the projector and operator behind the screen. It was then thought that the public would thus get a better illusion of "living pictures." Space was also less expensive and the operator with his machine could afford to occupy nearly as much room as the public.

CONDITIONS have since changed and the translucent screen is practically abandoned, yet some exhibitors persist in using the white fabric as a reflecting screen, not realizing that it was used as a translucent screen, because light traverses it and that it enough light passes through it to show the picture on the other side, very little light is left for the surface on which the images are directly projected and which is seen by reflection by the public.

As regards the white wall, too much would have to be said about it and more particularly about its admirers who have exaggerated its virtues to take up space here. The exhibitor who had a wall built inside his theatre and coated it with a white varnish, believing that he would thus get the best results and save current, is not to blame. He probably got the suggestion from one of the well-known books on optical projection. The following is an extract from one of them:

"Screens.—There is no dispute at all as to what makes the very best screen for all kinds of lantern work. It is a fine smooth surface of white plaster of Paris, and next to that a smoothly whitewashed wall, finished with whitewashing, and not with lime. Such a surface is both white and opaque, reflecting back nearly all the light which falls upon it. Such a surface, as far as I have been able to ascertain from rather rough tests made with polarised light, gives fully 50 per cent more light than the best white sheet, and 30 per cent more than the very best faced screens that can be made."—(Optical Projection by Lewis Wright, editor; Longmans, Green & Co., page 124, 1911 Edition.)

The above statement might have been correct a quarter of a century ago, but not in 1911 when the book was printed, as at that time the white wall was no longer "30 per cent brighter than the very best faced screens that can be made."

The following list will give an idea of the reflecting power of certain bodies:

Polished silver, 97 per cent; gold, 95 per cent; varnished red copper, 86 per cent; white blotting paper, 82 per cent; white card and paper, 80 per cent; polished iron, 77 per cent; ordinary foolscap, 70 per cent; newspaper (grade), 50 to 70 per cent; tissue paper, 10 to 55 per cent; yellow painted wall, clean), 40 per cent, yellow painted wall, dirty), 20 per cent; yellow cardboard, 30 per cent; plain glass, 10 per cent, and water, 0 per cent.

FROM the above list of bodies and their power of reflection, it is easily realized that better screens can be made than those suggested by Mr. Wright.

The following coatings would slightly improve white screens and, as they have not been indicated by Mr. Wright, we take pleasure in mentioning them here, but the exhibitor has no practical facilities for applying them:

Those who have used, or are using, walls as screens have doubtless often noted the sweating that occurs on the surface as soon as the room gets warm. This is due to the condensed humidity on the wall, the walls, and the water thus formed being equal to that formed on windows which have to be wiped off frequently in order to see through them.

White cloth has another disadvantage, especially when it is used as a translucent screen, in that it has to be moistened very often with water containing about 15 per cent glycerine.

In 1844 a translucent screen was described as follows: "A plate of glass roughened, or cut into cross furrows, becomes a very good screen by disturbing the passage of light through it."

There is also a formula (25 years old) by which reflecting surfaces may be coated so as to utilize them as projecting screens. This formula is as follows:

Metallic powders have also often been employed for screens. The first screens of this type were coated with aluminum powder. These were made in France more than years ago and also later in Germany.

A metallic screen may be made by coating opaque cloth or any other support or base with a mixture of the following ingredients:

- Aluminum
- Magnesium
- Linseed oil, Banana oil or Acetate of Amyle
- Glycerine
- Gum-Arabic
- Gum
- Chromic or Vermillion

A beautiful screen can also be made by coating an opaque fabric or base with the following mixture:

- Fish glue
- Silver Litharge
- Glycerine
- Copal

The whole surface, before drying, should then be covered with tiny transparent spheres of glass.

There are a number of foreign patents for projecting-screens. Some of these patents disclose ideas of such an odd character they can hardly be analyzed here, with profit to our readers.

Among the United States patents for screens, the following should be taken into consideration:

- 899,101 Granted to A. L. Simpson. This patent covers the aluminum powder screen.
- 937,550 Granted to F. J. Rembush. This is known as the mirror screen.
- 970,913 Granted to Mario Ganzini.
- 986,385 Granted to P. J. Hanlon.
- 997,899 Granted to O. Fuehner.
- 1,019,141 Granted to A. Engelsmann.
- 1,091,879 Granted to G. W. Smith, and also patent No. 1,044,155.

Patent No. 997,889 covers a screen for projection in daylight or sunlight.

There is also a United States patent for a screen claimed to be fireproof. No. 1,067,540, granted to H. Clay Coyle, contains the following: "The object of the present invention is to produce a screen which does away with the bad yellow light which is often caused from the light employed, and at the same time to increase the brilliancy and plainness of the pictures thrown upon the screen and at the same time to increase the clearness and distinctiveness of the pictures.

"A further object is to provide practically a fireproof screen, one through which the rays of light cannot penetrate, thereby destroying to a certain extent the clearness and distinctiveness of the pictures.

"The sheet constituting the screen is preferably made up of ordinary and common fabric, such as now used, which sheet is cut to or made of the size desired which may be of any suitable size.

"By our improved process we employ pulverized glue, salt alum and washing soda, in and about the following proportions: 1 pound of alum and one pound of washing soda, which ingredients are dissolved by the use of about two gallons of distilled water, all of which is brought to substantially boiling heat.

"The screen is impregnated with the composition thus produced, after which the screen is submitted to a slow drying process for a period of about twelve hours, after which the screen is again coated with the composition above mentioned, to which composition is added a sufficient amount of aluminum bronze to produce a mixture which will give to the mixture a body about equal to ordinary paint.

"With this mixture the screen is coated upon both sides, after which the screen is submitted to a slow drying process for a period of about twenty-four hours.

"By the employment of the above described process we are enabled to produce a screen for the purpose designed that will be practically opaque, but at the same time the surface of the screen will have an increased brilliancy."

Recently a new method for making screens was suggested by the use of phosphorescent bodies in the compositions with which surfaces were coated, the effect produced on the eye by such surfaces being soft and pleasant. Besides this they have the advantage of giving light when all the lamps in the house are extinguished.

Another screen was described recently, which is a segment of a sphere and which, according to its inventor, is superior to other projecting surfaces for the reason, that the lens of the projector is thus at the focal point of the screen.

The inventor also claims that his screen improves the acoustic properties of the hall or theatre, an advantage which is certainly of no account to the silent photoplay. Indeed, it must be self-evident that the concave screen's advantages, not only do not amount to much, but are actually detrimental to the usual and necessary virtues of a projecting screen.

With a screen of this type the operator would be able to see better than anybody else in the theatre, but unfortunately the operator is the only one who has no time to look at the screen.

Distortion can only be avoided by making the surface of a projection screen plane or flat and not concave or convex. After much experiment and many tests it was found that

A SURVEY of motion picture trade conditions in England and Scotland, compiled from United States consular agents in Great Britain, has been published by the Department of Commerce in Washington, D.C., in the issue of April 15, of the Daily Trade and Consular Reports. So much information of value to American manufacturers who have offices or agencies in Great Britain is contained in the six or eight pages of the report, that it is reprinted here for the benefit of members of the trade.

Supplementary reports upon the conditions obtaining in the cinematographic trade of Germany, Norway, Spain, Switzerland and Panama are appended to the review of the United Kingdom. These will be published in the next issue of The Motion Picture News.

The general report on the United Kingdom is supplied by Vice-Consul Rice K. Evans, at Sheffield. That on conditions in Bradford is written by Consul Augustus E. Ingram, Consul Homer W. Byington writes from Leeds on the situation in that city and the article on Scotland is furnished by E. Haldeman Deenison. Consul at Dundee. Consul General R. E. Mansfield writes from Vancouver, Canada, on the general status of the trade in the Dominion.

American "Westerns" Weakening

The development of the public taste in cinematograph entertainment is not only interesting from a sociological point of view, begins the report, but from a commercial standpoint it means business to the film producers who keep step with the public preference.

The time was when seventy to eighty per cent of the films shown in Sheffield were of American manufacture, but that day is past, due partly to the successful efforts of film producers in other countries and partly to the decline in popularity of the costwhile film hero, the American cowboy. Certainly no characters lend themselves better to stirring dramatic situations put on in the open, with wide scope for scenic effect and rapid action, than do the cow puncher and the Indian fighter of Western America.

Despite it all, however, the public is getting overfed with them. Too often have they seen the same old cowboy ride madly down the same old trail. Too often has the selfsame settler defended to the last shell the same old cabin from the same old band of Indians, until the public is growing weary of him and would welcome with some relief a successful Indian massacre.

As a result of this changing public preference the American film has suffered, in this city at least. The Italians, with their emotional dramas of love and passion, staged with minute care, hold first place in the production of the purely sentimental drama; the French run rather to the emotional problem situation of the "eternal triangle," put in on a more or less restricted space. These two nationalities about cover the local market for wares of this sort.

Exquisite productions of old classics, carefully worked out as regards detail, are the drawing cards for the present, and these are in the main of English make.

Considering the situation locally, two facts must be borne in mind. First, that the cinematograph as an entertainment has lost its novelty; second, that the British taste demands a dash of fact with its fiction. The best sellers of the future will be dramas woven about historic events. There one may have all the thrills of the purely imaginative and as well the attraction of real characters.

Educational and industrial films are rapidly gaining in popularity. Street scenes, life pictures, and the industries of distant lands never fail to hold the interest and stimulate the thought of the motion picture theatre-goer.

Another form of picture at present enjoying popularity is that of a mild narrative enacting to a large extent in the more beautiful streets and characteristic thoroughfares of great cities. These especially lend themselves to the export trade, for then the setting is that of a foreign city and thereby doubly attractive.

As for comic films, they are rarely comic when transplanted. So much is comedy a matter of longitude that more often than otherwise the humor of an acted situation is lost in exportation.

Of these varied assertions there will perforce be varied opinions, but as to the main idea there can be no doubt. The film of to-morrow is sure to be on a higher mental plane than the film of yesterday. The producing houses which do the business of the future will be those that produce for the reading, thinking, intelligent classes and whose product both enlightens and entertains.

Business in Bradford

The motion picture business is well established in Bradford and apparently is still extending. In 1901 a regular show was first instituted in the largest hall in the city, having been preceded by occasional performances. As soon as its success became apparent, other buildings were converted, and later picture palaces were erected in various parts of the city. Licenses, renewable annually, must be obtained from the city authorities for these performances, and the buildings are inspected as to their suitability before such are issued. Special fireproof rooms for the lanterns and a sufficient number of exits for all emergencies are among the requirements.

There are in Bradford (which has a population of 291,482) over 30 buildings licensed for the exhibition of motion pictures and on special occasions more than $1,000 a day is said to be taken at one of these theatres. In con-section with some of these places cafes and smoking rooms are arranged, and in at least one instance tea and biscuits are provided gratuitously during the afternoon performance.

In the center of the city of Bradford the performances are continuous from 2 to 10:30 p.m.; beyond these limits there are usually two performances each evening at 7 and 9 o'clock, the popular charges of admission being 6, 12 and 24 cents. Probably 75 per cent of the films shown are of American manufacture. This is said to be partly due to the greater similarity between the American and English type of characters than those of Continental Europe. Among the American films exhibited here are the Vitagraph, Lubin, Biograph, Edison, Kalem, Keystone, Flying A, Selig, Thanhouser, A. K., Imp, Essanay, Rex, Reliance, Solax, Eclair, Majestic, Trans-Atlantic, and Western Import. The English films are Barker's, Clarendon, Cricks & Martin, Cosmopolitan and Hepworth. The Continental films are: French, Pathé Frères and Urban; French and English, Gaumont; French and Italian, Tyler; Italian, Cines and Ambrosio. The films which manufacture or control these films have offices in London, and it is from this point that all transactions are arranged.

Rental and Purchase Prices

There are three film-hiring firms in Bradford, viz.: Hibberts' Pictures (Ltd.), Imperial Animated Picture Company and the Exchange Film Service. The largest picture house in Bradford is the St. George's Hall (capacity 3,400) leased for the purpose by the New Century Picture Company, and that company also hires films on a large scale. The addresses of thirty cinematograph theatres in Bradford are forwarded.

The hiring charges for ordinary films range from $19.66 to $29.50 for the first week's run, the price being reduced for each subsequent run. Taking the medium rate of $24.33, the charges are as follows per 1,000 feet: 1st run—week $24.33, three days $12.16; 2d run—week $14.60, three days $8.51; 3d run—week $9.75, three days $6.07; 4th run—week $7.30, three days $4.86; 5th run—week $6.07, three days $3.65; 6th run—week $4.86, three days $3.43; 11th to 14th run, $3.65, with change (feature films included): 15th to 20th run, $2.43, with change. Beyond this number the charge is $1.21 or, with change, $1.82 per 1,000 feet.

Films are usually hired for a 3-day run; special and exclusive films are rented for six days. Among the latter class are those which contain some occasional high rate, dependent upon the subject and drawing power of the picture and the population of the city or town. As much as $730 has been paid for a week's hire of a film in Bradford.

In regard to the purchase of films, the ordinary rate is 8 cents per foot. Special and exclusive lines are subject to license and vary according to the character of the film.

Theatres at Leeds Multiplying

Motion picture houses in Leeds are enjoying the greatest prosperity and are steadily increasing in numbers. The latest statistics show: Cinematograph theatres, 49; buildings being converted into cinematograph theatres, 4; theatres and music halls holding cinematograph licenses, 4; other premises where such entertainments are occasionally held, 4; total, 61. The picture houses at present in operation have a seating capacity of 31,092. As the population of Leeds is given as 452,048, the accommodation is equivalent to one seat for every 14 of population.

According to a report of the Yorkshire branch of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association, the average daily attendance is 50,000. In this same report the number of children attending during the week and Saturday afternoons is given as 350,000; the persons employed in cinematograph theatres number 700, and the cost of electric lighting is $2,920 per month.

The prices of admission generally charged in Leeds are 6, 12, and 24 cents. The 6-cent seats are in the extreme front of the house near the screen on which the pictures are shown, and admittance is secured through side doors, the section being partitioned at the rear by a brass railing; the 12-cent seats begin at this railing and extend to the main entrance doors. The 24-cent seats, generally limited in number to 100, are placed in a small balcony over the last dozen rows of the 12-cent seats.

The films used are of international manufacture. Personal observations at picture houses and conversations with interested persons indicate that American films are very popular with local audiences. The films are rented from the American manufacturers or agents and from film-renting firms, the most important of which have their headquarters in London and agencies in various prominent cities of the United Kingdom. Complete lists of these firms, as well as a list of the most prominent Leeds picture houses, are forwarded.

Scottish Theatres Prosperous

The present prosperity of the cinematograph theatres in Scotland is remarkable. The hold that this form of entertainment has gained upon the people shows no sign of diminishing. Furnishing, as it does, an inexpensive form of amusement, the cinematograph makes a special appeal to such communities as Dundee, whose population consists largely of the laboring classes, who are unable to afford the higher-priced forms of entertainment.

The rise of the picture palace in Dundee has been extraordinary. A few years ago there were only two or three of these; to-day there are 25 licenses issued for buildings used for cinematograph entertainments, buildings used only occasionally for this form of amusement being included in this number.

On an average 17 halls are open nightly, principally as cinematograph shows. There is now under construction here a building with a seating capacity of 1,500, which is to be used as a picture palace. In Aberdeen every motion picture theatre reports phenomenal patronage, and three new ones are to be opened there shortly. Glasgow claims the distinction of having the finest picture palace in the world.

A marked change is taking place in the style of film demanded. All classes of films are growing appreciably more restrained. American Wild West scenes and the peculiarly Continental domestic scenes, which have hitherto been so popular, are gradually being superseded by films setting forth the story of some well-known novel or play.

The short film has almost disappeared, those now shown being 3,000 to 6,000 feet in length. Most of the films exhibited at the larger houses have their scenes laid in foreign countries and are supplied by American and Continental firms.

Precautions Against Fire

When this form of entertainment began the authorities had practically no control over the theatres, and the Government was compelled to take measures to safeguard the lives of the public attending such performances. This was done by passing the cinematograph act of 1909, and issuing regulations applicable to buildings in which cinematograph exhibitions are given and for which inflammable films are used. The act is administered by local authorities, and all buildings to which the act applies have to be licensed from year to year. In Dundee, before a license is granted, the applicant's building and apparatus undergo a careful inspection by representatives of the police, fire brigade, and the electrical and engineering departments of the city.

Under the regulations there must be an adequate number of exits for the seating capacity of the hall, and in Dundee all exit doors must be fitted with panic or crush bolts, the doors opening outward on pressure being

MAKING THE NEWSPAPER AN ALLY

The Detroit Exhibitors' League has evolved one solution of the problem of getting newspaper publicity for the motion picture theatres. The league has arranged with the "Detroit Journal," an evening newspaper, for the publication each day of the titles of films to be run that evening.

In return for the publicity, each theatre runs at every show a slide reading: "For the daily program of this theatre and for all motion picture news read the 'Detroit Journal.'" The first slide issued by the "Journal" carried a picture of a pretty girl in a Gainsborough hat holding up the front page of the Journal which bore the above lettering.

A later slide, slightly elaborated, reads, "For the daily program of this theatre, and for all photoplay news and doings of photoplayers read the 'Detroit Journal.'" As a border to this were reproductions of comic characters from "Journal" features. Fifty-two theatres are now enrolled in the "Journal's" motion picture column. This represents two-thirds of the strength of the exhibitors' league.

The newspaper has agreed to accept for publication on this basis only the programs of league members and this adds an element of strength to the league, a number of houses having taken membership to secure the newspaper publicity.

So keen was the interest of the newspaper in the project that it furnished a man and motor car to visit the league houses and explain the scheme and secure their approval.

ADVERTISING IN STREET CARS

The Standard Amusement Company operating four houses in Kansas City, has hit upon several new trade-winning features. And in consequence, standing room is often at a premium in its uptown shows.

A few years ago the company's first theatre, the Tenth Street, was opened in the downtown district. The house was beautifully decorated, a pipe organ was installed and the best films offered. But, for some reason the crowds didn't spend their money at the box-office.

Then the idea of incidental music between films was thought of. A well-known organist, whose playing had called forth favorable comment in his church, was obtained to play one selection every hour. His music was changed daily and consisted only of well-known classical music, "The Rosary," "The Lost Chord," the sextet from "Lucia," and similar pieces. When he played the house was lighted—and the operator was preparing for the next reel. There were no waits between entertainment.

The novelty of the offering and the popularity of the organist soon repaid the expense and the house was put upon a paying basis.

The company has recently decided upon a campaign of street car advertising. The program for the houses, changed daily, appear in six of the more widely used cars and are combined with a daily advertisement in one of the newspapers there. In addition an announcement is thrown upon the screen telling what cars and what paper the ads appear in.

The houses operated in Kansas City by the Standard Company are the Tenth street, 15 West Tenth street; the Twelfth street, 211 East Twelfth street; the Alamo, Thirty-fourth and Main streets in the residence district, and the Palace, 923 Main street. The latter seats 300, the Alamo, 500; the Twelfth street, 700, and the Tenth street, 500.

The officers of the company are H. B. Lappe, president; Winthrop Allen, secretary, and J. D. Brown, general manager.
Ruben Rappe, of Wells, S. D., offered Mr. Root a neat little sum for the sale of his motion picture house, Starland, and to-day Mr. Root, with a large roll of bills in his pocket, is out looking for some farm land investment. Mr. Rappe has taken active management of the house.

HEARD IN THE LOBBIES

L. B. Lamb, of Chicago, Ill., has been touring the small Minnesota towns the past week as representative for the George Kleine "Quo Vadis" pictures. He reports business very good and will shortly take the pictures en route through North Dakota.

Theodore Johnson, of Bowman, N. D., has established a motion picture circuit throughout Bowman and Billings counties under the title "The Modern Movie Show." The circuit embraces the towns of Rhome, Marmath and Bowman, but in all probability it will be enlarged to include two more towns.

Jack McCauley, of Madelia, Minn., has taken over the management of the Wonderland Theatre in that city. Clyde Emerson Parker, owner of the Grand motion picture house at Brainerd, Minn., has secured the services of Billy Vernon as manager of the theatre.

C. A. Newburg has taken charge of the management of the Walker opera house at Walker, Minn., and has turned it over exclusively to motion pictures.

The newly remodeled Empress Theatre at Brainerd was opened on April 3. Manager W. B. Schmidt has secured the services of the Jensen five-piece orchestra and they will play at every performance in the theatre.

H. C. Dunton is the manager of the new Lyric Theatre at Northfield, Minn., which opened on April 2.

C. A. Herreid and Joseph Clark have opened a new motion picture house at Deer River, Minn. The house is known as the New Lyceum and seats 350 people.

"Give your patrons what they want," is the motto followed by E. C. Dutton, manager of the Empire Theatre at Two Rivers, Wis., and judging from the large crowds that have been packing his theatre the last two weeks, the motto is a successful one.

The Burlington, Wis., opera house has been redecorated and refitted throughout and was opened April 4 as a motion picture house. H. H. Collburn is the owner and manager of the house.

William Nelson and T. H. Thompson have purchased from M. D. Whitney the Royal Theatre at Albert Lea, Minn. Mr. Nelson will manage the theatre and Mr. Thompson will take care of the business end.

Plans Complete for Thanhouser Serial

THE PRINCIPALS IN "THE MILLION DOLLAR MYSTERY"

The final details for the serial, "The Million Dollar Mystery," were completed recently in New Rochelle. A meeting was called and was attended by Harold MacGrath, who will write the serial; Lloyd F. Lonergan, author of the scenario; Charles J. Hite, and members of the Thanhouser stock company.

The meeting was held in the old Francis Wilson house, which has been purchased especially for this picture. Florence La Badie will play Florence Gray, Marguerite Snow will be seen as the Countess Olga, Lila Chester, James Cruze, Sidney Bracey and Frank Farrington will be the principals.

Operators Unite with I. A. T. S. E.

Alliance of Stage Employees and Local No. 1 of Operators Amalgamate at Washington Conference

The amalgamation of the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union with the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees is at last a fact, so far as the New York local of the operators is concerned.

The conference between representatives of the two organizations was arranged by President Samuel Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor, in Washington, D. C. There the officials of the operators and the stage employees' alliance met and a satisfactory arrangement was reached.

The concessions made by the I. A. T. S. E. representatives were sufficiently favorable to warrant the action of local No. 1 of the Operators' Union in agreeing to amalgamation with Local No. 306 of the Alliance.

A committee of three was appointed to organize the New York operators, with William Canavan, of St. Louis, third vice-president of the Alliance, as chairman.

At the conference the Alliance was represented by President Charles C. Shay, of New York; Past President John J. Barry, of Boston, Organizer Clyde Spencer, of New York and Harold Williams, of Local No. 306. The Operators' Union Local No. 1 was represented by Joe Basson, president; Dave Chauncey, business agent; Simon Terr and Ralph Knasker.

Philadelphia Raises Prices

At a recent meeting of the Philadelphia local of the M. P. E. L., it was decided to raise the price of admission to ten cents for Saturday. This is to go into immediate effect.

Many of the houses which are now charging the increased prices started by charging extra for Saturday only. It need not be said, therefore, that the members of this local will in all probability, soon be charging ten cents for every day.
"Open Convention" Is I. M. P. A. Slogan

An open convention! "No instructions!"

This is the platform on which the International Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association has taken its stand in inviting the exhibitors of the United States to attend their convention at the Grand Central Palace, New York City, to be held from June 8 to June 13.

Censorship will be the paramount subject for the consideration of the convention.

If no other question than censorship were to be taken up, that, in itself, should be an all-powerful magnet to draw every exhibitor from every state in the union to New York during the week of June 8.

But the whole censorship situation will offer a natural rallying-point to the exhibitors, every topic near to the hearts and business of exhibitors in any locality will be discussed and dealt with to the best of the convention's ability.

The International's offer of an open convention should appeal to every exhibitor whose knowledge of the failures other such gatherings have become in past years has made him doubtful of the value of any convention.

Secretary Harold W. Rosenthal, who is conducting the canvass for a record-breaking membership at the June convention, is convinced, after years of study and experience, that the open convention is what the exhibitor wants.

Thomas Saxe, the well-known theatre owner of Milwaukee, Wis., said in his article on "Co-operation," in The Motion Picture News of April 18: "There is only one form of convention that will ever make it worth while for the exhibitor to spend money and lose time to attend; and that is when he will go there with his fellows and do nothing but 'talk shop.'"

Every attempt to conduct a convention of delegates along those lines has proved a ridiculous farce. Politics have been paramount and have ruled the sessions to the exclusion of everything else.

The open convention alone offers this opportunity—the convention where every exhibitor, if he chooses, may be present on an equal footing with every other exhibitor, raise, discuss and settle issues and questions with his fellows, and help to make the convention of lasting interest and benefit to himself and all the others.

"The motion picture industry has put itself unmistakably on record against the convention where political crowds out every other subject. Before the Ohio convention early in February, The Motion Picture News protested earnestly against conventions that more resembled a mob gathering for a lynching, or a political ward rally, than an assembly of earnest and intelligent business men.

The open convention that is now being fostered by the International Motion Picture Association cannot fail to be a success, if only the exhibitors of the country will support it as it deserves to be supported.

The attack this paper made on political conventions is worth reprinting at this time, because of the importance of the question this year. The following extracts from it are reproduced here for the purpose of refreshing the memories of our readers on this subject:

Motion picture conventions, as they are now held, contain very little that is constructive or instructive. They are places in which politics, personal opinions and vulgarities are aired. The exhibitor who attends them in the hopes of gaining any valuable information as to how to better his business is all too apt to go away disappointed.

"State Senator Piero, of New York, was always wont to express himself on the subject of legislative sessions to the effect that the members devoted one-half of their time to personal aggrandizement and one-half to furthering political ends of themselves and their party and the remainder of their time to business. The same holds true at the present time for exhibitors' conventions.

"An exhibitors' convention could be made a forum for the development of new ideas. It could be made a motion picture Chautauqua.

"In not realizing these possibilities, the exhibitors are wasting much valuable time. When a state or national convention is held, exhibitors journey to it. They spend much time and often considerable money to be present and what is the result? The first day is usually devoted to general handshaking. On the second day they get into the convention hall, lock all the doors and light it out amongst themselves. The word 'it' covers a multitude of sins in this case. Then they all disband and go home. Between conventions the time is spent planning how one political faction can defeat another.

"Not only does this continual playing of politics effectually obviate any chance of constructive work, but it is in itself destructive. Consider what politics has done for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. The first time politics was played, at the Chicago convention in 1912, the league was nearly disrupted. The second time it was played, at the New York convention of last summer, the league was disrupted. Persons in both factions have been a target for mud-slinging and accusations of dishonesty, trickery and treachery. This is all on account of politics.

"This sort of procedure is a crying shame. It is not surprising that many exhibitors are dissatisfied with the present organizations as they now exist. If an exhibitor is in the motion picture business to conduct his theatre strictly along business lines and does not care about dabbling in politics of exhibitors' leagues, leagues are of no value to him.

"At no time has an exhibitors' league effectually decided any vital business question. They do not succeed in regulating the length of programs, or in standardizing the business in any way. The sessions of the league, as has been said several times before, are political affairs.

"This sort of thing cannot go on forever. Miscellaneous free-for-all nights hold no great attraction for the solid element in the motion picture industry.

"When the exhibitors realize the foolishness and pettiness of such a course and make an earnest effort toward making the exhibitors' conventions of constructive value, they will be taking a long step forward."

FILMING A CITY

Civic films of Joplin, Mo., are being taken by J. W. Cotter, manager of the Nuggets Motion Picture Company. The work is being done under the direction of the Commercial Club of that city. Four thousand feet of film will be taken.

EXHIBITORS ASK CLERGY TO VIEW PICTURE

The Colonial Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, in the presentation of "The Life of Our Saviour," invited the ministers of Cleveland to officiate at every performance, and the following availed themselves of the privilege:

"It is especially fitting that the churches co-operate with the theatre in the presentation of these pictures at this season. The members of the federation are convinced that the motion pictures, properly utilized for the exploitation of religious subjects, will result in a great good. People can be more powerfully impressed by actual scenes than the most vivid word paintings.

"This particular picture has been made in the proper spirit and the subject is treated with all due reverence."

SPECIALTY THEATRES SOON, SAYS LUBIN

Siegmund Lubin, now in Europe, in an interview at one of the London hotels gives his views as to the future of the industry. He says in part:

"The thing is capable of infinite development. I am an old man, but I am looking into the future, and I can see every school in the world with motion pictures to teach lessons that can be a thousand times better taught by the eye than by the ear. Every college and every university will use the motion picture in the students' courses.

"My idea of the future of the motion picture theatre is that before long we shall have houses devoted to different lines, just as we have in the theatrical world of to-day. Some will show comedy, some melodrama, some farce, some spectacular, though we shall always have variety houses with a mixture of them all."

Patent Notes
The two United States Patents, 1,092,905 and 1,092,906, granted to Adolph F. Gall have both been assigned to the New Jersey Patent Company, of West Orange, N. J.

The United States Patent 1,093,427 issued to Otto Bohnhoeffer is the property of the German firm "Farbenfabriken," formerly Bayer of Elberfeld.

The United States Patent 1,093,503, issued to Arthur Traube, belongs to the German well-known firm "Actien-Gesellschaft für Anilin-Fabrikation" of Berlin.

The French Patent 18,672 is an addition to Patent 447,133 issued in France to L. C. Van Riper, owner of the patents covering the machine known under the name of the Vamoscope.

The French Patent 466,778 covers a very curious invention; an apparatus constructed according to the patent in question would detect any smuggling of electric current by utilizing the earth as a current conductor.

According to a deed signed in France, on November 21, 1913, and registered at the "Office Nationale de la Propriété Industrielle" on November 24, 1913, M. Joly has sold to Gau-mont all his rights and privileges given him by the French Patent No. 383,074 of December 28, 1906 for both a Process and means for coloring cinematographic films.

The two British Patents 29,417 and 29,478 recently issued both belong to Mr. de Proscynski, who is the inventor of an automatic camera manufactured in England. He also claimed to be the inventor of the three equal area shutter, which was proved to be the invention of somebody else.

The two German Patents 256,601 and 261,161, both pertaining to motion pictures, have recently been forfeited, owing to the fact that the annual payments due to the Patent Office for patents issued in Germany have not been paid by the inventors.

The International Cinematographic Exhibition, which will take place at Budapest, Hungary, as already announced in the issue of February 28, is being organized by the Hungarian Syndicate. Important European firms have already promised to contribute to the exhibition. All communications should be addressed to Budapest, 7 Rakoczi 59 I.

Dear Sir:

I do considerable repairing on films and find it very difficult at the present time to secure a cement that will not curl the patches. I have tried a number of different kinds of cement, including Pathé, Edison, Eastman, Fulton, Bulldog, Hallberg, etc., and some of my own, but find that with ordinary finger pressure a patch made with any of these cements will lump up or curl slightly after a day or so. The patches made in the factories nearly always lay flat, and I thought that from your experience you could advise me if they use only the pressure of the fingers for a few seconds, or if they use machines, or possibly you could tell me of some cement that would secure the result. You mentioned "Furfuroil" some weeks ago for cement, but the only kind I could get here was not transparent and sold for 75 cents an ounce.

I am enclosing a self-addressed envelope and will greatly appreciate any information you can give me on this subject.

Thanking you in advance and awaiting your reply, I am,

Very truly yours,

H. B. Courtland.

Care Room No. 7
82 East Congress St.
New York, April 18, 1914.

Mr. H. B. Courtland,
82 East Congress St., Detroit, Mich.

Dear Sir:

Beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter dated April 14th.

Your patches curl because you do not use a press or film-mender such as the factories use.

Every factory has a press of its own design and make. There are also small presses for sale in every motion picture supply store in Europe. Some of these are very simple devices and can be obtained for less than one dollar apiece. The cut I enclose will give you an idea of what these instruments are like and how they are made.

The Furfuroil you obtained is a pharmaceutical product which is not as good as the commercial kind, although it costs five times as much. There is probably no demand for the product in question here, otherwise it could be produced at very reasonable prices.

Should you desire any other information, would you kindly let us know and we will try to be of service to you. Very truly yours,

M. H. Schoenbaum, Patent Editor.
Scarcely had the first gun been fired at Vera Cruz, when the Universal Film Manufacturing Company had Al Seigler and Charles Rucker, cameramen, on the way to the seat of hostilities in Mexico. Both men will take pictures for the Universal's Animated Weekly.

The Navy Department, with whom special arrangements have been made through Jack Cohn, editor of the weekly, will see every reel before it is released and a duplicate will be kept by the department for its own purposes.

Seigler left from San Diego, Cal. and will cover events on the Pacific Coast. Rucker caught the steamer "Nereus" at Hampton Roads on Wednesday, and will take care of everything on the Atlantic Coast.

Julia de Kelety, leading woman for the Primgraf Company, producers of "The Flames of Justice," has had many years experience on the operatic stage. She has played at the Gaiety Theatre, Budapest, and Crystal Palace, London. Miss de Keléty was also with Lehar as leading woman in a number of his productions.

It is said that several other companies are bidding for her services, but she will not consent to leave the Primgraf Company. Her first picture with them which, although only released several days, has been sold to five states.

To devote too much space to Tracy, the boy editor, would be almost like breaking a butterfly on the wheel, as "twere. But after his assurance that it wasn't his department of the "Morning Telegraph" that called the Radium Gold Fibre Screen a safety device, what more can we say—apologizing to Lewis Carroll—than this:

"You are young, brother Tracy," the editor said.
"And your weight is exceedingly light; Yet you write without thinking of what you have said:
Do you think at your age it is right?"

"Well, at first," replied Tracy, "I feared to be wrong,
For I thought it might injure or pain;
But I know I can now 'pass the buck' right along,
So I do it again and again."

Cameraman Harrison, of the Pathé Weekly, secured some excellent pictures of a recent large fire in St. Augustine, Florida. The hotel in which he was stopping caught fire. Harrison saving only his camera and a few personal effects.

"The Horrors of War," a Lubin five-reel picture, made by Romaine Fielding in New Mexico, has been in the course of production for some six months. Ten thousand people take part in one of the scenes, among whom are many prominent citizens who were interested in the film.

Breathless, but with speed records strewn behind him for miles, C. Lang Cobb, Jr., dashed into New York the other day and resumed his desk as publicity manager of Ramo Films. In fourteen days Mr. Cobb visited thirteen cities and covered 6,500 miles of territory. Besides which, he arranged for Ramo offices in Denver, Kansas City, Minneapolis and Des Moines. That "C" in his name must stand for celerity, or something of the sort.

Loew's Yorkville Theatre has started the new policy of running one feature with each performance as part of the regular show. The features will be changed the same time as the vaudeville and will be exclusive. "Loyalty" will be the first shown.

George Cowal, leading man for the Actna Film Company, has recently returned from a seven weeks’ sojourn in St. Augustine, Florida, where he has been engaged with a large company in the production of several features.

The reconstruction work on the Bedford Park studio of the Edison Company, which was seriously damaged by fire on March 28, is practically completed. Three of the stages have been in use for some time, and the carpenters have just completed the rebuilding of the main stage, which was most severely damaged. With work going on at Bedford Park, the Bronx, and at the old Biograph studio in Fourteenth street, the Edison Company has felt little or no inconvenience as a result of the fire.

The Eclectic Film Company have opened a branch office at 622 Prospect avenue, S. E., Cleveland, Ohio, where exhibitors may obtain bookings. H. C. Holah, the new manager, will be pleased to receive visitors.
On the 27th of April the Pathé Company will discontinue their present policy of issuing two news weeklies each week, and return to their old plan of releasing one a week—on Wednesday. About a year ago they started putting out two a week but real news has proved too scarce to warrant the continuance of this policy. They plan to have their new weekly contain the most interesting and the most important events of the time.

The first annual meeting of the Photoplay Authors' League was held in Los Angeles on April 10, and considerable business was transacted. Representative Willis, of Ohio, was endorsed in his endeavors to have the copyright law regarding photoplays changed.

There will be an exhibition of "Forgiven" or "The Jack of Diamonds" at the Goodman Theatre, Newark, N. J., by William A. McManus, of the Stellar Photoplay Company, for buyers in that territory.

The Cleveland "Leader" ran the first installment of "Lucille Love, The Girl of Mystery" Sunday, April 3, and the Victor Film Company, to give the picture a larger circulation on the first day of the story, presented the photoplay in nine different houses, allowing two hours to each house. This is the first time anything of this kind was ever attempted in Cleveland, and it proved highly successful.

Charles J. Sullivan, formerly of the editorial staff of the New York "Evening Journal," has been appointed to the scenario department of the New York Motion Picture Corporation. Mr. Sullivan's headquarters will be in Los Angeles, and his address 1712 Alessandro Street.

The Pathé baseball team started the season in Jersey City, N. J., on April 19, Pearl White, "Pauline" and Crane Wilbur her "Harry," acting as pitcher and catcher for the first ball.

The Pan-American Film Company have opened a studio in Edmonton, Canada, in charge of Arthur J. Aylesworth, to whom the paraphernalia has already been shipped. Multiple-reel subjects only will be produced.

The dinner given by a number of writers which was to be held at the Colonial Hotel, Cleveland, on April 11, has been postponed until April 25. It is expected a large number of the writing fraternity will attend.

Maude Fealy's popularity in the series of feature films she has starred in for the Thanhouser Company, is an accepted fact. She seems destined to make an even wider reputation for herself on the screen than she enjoyed on the stage.

A tremendous charge of dynamite will be used by the Universal Company shortly to blow up an Island off the Pacific Coast in a sensational picture. Rather than have the fortifications which have been built fall into the hands of aliens, the officers order them blown up. The film is under the direction of Phillips Smalley and Lois Weber.

Mitchell H. Mark and family have returned from Europe, arriving here in time to witness the opening of his new theatre, the Strand, in New York. Mr. Mark was the host of a number of up-state exhibitors at the event.

George Kleine made a flying trip to New York recently in connection with the opening of the new theatre on Forty-second street and other matters touching upon the release of some features in the near future.

Nelson Evans, manager of the Independent Feature Company, Cleveland, Ohio, is in New York completing arrangements for the handling of their films with booking offices.
The Open Convention

THE International Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association has resolved to make the convention at the Grand Central Palace, New York City, from June 8 to June 13, an open convention.

Let every exhibitor ponder well the tremendous significance of this announcement.

The open convention is the first step on the road to co-operation. And co-operation was never more imperative to the prosperity and well-being of the exhibitors of the United States than it is to-day.

Nothing but union will give the exhibitors the victory over the grafting hordes that are rallying around the standard of Censorship.

THE censorship peril is a momentous one to the manufacturers of the country.

But it is still more momentous to the exhibitors.

FOR IT IS THE EXHIBITOR WHO WILL PAY.

Not from the producer, but from the exhibitor will the grafting politician take his toll, when the final reckoning is made.

The business instinct of every exhibitor tells him this is the truth.

THE exhibitor, therefore, must in self-defense seek union and co-operation with his fellow exhibitors against the common menace.

And the floor of the open convention is the only place where the exhibitors can meet to organize themselves into an efficient army against the political conspiracy to rob them under the guise of a censorship law.

Why?

Because the open convention is the only place where the politician INSIDE the organization is powerless to sidetrack the real interests of the exhibitor to further his own selfish ends.

***

THERE are no delegates there who must, because of their instructions, obey the crack of his whip. He cannot pack the convention with delegates of his own nomination.

Every exhibitor who chooses can attend and avail himself of all the privileges of voting and discussion.

The majority rules. And it is a real majority, not "the faithful" picked to vote at a boss's bidding.

The only convention that will ever yield an ounce of benefit to the exhibitor is the open convention. The instructed-delegate convention never has accomplished, and never can accomplish, anything of real importance.

***

LET the convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America at Dayton, Ohio, in July, be an open convention, too.

Let every man go to Dayton uninstructed. Let there not be a man in that hall who is signed, scaled and delivered to anyone.

Nothing could make the League of more value to its members or give it more power to accomplish its legitimate end, the welfare of the exhibitor, than a declaration for an open, uninstructed convention.

The Dayton assembly will be a notable one in numbers and in representative character. It will be entitled to a hundred times the respect and attention if it makes itself a convention for ALL the exhibitors.

Appealing to the Voters

THE Ohio exhibitors, under the leadership of Sam Bullock, are preparing to appeal from the politicians to the people for relief from the pernicious censorship law.

While the Mutual Film Company is fighting for the salvation of the industry in the United States Supreme Court, the exhibitors of Ohio will be waging the same battle before the people.

Never was there a machine-made law more insidious than the Ohio Censorship law.

Never did a gang of politicians more brazenly invoke the principle of "public welfare" to give color to their iniquitous designs.

The politicians of Ohio created the bill and set it up as a statute.

IT is now for the people, whose name these politicians have taken in vain, to say whether they, the people, are to be the dupes of the bosses and their hirelings.

The voters of Ohio will now know just what sort of a law it is they have been induced to sponsor by their representatives.

The Motion Picture News is confident that the appeal to the people of the Commonwealth of Ohio will not be in vain.

If the exhibitors of Ohio will enlist in the fight to the last man, the appeal CANNOT fail.

UNITE! CO-OPERATE! FIGHT!
"THE BLACK TRIANGLE"
(Filma Lloyd)
REVIEWED BY LESLEY MASON

THE exchange man can offer this picture to an exhibitor and back it with a ten-to-one bet that he has never shown as good a detective film to his patrons before. And the exhibitor can take it and safely offer $100 to any of his audience who will find him a better one. Many a picture more pretentious to artistic finish than detective photodramas are generally considered to be cannot boast of the rich and varied lighting effects that make this picture a joy to watch, from that standpoint alone. In the perfect lighting of interiors and the grouping of and movement of the characters during these scenes "The Black Triangle" is the equal of anything Europe has sent us this season, and superior to most. The photography is remarkable for its clearness from the first scene to the last.

Considered as a sleuth story, with a modern, scientific detective of the Craig Kennedy or Sherlock Holmes type as its hero, neither Conan Doyle nor Arthur Reeve could multiply the resources of the redoubtable Webb or devise more difficult situations to test his scientific supremacy over a gang of unprincipled rascals, as resourceful as himself.

This is only the first of the Webb series, and the friends he makes will have ample opportunity to follow his fortunes through many thrilling reels. The detective play or story is at once one of the easiest and one of the most difficult to write with success. There is no limit to the power you can equip your hero with; but for that very reason his adventures are likely to prove uninteresting, for it is a foregone conclusion that he will come out victor.

The young German actor who is at once author, director and star in his own play, has solved the difficulty brilliantly. First of all, he keeps his arch-villain so cleverly concealed from his audience that when the unmasking comes, the spectators are as much taken aback as the baron and his future son-in-law, after the rescue of the girl from the kidnappers. His detective is no man of phenomenal strength or supernatural powers. He is simply an intelligent, normally powerful young fellow with the detective bent of mind who is equal to any emergency because he has deliberately deduced in advance every possible contingency that could arise and is prepared beforehand to meet it. This is no more than Sherlock Holmes was, and Webb is moulded by just as able a hand as the one that created the famous Baker Street sleuth for the delight of two continents.

Equally remarkable is the fact that, while "The Black Triangle" is a detective play, the delineation of crime is reduced to a minimum. Save for the kidnapping of the baron's daughter, not once are the rogues shown at their roguery. Twice a revolver is drawn by one character upon another. Nowhere is it discharged.

Practically the entire play is occupied with the illustration of the detective's methods; the criminals themselves are only shown long and often enough to remind the audience of the kind of enemies Webb is fighting. No normal, wholesome-minded censor could take exception to a single foot of this picture. As for the Funckbouse type, there is no picture perfect enough to satisfy him, but provided he does not find that so accomplished a detective is an implied slur upon the intelligence of the police, he may pass it without doing much mischief.

The picture has its inconsistencies, chief among which is the sang froid with which the detective climbs up the side wall and over the lower windows of the front room of the house the kidnappers are occupying without being discovered. But it is good, exhilarating entertainment, notwithstanding. The rest of the series will be awaited with eagerness.

"THE HOSTAGE"
(Dania Blofil)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSO MICHELL

A MELODRAMATIC story, told in four parts with excellent photography throughout. The Dania Blofil Company have associated themselves with a number of artists whose work is of undoubted excellence. There is some slight room for improvement in the actual story, but none in either the photography or acting.

The settings, especially the exteriors, are most appropriate and serve their purpose perfectly. The rocky cliffs which serve to hide the bandits from their pursuers, and the water scenes all supply an undeniable atmosphere which goes splendidly with the subject.

The main plot deals with the theme of "love versus duty" in which, as usual, duty conquers. A policeman is beset with the threat that he must either free a captive or lose his child. He decides to keep the prisoner and run the risk of losing his daughter, for whom he cares most in the world.

A cripple, who is a member of the gang, saves the child's life in compassion for her weakness, and hides her away. The father believes the child to be dead, but finally finds out the truth and frees the cripple and his protegé, then leads his comrades against the rogues, beating them after a hard battle.

This is the first release of this company and a promising one.

WINNIPEG HOUSE CHANGES HANDS

The El Dorado, of Winnipeg, Manitoba, the house of many vicissitudes, has again changed hands. It will now be known as the Globe and will be a picture house.

The failure of this house to succeed is one that arouses a great deal of surmise, for it is well located and is a neat enough house.
What Your Paper Says About

The Perils of Pauline

The Perils of Pauline is marked by the unusual in plot, by the reality of settings and scenes and fineness in photography.
—MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

But—and the word is emphasized—as we leave the theatre we plight our solemn promise to the only girl that in two weeks' time we will be occupants of seats in that theatre to see the next episode, even if we have to pay for our seats.
—MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

The Motion Picture Serial has come to stay. The serial story that doesn't get over had better not have been made. By the same token the serial short story that does get over with a real punch is going to be a great moneymaker. The Perils of Pauline is on this account an ideal offering for the exhibitor.
—MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

With the cast no question need be raised as to whether the interpretation of the characters was well done—it was more than well done. The story contains a number of unusual features so intensely interesting that people will come to see the ensuing episodes with their tastes whetted by previous episodes.
—DRAMATIC MIRROR.

In this instalment of the Pauline pictures the connections are well made, the photography is immense and the plot hangs so well that at the New York theatres the pictures have made a big hit.
—VARIETY.

The Perils of Pauline quite fulfills the expectation which was aroused—the situations throughout are tense with suspense. Seldom, if ever, has a more spectacular incident been thrown upon the screen than that depicting the fall of the great Biplane. The staging of this scene is so perfect that it is impossible to believe the accident was not real.

THE DOUBLE CROSS
(Edison)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

This is the third of the "Man Who Disappeared" series, featuring Marc MacDermott. The acting of Mr. MacDermott is highly commendable in this number, even as in the two that have gone before.

Mr. MacDermott has been an actor all his life, until just lately performing on the legitimate stage. He has toured England and America with well-known companies, always meeting with great success. He well upholds his reputation in this series of pictures, and needless to say, acts his part perfectly.

This, the third of the series, is even more thrilling than its two predecessors, which is saying a good deal. The opening scene of "The Double Cross" portrays an opium den with startling realism. The ravings of the fiends make one shudder; the reel closes with a pistol fight waged on the fire escapes of a tenement house.

The story: Perriton, still in hiding from the police, takes refuge in an opium den. Here he is put to work to earn his living. Two gangsters have inveigled a prosperous farmer and his bank account to the city, whom they intend marrying to a girl, one of their gang, and then taking his money.

Perriton poses as the brother of the girl, who really falls in love with the farmer. Perriton is instrumental in their escape, thus foiling the gangmen. We see Perriton and the two happy lovers safely installed in a taxi and here we leave them.

This series of pictures, being released by the Edison Company, is well worth booking. They will assure the exhibitor continued patronage. One reel is released every two weeks. This number appears May 5.

THE STRIKE
(Thanhouser)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

In this two-reel production of the Mutual Company the misery and hardship resulting from industrial strife is realistically brought upon the screen, interwoven with a sad love story. In conveying the idea that industrial strife is a thing to be avoided, the idea is given that unions are undesirable. The piece, perhaps unintentionally, casts a dark shadow on labor organizations. To an extent this is undoubtedly true, but the case is hardly so black as the picture would lead one to believe.

The story revolves about Black, an unscrupulous labor leader. He incites a strike in a town where everything was peaceful and quiet before.

The misery resulting from the strike is vividly depicted. The mob scenes in this production are worthy of special mention. The actors who assume the part of the maddened people conduct themselves with masterful ability.

A LUCKY DECEPTION
(Nestor)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

The plot of this comedy is new and exceedingly humorous. One might say "a laugh in every foot" without exaggeration. The action is rapid through the entire two reels, and there are no bad places in the film or bad photography to spoil the perfect performance.

A young man is to have five thousand from his father if he marries within a month. He dresses his chum up as a girl and marries him, much against his poor chum's will. Later the young man's sister and her chum come to spend a few days with the "Newlyweds" and naturally laughable results follow. Finally the young men pair off with the girls, and a double wedding ensues.
"HIS HIGHNESS, THE PRINCE"
(Great Northern)
REVIEWED BY LESLEY MASON

THE Great Northern Film Company is to be congratulated on its sagacity in putting out a series of comedies of this type. There has been a superabundance of strong, heady dramas and melodramas, rivaling each other in the amount of excitement and sensation they assayed to the foot. The screen is overstocked with them. The exhibitor who wanted to lighten up a highly seasoned, dramatic bill of fare, has hitherto had no alternative but to put on a comedy filled with tan-bark and sawdust antics, or a scene.

Such a series as the Carl Alstrup comedies of the Great Northern promise to be ("His Highness, The Prince" is the first of them) ought to serve the double purpose of giving the exhibitor "comedy features" and a new significance to the name of "Great Northern."

"His Highness, The Prince" is a three-part comedy cast on feature lines. To those familiar with the powerful dramas of this company, in which Betty Nansen is featured, it may be said that this merry cross-section of high official life in a continental kingdom is as meritorious in its way as the Nansen dramas are in theirs, though diametrically opposite in tone.

A journalist, who conceals a striking resemblance to the Prince beneath a heavy moustache, goes off on a week-end vacation to the town of Waldeck, with a bosom friend, and shaves his moustache before leaving the city.

A town councillor on the train mistakes him for the prince, wires ahead to the mayor, and when Herbert Prince, the journalist arrives in Waldeck, he finds himself welcomed as "His Highness, The Prince." He is feted at the hotel, and by the time the news gets into the newspapers and to the real prince, his double is head over heels in love with the mayor's daughter.

His highness starts for the scene as soon as he realizes what is going on, but by the time he reaches Waldeck, the humor of the affair has appealed to him, and the only penalty he inflicts upon the merry journalist is the condition that he shall never shave his moustache again.

Carl Alstrup, as Herbert Prince, is a delightful "kid-gloved" comedian and an impromptu prince who might easily deceive any set of obstreperous "city fathers" as to the amount of blue blood in his veins. The simplicity of the plot throws the burden of the picture's success upon Alstrup and his company, and of their ability to bear it there is not the least question.

The photography is of the usual Great Northern excellence. Comedies like this one should be encouraged; they are familiar enough on the stage. There is no reason why the exhibitor should doubt their popularity on the screen.

"KADRA SAFÆ"
(William)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSKE MICHÈLL

ALTHOUGH the subject of this five-reel feature has been used before, it may be said to be almost entirely original in plot. The plot has been utilized in several different ways, but the one point which stands uppermost in the minds of those that see it is its difference to other productions.

The story, founded on historical facts, is a recital of the events which took place in 1860, and shows the massacre of the Christians by the Mohammedans. A love story from beginning to end it makes one of the finest pictures of the year. There are several improvements which might have been made which would have perfected the film, but, as it stands, it is one worthy of any theatre.

Greta Wiesenthal, the German actress, plays the part of Kadra Safa, an inmate of the harem, and with grace and figure brings to her part a beauty that is essential in rôles of this kind.

Nearly all the exteriors are taken on the desert and this adds an undeniable realism to the picture. In several scenes it is possible to look for many miles across the sands. Some of the lighting effects are excellent. The massacre scene might have been lengthened slightly.

Kadra Safa is the favorite wife of the desert sheik. Dr.

KADRA SAFÆ DANCES FOR HER HUSBAND

Warden, an American tourist, is instrumental in saving her from the hands of some bandits, and they fall instantly in love with one another. At her request he is invited to the palace as the guest of their husband, and while there, learns that she entertains for him the same passion that stirs his heart.

Kadra Safa, hearing that there is to be a general massacre of the Christians, warns her lover and with him seeks shelter in the old Roman ruins. They are safe there for a time, but her husband, finding out their hiding-place, plans a terrible death for them.

The ruins were formerly used as a reservoir and into this the infuriated sheik turns the water. The lovers fight against the sure death in vain and finally perish in each other's arms.

NEW FILM COMPANY ORGANIZES

A number of prominent motion picture men have organized a company to produce four and five reel features under the name of the Atlantic Coast Film Manufacturing Company. The Coast Guard, thrilling rescues by life-saving crews, stories of seaside resorts, smugglers' adventures and other episodes of the Eastern Coast line of the United States from a historical and romantic standpoint will be filmed.

The Atlantic Coast Film Manufacturing Company has executed contracts with the Pan-American Distributing Company for the marketing of their entire output.
CONTRACT FOR "ANIMATED SONGS"

The Imperial Motion Picture Company, manufacturers of animated songs, have closed contracts with Jones, Linick and Schaeffer, of Chicago, for twenty-five weeks. Contracts have also been made with the Saxe Amusement Enterprises for Milwaukee and Minneapolis and W. O. Keefe for Detroit and Cleveland.

These call for a different song each week. Among the first releases are "In the Heart of the City that Has No Heart," "Home, Sweet Home" and "Silver Threads Among the Gold."

FAMOUS PLAYERS GET STAR

The Famous Players Film Company have contracted with Bruce McRae to appear in their screen version of Cyrus Townsend Brady's novel, "The Ring and the Man." The drama is one of politics, depicting the struggle of an honest and upright man against the ring.

This will be Mr. McRae's first appearance in motion pictures.

Among Bruce McRae's recent stage triumphs are numbered "The Lily," "Nobody's Widow," and "Nearly Married." Through an odd coincidence, as in the case of James K. Hackett and Cecilia Loftus, previous Famous Players stars, Mr. McRae began his stage career with Daniel Frohman.

Warner Exchange Men Discuss Plans

H. M. WARNER, sales manager of Warner's Features, Inc., has just returned from Chicago where he met six of his branch managers from the Middle West and went over with them various plans for increasing the demand for Warner's Features.

This is the second district convention of Warner heads within a month and, like the previous one held in Pittsburgh, it is already bearing fruit.

"Welcome" Dinner to Nicholas Power

THE biggest surprise Nicholas Power, head of the well-known projection machine firm, has had since he left this country on his European tour three months ago, was the "Welcome" dinner tendered to him at Louis Mouquin's, Sixth avenue and Twenty-eighth street, New York City, Saturday evening, April 18.

Nearly one hundred guests were on hand around the tables to greet the guest of honor when he entered the dining-room. The banquet was followed by an excellent vaudeville entertainment, and a display of motion pictures.

The films shown at the dinner were "Twenty Minutes of Love" (Keystone), "Wild Animals at Large" (Vitagraph), a comedy by William Steiner, and the Animated Weekly pictures of Mr. Power's arrival, taken by and under the personal supervision of Mr. Barry, Power's advertising manager.

At the table with Mr. Power were Edward Earl, John F. Skerrett, A. J. Lang, Will C. Smith, L. W. Atwater and S. S. Cassard.

"A Kingdom at Stake." (George Kleine.)—This is a very clever child picture that has a lot of imagination in it and centers about a supposed small principality of Europe. The central characters are supposed to be of the royalty, headed by a little girl queen, eight years of age.

Prince Vladimir of Vandalia is greatly disquieted by the attitude of the Revolutionist party. Yan Kador, a university professor, is one of their leaders. He unknowingly saves the little queen from a fall, becomes her tutor, and is saved by her from death when he and his fellow conspirators are surprised in a plot to overthrow the monarchy.

"Mabel at the Wheel." (Keystone. Two reels. April 18.)—This is an excellent burlesque on the 1914 Grand Prix automobile race. It is a laugh from start to finish. The last reel, taken up with the race, is well produced; some of its scenes make the spectator fairly gasp for breath; notwithstanding the fact that it is a burlesque all the way through.

The outline of the story: The villain after many attempts succeeds in capturing the hero, who is to run in the race, and tying him up so that he can't start.

Mabel, the fond sweetheart of the hero, rises to the occasion and runs the car herself. The villain tries in many ways to wreck her and the car. Throwing bombs on the track and wetting it are two of his fiendish plots. But his efforts are of no avail and the girl wins the race amid great rejoicing.

"The Unopened Letter." (Edison. Two reels. April 24.)—The pathetic story of love unrequited. The plot rings true and is carefully carried to a finish. Edward Earl, an Edison "extra," plays the leading part and is assisted creditably by Bessie Learm.

Having married secretly, Paul leaves his wife and goes out to make a success of his life. After six months she dies from his apparent neglect. Her sister adopts her daughter. Twenty years later the father is employed by a company to defend it against the suit of a girl. He recognizes his daughter, loses his case and they are reconciled.

"Notoriety." (Imp. April 13.)—The opening scene of this unique and entertaining farce is laid in the offices of the Universal Company in New York. King Baggot is seen presenting a scenario for approval. As it is being read it is seen on the screen. King takes the leading part. The piece is written as a drama, but the way it is acted is comical. At the end the manuscript is handed back to King with the words, "No, King, it won't do." Its plot is the story of an old actor out of a job who has many trying experiences in his efforts to get one; he finally decides to confess of having killed a man in order to gain notoriety. He gains his notoriety, but to end it he is electrocuted instead of becoming a shining star.

"Mad Love." (Pathé. Two reels. April 16.)—A live drama from beginning to end, containing a number of thrilling scenes and holding the attention of the observer throughout. The sub-titles and letters that appear in them differ in respect to names, but this is not a noteworthy fault. The last scene ends in an electrifying automobile crash as both cars plunge over a high precipice. The photography is clear and some of the light affects are very beautiful.

Miller, incensed because the girl who claims his attentions does not return them, tries in many ways to do away with his more successful rival. First he tries to drown him. unsuccessful in this attempt, he lets the gas out of a balloon in which the bridal party are enjoying themselves, but none are seriously injured. His next attempt is to shoot the happily wedded pair, and after this he is sent to an insane asylum. When released, he learns the address of the couple and goes after them in an automobile. He is pursued by Tom, an old friend of both parties. Miller's car goes over a high embankment carrying him with it. Tom saves his own life but his car goes over on top of the other.

"The Rightful Heir." (Kay-Bee. Two reels. April 24.)—The scenes of this drama, laid in England during the last few years of the eighteenth century, are exceptionally well portrayed.

The plot is a good one, though rather old, and develops into a thrilling climax, which shows Phelim, the black sheep of the house of Ballyskellen, and all his wicked associates, meeting their death by being blown up in a cellar, where they had taken refuge from the British soldiers. Sometime before this Phelim had stolen the lordship of his father's estate from his nephew, but the latter is reinstated in the finale amid great rejoicing.

SCENE FROM "THE UNOPENED LETTER"
"The Dungeon of Steel." (Films Lloyds. Three reels.)—A sensational drama dealing with the pride of an ancient house, for the sake of which the disgrace of one of its members was kept secret for a long time, but finally becomes known to the world. The drama is full of thrilling scenes, some of which are so excessively thrilling as to appear gruesome and almost horrible. The photography leaves nothing to be desired, as is the case in most foreign films; the light effects are good and some of the tones are beautiful to behold.

One of the Duke of Tyndale's twin sons is kidnapped and grows up to be a crook. The Duke learns his whereabouts, brings him to his castle, and confines him in a solitary dungeon, not letting him know who he is nor letting anyone else know that he is there. After the Duke's death he escapes and meets a tragic ending by falling in front of a train. The other son finds out to his sorrow that his brother had disgraced the family.

"The Claws of Greed." (Ramo Three reels.)—Released through the Box-Office Film Attractions Company for New Jersey, New York and New England. The picture is sensational and melodramatic in character, and leaves room for improvement in several scenes. Taken as a whole, however, it is an excellent release.

Julien Delmore, a wealthy young man, meets and marries Lucetta, a music-hall dancer. Bringing her home she manages to meet her confederate, Carlos, the leader of the Black Nine Gang. Leila, a child, adopted by Julien, warns him of her duplicity, and he orders her from the house.

Leila, now a woman, is captured by the Black Nine and held for ransom. Julien, in attempting her rescue, is also imprisoned. One of the gang, turned traitor, brings the police. The house is wrecked in a sensational manner and Julien and his ward, now lovers through the death of Lucetta, are brought together.

"The Man Who Came Back." (Warner's Features. Three reels.)—A live drama, replete with live action and live scenes. A beautiful scene of midnight at midnight is produced, high waves break over the spot where an ill-fated ocean liner went to her grave. Doubtless the loss of an ocean liner with all on board would command more attention in the daily papers than two or three lines with a small lead, but this fault may easily be remedied. The spectator is given a variety of scenes, Paris and supposedly South Africa and the different sides of life in each are cast on the screen. An unusual scene is the rush for gold in South Africa.

Robert is driven to commit suicide by his creditors, caused by the hacking down of his main support, Marvin. His son goes to Africa to retrieve his father's fortune. He is reported lost. Twenty years later his daughter comes to Africa for her health. The two are re-united. Young Roberts, rich, returns to Paris with intent to kill Marvin. But he finds that Marvin's son and his daughter are engaged, so he relents.

"The Nation's Peril." (Bison 101. Two reels. May 2.)—A story of the diplomatic service ably told by William Clifford and Marie Wolcamp, with Sherman Bainbridge playing the heavy. There are a large number of thrilling scenes in the last five hundred feet which will make the picture one to be remembered.

An automobile apparently containing four passengers plunges down the side of a bill and is wrecked; a girl leaps from a fast moving car into the water. Much of the picture is taken on shipboard.

Plans of Honolulu are wanted by a foreign government, and Clifford is detailed to watch the spies. They go to the place where they arrest them. The escape and wreck of the car follow. Needless to say, the story is romantic.

"A Drama of the Desert." (Eclair. Two reels. April 22.)—A powerful drama, the scene of which is probably laid in Egypt. The story is essentially a love tale and contains a great deal of action. The atmosphere is exceptionally good. A number of native dances and a wedding are introduced during the film.

Fatma, a native girl, is defended against her suitor by an army officer. She is told by her parents that she must marry Mohammed, her assailant, and prepares herself in obedience to their wishes. The police are informed that Mohammed is the thief who has held up the stage coach, and they prepare to arrest him. In the middle of the nuptials he is detained, but escapes, although shot, but is dragged to death by a horse. Needless to say Fatma and her lieutenant are happily wedded.

"The Tragedy of Whispering Creek." (Bison 101. Two reels. May 2.)—A splendid film. The story is powerful and well acted by Murdoch McQuarrie, Pauline Bush, Lon Chaney and George Cooper. The feature is the work of Lon Chaney, who plays the "heavy." His make-up is one of the best yet seen. A number of novelties in photography are introduced.

The story is of a Mexican, whose face is of such a repulsive nature as to drive people from him. Rivalry in love between a stranger and a native of the hills for the hand of "the girl" arises, and the stranger gives up his life for them in a sensational manner.

ADLER JOINS NEW ERA

Phil Adler, formerly manager of the World Film Company, in Cleveland, is now connected with the New Era Feature Company in a similar capacity, in that city.
“Melody and Art.” (Biograph. April 14.)—A beautiful opening, but ending with the deepest drama. A musician saves a young artist, but the latter rescues her from a fire, and in so doing injures his hands for life. He is rewarded by the girl's love.

“The Kiss.” (Vitagraph. April 16.)—The story of a young shop girl who longs for good clothes. When she has them she finds that she is not happy, and discards them for the love and friendship of her former friends.

Pathé's Weekly No. 31. (April 16.)—There is a lack of important news in this number. Bud Fisher's cartoons are better than the news session.

“The Flirt's Repentance.” (Selig. April 16.)—A fine drama of the period before the Civil War. A flirtatious wife gets herself into a serious position, and seizes the emnity of her husband. All ends well.

“In High Life.” (Edison. April 27.)—The story of the life of Wood B. World's sentimental experiences. It's a laugh from start to finish. Wood B., in financial straits, discovers the secret of the bank and proceeds to seek the hand of Amanda Maggs, an heiress. The experiences of Wood B. and his friend in her house are very comical. They finally are forced to pretend to be the bank's attorneys.

“The Mystery of the Silver Snare.” (Edison. April 28.)—The sixth mystery in the series of Clouse's Crockham. Clouse is the hero to the Maharajah's throne. A plot is formed to murder him, which he very cleverly detects, and turns the trick on the conspirators.

“A Fugitive from Justice.” (Edison. April 29.)—An excellent drama, well staged Croghan, a government defaulter, is pursued by a secret service agent who assumes the guise of a school teacher. She is on the point of marrying him arrested, much against her own will, for she loves him, when news is brought that his brother has died and confessed of the theft.

“Her Grandmother's Wedding Dress.” (Edison. May 8.)—June goes to a party in her grandmother's wedding dress, where one young man laughs at her. Jim, her escort, rescues this and strikes the man. He thinks he has injured Jim, and flees. His glance shatters his memory and he is taught to steal by his present job. He steals the dress and returns it to her house, but he meets her there and the sight of his memory in her face.

“The Rums of Angkor, India.” (Pathé. Selig. reel. April 14.)—On the same reel with “The Pictureque Coast of Catalonia.” A beautiful scene showing some of India's old temples and gods.

“Pierre of the North.” (Essanay. April 14.)—The story of Pierre, a trapper in the north. Pierre is a trapper who shoots Bennett, another trapper. Later, Pierre saves Bennett's wife from death and the two are reconciled through her.

“The Chicken Inspector.” (Vitagraph. April 15.)—Cutey has a pile of fun with a chicken inspector. Her husband is later, he gets into an awful lot of trouble.

“A Romance of the Forest Reserve.” (Pathé. April 15.)—The story of a young woman coming some beautiful scenes. A ranger runs down some dishonest poachers after some desperate fight and aided by the woman adopted daughter, whom he marries in the finish.

“Business and Love.” (Lubin. Selig reel. April 14.)—On the same reel with “The Peacemaker's Pay.” A foolish and laughable comedy in which the pay-off is paid by a Jewish salesman, who wins their check.

“Wilfie's Affinity.” (Pathé. Selig reel. April 15.)—On the same reel with “Flowers that Bloom in the Spring.” Wilfie gets into a lot of trouble with his wife after spending the evening with a chorus girl.

“And He Came Back.” (Edison. April 15.)—Horatio Algeron Butt attempts to chastise the husband of a browbeaten wife. He meets with success at first, but the husband gets even with him later.

“The Peacemaker's Pay.” (Lubin. Selig reel. April 14.)—On the same reel with “Business and Love.” A fair comedy in which the pay-off is paid by a Jewish salesman, who wins their check.

“Re-Ne-Wow.” (Vitagraph. April 14.)—It is seldom that a picture gets a hearty round of applause after the last scene goes off the screen. But this is one of these few exceptions. A well-planned new plot has a new plot, but without the acting of Anna Stewart and James Morrison, who play the leads, the play would not be as charming. The story is that of an adopted son, who, unknowingly, falls in love with his real mother. She is ignorant of the parentage of the boy, accepts him at first, but is later, from marrying him by the boy's foster mother. Later she sees to the orphan asylum where she left her boy years ago and asks to be allowed to see him and his foster mother. Her request is granted and she is taken to the home of James, her own son. The sight affects her so that she runs back to her foster's arms. He, however, never learned the truth.

“A Chance in Life.” (Lubin. April 17.)—An appealing drama in which an ex-con vict proves that he can make good.

“Innocent but Awkward.” (Vitagraph. April 17.)—Professor Wallace comes with his animals to visit his friend, the Kent nedy. He gets into a startling predicament with Mrs. Kennedy, but finally clears himself of any blame.

“Red Head and Ma's Suitors.” (Selig. Selig reel. April 17.)—On the same reel with “Red Yank Over the Fence and Out.” A short animated cartoon. Simple to produce a laugh.

“Red Yank Over the Fence and Out.” (Selig. Selig reel. April 17.)—On the same reel with “Red Head and Ma's Suitors.” A short animated cartoon. Simple to produce a laugh.

“High Life Hits Slippy Slim.” (Essanay. April 16.)—Slippy Slim and his associates perform some of their other comic stunts when they get hold of some carbon-dustproof.

“The Vanity Case.” (Vitagraph. Two reels. April 15.)—A very clever drama, that is rather inconsistent and improbable, but well acted. Fred sees Grace, a society girl, unintentionally take a vanity case from a jeweler's counter. Later he takes advantage of this and, threaten ing to tell of it, induces her to steal for him. But Jack straightens things out. Fred relents and is sent to prison for life.

“A Secret Crime.” (Kalem. May 2.)—The pretty story of a wealthy woman who is a kleptomane, cured by her little child's words, “Thou Shalt Not Steal.”

“The Secret Vault.” (Klein-Cines. Two reels. April 14.)—An ordinary drama not deserving of mention. Good when Martin is hunted over a cliff by Duval's shoot ers. Most of the action is clinging. Martin, however, recovers and later regains some valuable papers which were locked in a secret vault. With this they are able to convict a notorious gang, among them Duval.

“A Father's Heart.” (Lubin. Two reels. April 15.)—An excellent drama, the first part being set in Holland and the shifting to America. Christian comes to America with his wife and baby girl. She finds work and his wife deserts him. Years later Christian is reunited with his daughter in a pathetic scene.

“Dippy's Dream.” (Kalem. Selig reel. May 1.)—On the same reel with “Stung.” The police force find it hard to capture a lunatic, when he amuses himself by throwing dynamite at them.

“Stung.” (Kalem. Selig reel. May 1.)—On the same reel with “Dippy's Dream.” An average comedy in which the “Rube" police play an important part.

“The Stolen Rembrandt.” (Kalem. Two reels. April 29.)—The interior settings of this film are splendidly beautiful and very elaborately. The action is rather slow, and the character of the movie is a bit flat. It takes place almost entirely in two rooms. A noted painter steals a painting from her father's house and throws suspicious on a young artist, who is arrested for the theft. The night is the end and the artist is happily restored to Rose.

“The Dance of Death.” (Kalem. Two reels. April 29.)—The story of Alice Joyce, Tom Moore and Madame Vera Merveille. The latter is a well-known dancer, and in this piece performs the Dance of Death with great skill.

Richard, while in the Hawaiian Islands, bridesback, a native dancer. Returning home he is engaged to marry Rose, but to be for their wedding they go to the theatre and there see Salka on the stage. She is overcome when she sees Richard, and at the end of her dance kills herself. Richard realizes the enormity of his offense, and he and Mabel adopt Salka's little child.

“Bronco Billy and the Rattler.” (Essanay. April 18.)—Stockdale again tries to play Billie false, but does not succeed. One of the best of the Bronco Billy series.

“Guaranteed Rainproof.” (Lubin. Selig reel. April 18.)—On the same reel with “A Strenuous Rifle.” A comic chase when a news dealer finds that his suit shrunk in the rain.

“A Strenuous Ride.” (Lubin. Selig reel. April 18.)—On the same reel with “Guaranteed Rainproof.” A comical animated cartoon in which the gentleman who is doing his best to get away from a huge bulldog.

“Mixed Mails.” (Biograph. Selig reel. April 18.)—On the same reel with “Ambitious Pa.” A crossed telephone wires and mixed mails cause a lot of trouble to two men and their wives, without giving the spectator many laughs.

“Ambitious Pa.” (Biograph. Selig reel. April 18.)—On the same reel with “Mixed Mails.” Pa wants daughter to marry a theatrical manager, but her choice differs and she has her way in the end.

“Strength of Family Ties.” (Lubin. Two reels. April 16.)—The plot of this drama is hold, but nevertheless the story is extremely interesting. Bennett arranges his wife; she leaves him with her baby girl and soon after she is locked. Years later, Nedra, Bennett's adopted son, tries her best to wreck the life of Bennett's adopted son. Her father prevails upon her and she is forced to do so. All ends well.

“Wilfie's Hunt's the Swag.” (Pathé. Selig reel. April 21.)—On the same reel with “The Duke's Tombstone Ad.” Wiffie tries to rob a house. At first he succe eds in getting inside, but Wiffie is caught by the officers and taken to the station house. More comical than his other experiences.
"Sonny Jim at the North Pole." (Vitagraph. April 29.)—A pretty comedy-drama. Sonny Jim is out to find the North Pole. Instead they unintentionally prevent a train wreck and save Dobby Jim's life.

Pathé’s Weekly No. 32. (Pathé. April 30.)—Another well directed comedy, which it is departing for Tampico. Firing ten and twelve guns at once is amusing. Besides these there are a good many minor happenings.

"The Scar." (Biograph. April 30.)—Rather an involved drama. The wife of a politician mistakes a woman reporter for a former love of her husband's. She leaves him, but their son is the means of reconciliation after many years.

"Bobby as a Guardian Angel." (Melies. Split Reel. April 30.)—On the same reel with "Handsome Harry Minds the Shop." A comedy, comically in which Bobby prevents his father from going out to dinner, to the delight of his mother.

"Handsome Harry Minds the Shop." (Melies. Split Reel. April 30.)—On the same reel with "Bobby as a Guardian Angel." Harry leaves home to care for Super-Burke after having never to laugh at other people's misfortunes.

"The Spellbound Multitude." (Selig. Two reels.)—The ninth of the events of Kathryn, Kathryn endeavors to free her fiancé from the spell which has been cast upon him by the queen. She first enters the palace as a doctor; but is caught; they plan to kill her, but she escapes. Next she goes into the town of a number of lions, saying that her sister must be with her. She again escapes.

"The Rube’s Duck." (Lubin. Split reel. April 3.)—On the same reel with "Outwitting Dad." The rube carries his duck around in a bag. The duck mistakes it for an inferior machine and causes a lot of trouble.

"Outwitting Dad." (Lubin. Split reel. April 3.)—A rube is visiting a city. He is outwitted long enough to bring his daughter off and get married, but then he wakes up and causes all who meet him to tremble.

"The Straw Hat Industry in Fiesole (Italy)." (Pathé. Split reel. April 21.)—On the same reel with "Willies Hunts the Swag." An interesting Educational.

"The Second Wife." (Selig. April 21.)—A tough little girl is the means of reconciliation between her father and her stepfather.

"Her False Friend." (Kleine-Gines. Two reels, April 21.)—The setting of this drama is elaborate and beautiful; the plot is old, but is made out of the story of the stowaway. Laura, enquired that Harry married Edith, twice her age, and a very sad stowaway. However, she goes into the town of a number of lions, saying that her sister must be with her. She again escapes.

"The Spirit and the Clay." (Vitagraph. Three reels. April 2.)—Harwin Kerr plays the lead in this drama, and his action is exceptionally good. He has a difficult part and he does it with graceful ease. Marie, the wife of a rising young sculptor, is greatly over-worked. One day, after coming to her, she has proved too much for her and she dies. Paul becomes crazed at her death, but works on the marble. When he is completed he imagines it is his wife come back to life. Seeing his crazed condition, try to take the statue from him, but he will not let them touch it. He is shut up and sent away. He begins to work and leaves away from her, crashes through a window and is killed.

"The Spirit of the Madonna." (Essanay. April 21.)—A melodrama telling a great lesson. Through looking at the picture of the Madonna, Thompson, a factory owner, is moved with one of his employees, who was injured in his factory.

"The Old Maid’s Triumph." (Powers. Split Reel, April 27.)—On the same reel with "The Northwest Mounted Police," an educational film. This comedy tells how some old maid, wishing to prevent the men of the town attending a burlesque, stands in front of the theater, and take names as they enter. The result is amusing.

"The Northwest Mounted Police." (Powers. Split Reel. April 27.)—On the same reel with "The Old Maid’s Triumph," showing the drills and life of these frontier police.

"Her Husband." (Nestor. May 1.)—A comedy containing some beautiful scenes. A young clerk marries the wife of a dead husband of a woman much older than himself. At the seaside the real husband puts in his appearance, with disastrous results.

"The Runaway." (Frontier. May 2.)—A fine Western. Arthur, not liking his new wife, runs away, and he becomes a rustler. Many years later in making a raid on a large ranch he is captured by the owner, who, he finds, is his father. He is returned to him through the efforts of his mother.

"An Episode." (Rev. May 2.)—A drama that is out of the way that they don’t make any more. "Live happily ever afterward." Juan, a rich cafeteria, is hurry, an adventure, is in love with Juan. Through Jeffery’s scheming, Edith, he believe that Carita is untrue. He breaks his engagement with her.

"Almost a Hero." (Universal. May 2.)—Here we have a comedy in which a boy tries to hold up the town populace and the sheriff by deceiving through his size. He meets his just deserts in the end, however.

"Temper Versus Temper." (Imp. April 27.)—An unusual and laughable comedy. A young and unhappy wife with an awful temper acts like a lamb when her husband adopts the same tactics to cure her.

"Through the Eyes of the Blind." (Imp. Two reels. April 36.)—A well-dramed film is brought to bay through the evidence of a blind man who, being confused, entered a strange house and was present at the murder. Sub-plots add greatly to the story.

"Universal Ink and the School Belle." (Universal. Imp. April 28.)—An unusual film. He and his associates are very funny. A new school teacher finds it hard to discipline a bunch of rollicking cowboys, who are afraid of the sight of a woman.

"A Diamond in the Rough." (Majestic. Two reels. April 28.)—A fine Western, featuring Miriam Cooper. Grace turns down her bid, is Western loving her, he whom later tries to rob her father’s house. Jim arrives at the scene and captures the Westerner. Grace returns to Jim.

"Collecting the Rent." (Royal. April 18.)—An old maid is averse to paying her rent. Numerous collectors are sent after the money but return much battered up. A young gentleman with a handle chases his sleeve finally gets it in a most amusing manner.

"The Unredeemed Pledge." (Majestic. April 21.)—Davis, besides his family and goes West for gold. Later they come to look for them and through a trap he is imprisoned by a cave-in. All ends well. The title is hardly visible.

"A Common Mistake." (D’arino. Two reels. April 23.)—An inoffensive and clean drama. Marie, thinking she can paint, leaves her home for a success at painting, but wins a husband. Her father finds her pleased with her choice, and all return home.

"The Old Man." (Reliance. April 17.)—A touching drama. Of an old man, the star boards, helps the people, and house our trouble. All the boarders plan to thank him for his kindness of overcoming joy and peacefully passes away.

"Up and Down." (Apollo. April 12.)—Another side-splitter with Fred MacMurray. Fred gets into a bad of trouble with Glittering Back and her associate.

"Her Awakening." (Princess. April 17.)—A pretty stenographer is invited out by her employer. She goes against her father’s will a number of times. Later she has a disquieting dream and promises her father never to go to movies.

Our Mutual Girl No. 14. (Reliance, April 20.)—Margaret spends all her time this week with boy.

"When Aye Taro Up." (Thanhouser. April 24.)—Lord Aye wants to marry an American girl. But the cold country weather does not agree well with Aye, and he stays freezing for several days. Rather an anti-comedy.

"The Smouldering Spark." (American. April 29.)—A pleasing drama, in which a derelict is given a chance to make good. He is not only a successful instrumental in returning his benefactor’s son.

"The Strategy of Conductor 786." (Thanhouser. April 26.)—Number 786 ejects father from his car and fixes up a happy marriage. A novel situation and a pretty comedy.

"In the Hour of Temptation." (Great Northern. Three reels.)—A fine drama featuring Betty Nansen. The photography is exceptionally good. Mrs. Nansen, who has just been legally divorced, is spending a few days at a summer resort. A young man offers to marry her. She goes to the pawn shop to replenish her purse. Later, he returns to the resort and offers to marry her by continually moving on her and threatening to tell of her frequent visits to the loan shark. She oust him, however, and marries the man who has protected her from Lennox.

"Political Rivalry." (Milano. Three reels.)—The superiority of foreign photography is clearly shown in this feature. Some of the color effects are beautiful; all of the scenes are pleasing to the eye. The drama is tragic to the very end. Young Maxwell, in carrying some valuable plans of his father, is tempted to visit Floria, a beautiful woman, in the employ of Maxwell’s rivals. The plans are photographed while he is passing the time with Floria. Old Maxwell is disgusted by this act, and the son, seeing he is to blame, shoots himself.

"The Fight for a Birthright." (Gene Gauinter. Three reels.)—Not a pleasing drama by any means, but is carried through the entire three reels.

Griswold has two children, a son by his lawful wife, and an illegitimate daughter. Young Grismeng, who is unknown to his half-sister, Fay. She favors his attentions, thinking to avenge her dead mother’s honor.

"The Right of a Child." (Gene Gauinter. Three reels.)—Strong to resist, and she refuses young Griswold and marries her true love. All ends happily.

"Golden Gate Weekly No. 69. (California Motion Picture Corporation.)—The annual reenactment of the Los Angeles to Washington which is a good beginning for this notable large studio under construction in northern California for the California Motion Picture Corporation. A few of interested, this view of a serious automobile accident in San Francisco.

"Right Off the Reel." (The population of Universal City, Cal., has been increased by six. "Silverstones," the swell department store, has received two new employees. During the week’s hours of to-day "Silverstones" filled a seven-cent piece for a run of six. Leon Gaumont has been presented with the first color picture as the discoverer of the color project in natural colors. This prize was given to him by E. Wallen in the name of the employment at French society Photography."
"PERILS OF PAULINE"
(Eclectic)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON Michell

THIS, the third episode in the perils of unfortunate Pauline, is far better in every way than either of the other numbers. The action is more condensed and more thrilling despite the fact that it is one reel shorter. Two puzzles are proposed where but one was asked in the last. "What Did the Pirate Propose?" is the first question, and it will be a clever person who will answer; "What Was the Old Man's Warning?" is the second query. This ought not to be so hard to discover.

One more character is added to the story, the pirate. This part is played by Donald McKenzie, to whom much credit is due. Mr. McKenzie's make-up and mannerisms perfect the picture more than any other one item. The same characters, Pearl White, as Pauline; Crane Wilbur, as her lover; Paul Panzer, as Owen, the "heavy"; Francis Carlyle, as Hicks, the assistant "heavy," and a large number of sailors, pirates, and general crowds, make up the cast.

The story starts with Owen trying to coax Pauline to take a sea cruise, the girl needing but little inducement. Harry tries in vain to find out where they are going to but when they leave follows to the ship.

In the meantime an old sailor has been found who is willing to impersonate a pirate and he comes to Pauline with tales of the sea and buried treasure which the girl takes in. Harry sees this old pirate and a mutual hatred springs up between them. As the ship is about to sail an old man boards her. It is Harry in disguise and he proceeds to sit down wherever the men are talking to the dislike of the sailor.

Finally the old tar insults Harry and gets the surprise of his life. After recovering from his fright and hurts, he plots with the others against Harry's life. They get a man from the steerage and instruct him to kill Harry by shooting through his porthole. Harry overhears this by use of a phonograph and arranges a dummy, the head of which is blown off. He then throws the man into the sea by cutting the rope.

"ESCAPED FROM SIBERIA"
(American Kineto Corporation)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON Michell

A STORY of Russian intrigue told in three parts. The story is most melodramatic in character and might be improved in a number of places. The acting is beyond reproach. The photography is poor in places. The main plot is conventional, a few twists differentiating it from other productions. It is typically a foreign picture.

A Count entrusted his children to the care of a governess. This woman, really an adventuress, proceeds to have a valet, who loves his master, discharged, and then lays her plans for the master himself. She succeeds and soon after they are married.

Years later the valet, still true to his former master proves the treachery of the woman to him, and has her arrested on murder. In order to be a true adventurer, the scene shifting on the attempted assassination of the old man by the woman and her confederate is very well done.

"A WOMAN'S TREACHERY"
(American Kineto Corporation)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A FIVE-REEL drama vividly portraying the unwarranted hardships that the Russian Jews endure and one that will please most people. The action is rather slow in some places, and at all times the actors seem to be acting too much for the camera and some of them are apt to overdo a scene.

There are a few inconsistencies both in the production of the piece and in the plot, some of which are serious. One scene that is noticeably poor is that of the interior of the inn, when the door is open large amounts of snow blow in the door, but when the scene shifts to the exterior there is no snow falling and no noticeable wind.

The last scene is beautifully staged and gives a good effect. The liberated Russian family is shown standing on the deck of an ocean liner as it steams up New York harbor. Views of the Statue of Liberty and some of the skyscrapers in the darkening light greatly impress the audience as they do the family just escaped from the terrible Russian prison.

The suffering hardships of the Siberian prisoners, combined with the cruel treatment of the prison officials as depicted in the picture, makes one's blood boil.

Considering that all the exteriors were taken in New Jersey, they are wonderful. The broad wastes of Siberia are well portrayed and there were no spectators who got in the picture by chance. The photography is of a high quality throughout; the coloring is beautiful and pleasing to the eye.

The story is that of a family of Russian Jews that live in Kiev. Count Boris Vladimiroff has often protected them from the savagery of the Russian soldiers. He falls in love with the daughter of the house, Natasha, and on account of this his father disgrace him and turis him from his doors.

The father of the family is sent to Siberia as a Nihilist and his wife and daughter follow after. Count Boris, enraged at this act, joins the Nihilists, through the brother of Natasha, Ossip. Count Boris and Ossip rescue the latter's family from Siberia and they all go to America where they know they are given a chance in life.

The picture confirms all the worst reports of the wickedness of the Russian officials, and it will surely impress this fact upon the minds of all who see it.

OHIO EXHIBITORS WILL BACK MUTUAL

WHEREAS.—We, as exhibitors, deplore the introduction into our State of a legalized system of un-American censor-ship, accompanied by an unjust scheme of extortion in the shape of unreasonable fees, so-called, all of which must be born by the exhibitor; and

WHEREAS.—The politicians in the various states of this Nation are watching Ohio for the purpose of introducing similar schemes of pillage and graft upon the exhibitors of the Nation, and

WHEREAS.—The State of Ohio under our new constitu-tion ranks high as a progressive state, and cannot afford to be placed in the unenviable position of legally stifling freedom of speech, thought or action, as provided by the Ohio State Censor Law; so-called, and

WHEREAS.—Said Ohio State Censor Law was placed upon the statutes at the behest and with the connivance of a coterie of politicians without the slightest demand or request from any group of citizens, organized or otherwise; and

WHEREAS.—No opportunity was granted to the film trade or exhibitors' representatives or the representative of the millions of Ohio's citizenship who patronizes the motion picture theatres weekly, to enter objections to the passage of said Ohio State Censorship Law; therefore be it

RESOLVED.—That a committee be chosen to inaugurate a movement at once for the early repeal of the above obnoxious Ohio State Censor Law according to the manner laid down and set forth by Ohio's present constitution, in order that we may be permitted to pursue our business calling peacefully, legitimately, and without interference as heretofore.

FURTHER RESOLVED.—That a copy of these resolu-tions be sent the local exchanges to be submitted to their re-spective headquarters in New York and Ohio branches, and a copy of same be sent to the trade and local papers.

applied from the inside. The enclosures from which the lantern is operated must be constructed of fire-resisting material and be a smoke-proof as possible.

Lanterns must be of sound construction and have the projectors fitted with two film boxes of substantial make, while the supports must be of fire-resisting material. Many of the lanterns in Dundee are fitted with appliances by means of which only an inch or two of the film can be burned while running between the spool boxes.

Filming a Fire Department

The Vancouver fire department, which is one of the best equipped and most efficient organizations of its kind on the Pacific coast, recently gave an exhibition run, and members of the department leaped from windows and roofs into a net held in the street below, for the benefit of the "movies." The films, which were made for a syndicate, will be shown all over the world, thus extensively advertising the capital of British Columbia.

The Vancouver fire department's equipment consists of motor-driven trucks, hose, and hook-and-ladder wagons, all of the latest design and best makes. The department has a well-drilled, efficient personnel directed by expe-rienced and capable officers, and the films present scenes that are calculated to excite admiration and furnish thrills to spectators who enjoy spectacular displays and the exci-tement incident to fighting a fire.

Motion picture films showing the natural resources of Canada and featuring with comprehensive views the fish-ing, lumber, and other industries of British Columbia were recently exhibited in the Vancouver theatres. The series of views starts with the Vancouver express train from Montreal, which travels along the picturesque St. Lawrence and the shores of the Great Lakes, passing many waterfalls and cataracts, across prairies and moun-tains, and through tunnels, finally arriving in Vancouver.

The views of the lumbering and fishing industries and fruit packing in the Okanogan Valley are especially real-istic and interesting. The films showing lumber resources depict the different processes from the felling of the great forest trees to the shipment of the finished timber from the mills; and those showing the fishing industry, from the hauling in of the nets to the last stages of can-nin in the factories, including the cleaning, cutting, cook-ing and packing, until the produce finally emerges ready for use.

The films are to be used on the regular circuits in the United States and Europe.

RIGHT OFF THE REEL
A. H. Sawyer, Inc., have closed a contract for the Canadian rights of Lubin’s big success, “The Drag Terror.” A company has been formed to tour Canada, the picture opening at the Academy of Music, Halifax, on May 18.

The Polytechnic High School, of Pasadena, Cal., has purchased a Power’s Cameragraph, No. 6A, projecting machine.

In the issue of April 6th the statement that the “St. Louis Star” will run the “Lucille Love” series is erroneous. The “St. Louis Times” will run the stories in collaboration with many other papers.

Capt. James B. Adams, Assistant Forester of Washington, D. C., paid a visit to Santa Barbara and was particularly delighted with his inspection of the American plant, where he was an interested spectator with Col. Willis M. Slosson.

Ed Coven, leading man of the Ricketts American company, recently made a fall from a horse for effect. The effect in the pictures is great, but Coven was laid up for several days. The title of the picture is “The Ingrate,” a two-part Western drama soon to be released.

A Power’s Cameragraph No. 6A machine has been installed in St. Patrick’s Rectory, Jersey City, N. J.

Harry Pollard has in preparation a series of one-reel plays in which an English bulldog will be featured. Margarita Fischer will play the human lead.

President Rifkin, of the Eastern Feature Film Company, of 244 Tremont street, Boston, Mass., is in Boston. He will stay there several weeks, and will take care of the construction that is going to be done for the new offices located at 57-59 Church street, Boston.

A Power’s Cameragraph No. 6A has been installed by the Century Film Company in their studios, Bayonne, N. J.

In the “Photoplay Magazine” popularity contest Margarita Fischer, of the Beauty Company, leads the contestants.

Frank Montgomery’s camera man is making a series of permanent lantern slides in natural colors which Mr. Montgomery contemplates using in a lecture tour later on.

Three hundred South Sea Islanders are encamped on the 1000-acres ranch of the Universal Film Mfg. Company near Universal City. The band of brown-skinned semi-savages will be turned over to the Pan-American Exposition at the end of eight months and will be a feature of the world’s fair in San Francisco in 1915.

Mrs. Lawrence, who played leads with the Whitman Warren Company, has been assigned the same roles of the recognized Whitman Feature Film Company, which will start operations within a few days. Giles Warren has again been assigned to direct the new company, which will use the Whitman studios at Offside, N. Y., and have been entirely overhauled and enlarged since last occupied.

The addition of two exchanges, one in Utah and one in Kentucky, now brings the total number of the Pan-American territorial representation up to twenty-six. There will be thirty-four in all when the organization is complete.

Frank Crane, director of Imp Features, is to confine himself pretty closely in the future to the production of melodramas. His latest is "Through the Eyes of the Blind," a two-reeler which tells the story of crime, sacrifice and love. Mr. Crane is seen in one of the roles.

In writing to advertisers please mention "THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS"
Five reel feature fashioned with common sense, produced by the cleverest men that reasonable capital could secure and based upon the idea that motion pictures can be acted properly only by trained motion picture actors.

The fact that legitimate stars have been disappointments or utter failures in nearly all of the expensive pictures in which they have appeared, proves the soundness of our idea.

The drawing power of the legitimate star is limited to the two dollar class in a few large cities, but the motion picture favorites have a following in every city, town and village, amongst the classes whose nickels and dimes make motion pictures possible.

"The Littlest Rebel" was one of the most successful war dramas ever written. It crowded a prominent Broadway Theatre for a whole season and did a monster business throughout the country. As a photoplay it will be a genuine masterpiece—high in quality yet popular in theme.

Film Quality

Quality in the film—quality from a technical photographic standpoint is as important to the Exhibitor as is interest in the story that the film tells.

There's one film that's recognized the world over as the standard of quality—that is always used by those whose effort it is to give the Exhibitors the very best goods and the very best service—Eastman film.

Here is the TRUTH, the whole TRUTH and nothing but the TRUTH about Reflecting Projection Screens

Discussion by F. J. Rembusch, Patentee and Inventor of the "Mirror Screen"

Mr. Exhibitor:
You can certainly learn all about screens because there are only three kinds of screens used in moving pictures.

The three kinds of screens are the White Sheet or Wall.—The Metallized Surfaces (meaning all surfaces painted with a shiny paint such as aluminum, gold bronze, etc.) —and The "MIRROR SCREEN."

The "MIRROR SCREEN" is the Peerless Surface of the World for a Hundred Reasons but Especially the Following:

1. The "Mirror Screen" reflects a picture that don't look like a moving picture, but like real, living flesh and blood people and actual scenes. The Mirror is a secret. Stand in front of a mirror and you see your real self as you are. A motion picture caught on the "Mirror Screen" (in front of a Mirror) looks real and not like painted scenery.

2. The "Mirror Screen" is the greatest economical factor in the moving picture theatre because you get More Benefit from your light. That's natural because a Mirror is the most powerful reflector in the world. The "Mirror Screen" is manufactured scientifically so that all of the "Picture Light" is reflected towards the viewing space of your house and not scattered like a White Wall or Sheet. We reflect the "Picture Light" towards the seats in your house and reflect all of it.

3. The "Mirror Screen" for a narrow house is made so that the light is concentrated to a narrow angle. For a broad house the light is distributed at a wide angle. In this way you always get the benefit of all of your light and every seat in the viewing space receives the same amount of "Picture Light." Please notice no other surface can be made to do this.

4. The "Mirror Screen" is made from the finest quality of white, crystal Plate Glass—Plate Glass is the most perfect plane surface in the world. Therefore, you never have any uneven places, bumps, seams, clouds or distortion. YOU GET THE MOST PERFECT FOCUS.

5. The "Mirror Screen" is made by mirroring with pure silver this magnificent Plate Glass. It is tested and must reflect by photometric measurements 98% of light. We then destroy the mirror entirely by priming the face to a dull white of a moving picture silver finish. Remember the finish of a "Mirror Screen" is not only visible on a dull surface. The picture will not show on a highly polished surface such as a plane mirror, a highly polished piece of steel, a shiny surface or cloth of any kind. A "Mirror Screen" is not a mirror any more than a brick is not clay after it has been burnt.

6. A motion picture is visible only by Diffuse Reflection. A shiny surface reflects regular reflection, a dull rough surface reflects Diffuse Reflection. Remember this fact it is important.

Pictures on a "Mirror Screen" are reflected by diffuse reflection only, the same as a White Wall but 1000% clearer and better because the light is not scattered, but is returned to the viewing space with brilliancy and power. Keep in mind we retain the stereoscopic effect of a real mirror.

7. If you are using a Metallized Screen you have a surface that is shiny-rough. The shiny elements reflect regular reflection, the rough elements reflect your picture. The two kinds of reflected light rays interfere (SUPERIMPOSE). You have glare and haze. You can and blame the film manufacturers for poor photography when it is your shiny screen that causes that foggy, out of focus appearance. The more light you use the more haze you have. The proof of it is the brighter the Metallized Screen the more haze. Try it yourself if you don't believe me. Ask any scientist. It can't be overcome because it is one of the laws of the ALMIGHTY.

The human eye can't view a shiny surface in comfort. That's why there is eye complaint where the Metallized Screens are used. Ask any oculist. You can't use enough light to make the picture visible. You can put 1,000 amperes on a "Mirror Screen" and the reflected light will be delightful because every light beam is diffused. The idea of "too bright a picture" is eliminated on the "Mirror Screen." I have six theatres and have experimented for years. I have put 100 amperes of direct current, and more if I can get it. You should see my pictures and hear what my patrons say about them. At the same time I will forfeit $1,000.00 to anyone that will produce a surface that will show as much reflection as my "Mirror Screen."

8. I believe I know as much, if not more, about screens than any man living, because for ten years I have experimented continuously on projection surfaces. Furthermore, I know that exhibitors know less about screens than anything connected with their business. For seven years the "Mirror Screen" has been on the market. Every Tom, Dick and Harry who gets a paint brush and some aluminum or gold bronze will tell you that he can equal the "Mirror Screen." They copy the name Mirror and will make any sort of a statement but they can't back it up.

9. Quit experimenting. Study the proposition. Get a "Mirror Screen" and make your pictures visible—Visible—if it would do any good I would sing it—Make your Pictures Visible, Visible. Let me tell you more about why you can't get a clear picture on a shiny surface. It's simple. If you want one light to be visible there must be no interfering light, and if you let the sunlight fall on your screen your picture goes out, and the more shine there is to your screen the more your picture goes out. You can't get away from it any more than you can make water run uphill.

Let me send a representative to show you. For our samples of new Snow-White finish. Get a screen that won't hurt your eyes or put a haze and fog in your pictures,—a screen that you can put on the light. Say, Mr. Exhibitor, that is what you are selling—"Picture Light." The "Mirror Screen" produces real, true, "Picture Light." Write to-day. I want to hear from YOU.

WHY THE STRAND THEATRE USES Simplex

This wonderful Broadway Theatre (largest in the world) represents the very latest knowledge in picture theatre construction. In each of its many departments, no expense has been spared to obtain THE BEST RESULTS.

We quote from the Strand program, the reasons for installing SIMPLEX:

"Realizing that only the highest possible grade of projection will suffice for our patrons, we have made many exacting tests of motion picture machines with the result that these pictures are projected by the well known Simplex Projector, the product of the Precision Machine Company of New York City.

"Our experimental tests have convinced us that this machine represents the very best in motion picture construction, its projection being rock steady and without flicker. As it is the only entirely enclosed machine on the market, we believe its claims for absolute fireproofness are amply justified.

"Our operating room is at all times under their expert supervision, and is replete with every appliance which modern scientific knowledge affords."

The Strand projection is the best on earth. You can have the same by installing a Simplex Projector

"KLEINE ATTRACTIONS" POPULAR

Through his eighteen branch offices George Kleine is now offering a program of four first-run reels a week. These programs are proving very popular all over the country, owing to the number of short subjects that are used to make up the four reels.

Returns from a circular letter sent to all licensed and independent theatres showed a remarkable dearth of five-hundred-foot comedies and educational subjects. It also indicated a strong desire on the part of the exhibitors for one-thousand-foot dramas.

The new George Kleine Attraction service is exclusive and is offered to only one theatre in a town.

FORGIVEN or JACK O' DIAMONDS

IN SIX PARTS, Featuring

Edwin Forsberg
SUPPORTED BY AN ALL STAR CAST

in a masterful adaptation of the above melodrama from the pen of CLAY M. GREENE and made famous from coast to coast by FREDERIC BRYTON—wonderfully produced and enacted—photography excellent.

This dramatic photoplay is a masterpiece. You will go on booking the 'JACK O' DIAMONDS' long after many other features are forgotten. One of the stronges and most gripping stories ever written. Extravagant phrases do not make a successful picture. It must have dramatic merit, the story must hold your audience, the photography must be perfect and the entire photoplay must have quality. The critics and buyers say that 'FORGIVEN, or the JACK O' DIAMONDS' has all these essentials and is a great picture.

Watch the "News"

As forecasted in previous issues this number of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS carries two remarkable articles, giving for the first time in print the inside facts of the Ohio censorship situation:

"JIMMIE'S MAGIC LANTERN BILL," by Roe S. Eastman.

These articles are written by men who know—who know personally the bosses, the censors, the local ins and outs of Ohio's politics. THEY ARE FACT ARTICLES.

These are only the opening guns of the "News'" campaign against censorship.

Next week's issue will carry another INSIDE article by Mr. Wright:

"TIGHTENING THE MACHINE'S GRIP ON THE OHIO CENSORS."

Succeeding issues will carry page symposiums of exhibitors' opinions, showing just what censorship means to them and their patrons.

Each issue from now on will give all the latest news, all the interesting developments from Ohio, and from every other state where the state censorship fallacy is being exploited.

Articles in preparation and shortly to appear are:

On the Chicago censorship evil, by the "star" political reporter on Chicago's leading daily.

On censorship in Kansas City, Detroit, Minneapolis and other vital points—all by men in Daily and personal touch with local factors.

These are written by our own correspondents, picked newspaper men of proven ability, of whom THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS now has one actively engaged in practically every exchange city in the United States and Canada.

This industry, more than any other to-day, is ripe each week with big, vital news features.

Matters are concerned, a first-hand knowledge of which is essential to every exhibitor, every exchange man, every manufacturer for the present and future conduct of his business.

The "News" proposes to give this information, fresh and first-hand, every week.

It will not be written or clipped from New York City.

It will be NEWS, direct interviews from the field, so authoritative that "WHEN YOU SEE IT IN THE 'NEWS' IT'S NEWS."

Just at present the censorship situation happens to be the most vital issue in the entire trade and we shall treat it so.

But along with censorship news there will be equally fresh and significant information on every phase of the industry.

Particularly that which concerns the marketing and the showing of pictures in every section of the country.

PHILADELPHIA NOW HAS A FIFTY-CENT HOUSE

New Stanley Theatre, Just Opened, Establishes Record for Prices in Quaker City—Fine Program Offered—Policy of Management Will Be to Offer Best Photoplay Productions Interspersed with Novelties—Town Topics a Unique Feature

THE Stanley Theatre opened its doors for its premiere performance on Saturday evening, April 25. The entire house was crowded with well-known workers of the film and theatrical world as well as prominent Philadelphia business men, all as guests of the management.

The Stanley is the first house in Philadelphia to establish a price of 25 cents for matinees, and 50 cents and 25 cents for evening performances.

The theatre building occupies a site 70x170 feet and is located on the south side of Market street west of Sixteenth street. The construction is fire-proof throughout, of concrete and steel, with fire brick and terra-cotta block facing. A spacious mosaic tiled lobby leads directly to the foyer of the orchestra floor.

From the foyer on either side wide stairways, heavily carpeted, ascend to the promenade on the mezzanine floor. From the promenade are smoking-rooms for the gentlemen and rest and retiring rooms for the ladies. On both sides the stairways continue up to the balcony and the family circle.

The general scheme of decoration is old ivory, gold and old rose harmoniously blended. The promenade color scheme is royal blue.

The lighting system is semi-indirect, and through controls from the stage the lighting of the house can be made to range from twilight to the intensity of sunlight at noon.

The ventilation system is thoroughly up-to-date and is complete in every detail. Concealed exhaust fans rid the auditorium of vitiated air, and "mushrooms" under the seats admit filtered air of such temperature as to make the theatre comfortable according to the season.

The seats are of upholstered brown leather and finished in walnut. They are spacious and comfortable and spaced well between rows. There are no columns in the entire building, and a good view can be had from every seat in the house.

The policy of the management will be to show the best productions that the market affords in photoplays, interspersed with novelties. For the opening week the following program has been laid out:

Overture, "Raymond"—Thomas. By twenty-five soloists of the Philadelphia Orchestra, Harry W. Memery, director. This orchestra will be a permanent feature.

Motion picture—"The Birth of Old Glory."—Edison.

Stanley Town Topics.

Snapshots of Philadelphia news as it occurs each day. The film after being shown will be destroyed so that this will be an exclusive novelty.

Act III. "The Sea Wolf." "The Fatal Wedding." Ford Sterling in a Universal comedy. "A little nonsense, now and then, is relished by the wisest men."

The Stanley Town Topics were two incidents of the day's happenings and this should prove to be unique as it will be daily news rendered every day and is a step ahead of the "weekly" idea.

Any comment on the "Sea Wolf" would be superfluous other than that it held the audience spellbound from beginning to end. It is well constructed from beginning to end, and gloriously acted.

Miss Abarbanell's act was well received and she had to appear many times in response to applause.

Ford Sterling scored a hit in "The Fatal Wedding" and brought laughter from all sides.

The scene of "Morning, Noon and Night" was undoubtedly a masterpiece of electrical effect work and really beggars description. One sees the purple dawn creeping in through a huge French window. As the sun mounts higher a peaceful valley with its tumbling stream and its cozy cottages is disclosed. As the afternoon wanes a storm comes up and the sun is blotted out by the clouds and rain.

The projection of the picture is by two Power's Six-A machines and is truly remarkable, owing to the long throw and the very great angle from the booth to the screen. The operator deserves credit, as the final setting of the machines was not accomplished until just before the opening of the performance.

Special credit is also due to Mr. Eugene L. Perry and to Mr. George Mann, on whose shoulders rested the responsibility of the quality of the entertainment.
THE BOSS-PICKED CENSORS OF OHIO: SOME FIRST-HAND FACTS

By William Lord Wright

Cox, Finley, Durbin, and Neff Made Up the Board Between Them—Vestal, Faithful Vassal of Durbin in Hardin County, Captured a Place—So Did Mrs. Miller, a Newspaper Reporter Who Served on the Cox Newspapers—Maddox, the Neff Appointee, Resigned

THIS is the true, the "inside" story of the Ohio Board of Censors, which is not primarily a Board of Censors, and only incidentally has anything to do with censorship of motion pictures.

The Ohio Censor Board is, in reality, the latest of the series of commissions which has been saddled upon the people of Ohio by a powerful political machine for the benefit of "the faithful."

These various commissions are given high-sounding titles which mislead the uninitiated into thinking they are created "for the good of the people."

But what they mean to their creators, the politicians, is SO MANY MORE PLACES WITH GOOD SALARIES AND BETTER "PICKINGS" TO BE BESTOWED UPON THE FOLLOWERS OF THE BOSSES.

The facts in the Ohio censorship scandal, as they are known to practically everyone in the State of Ohio, are these:

THERE NEVER WAS A BONA-FIDE PUBLIC DEMAND FOR CENSORSHIP OF MOTION PICTURES IN OHIO.

THE men behind the law creating the Ohio State Board of Censors of Motion Picture Films were—and are:

James M. Cox, Governor of Ohio;
William L. Finley, Democratic State Boss;
W. W. ("Bill") Durbin, Finley's right-hand man and political czar of Hardin County;
And M. A. Neff, President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

Cox, Finley, Durbin and Neff made up the personnel of the Censor Board between them.

Each of the Three Members of the Board Was Appointed for Political or Private Reasons.

Not One of Them Was Named Because the Candidate Had Any Special Fitness for the Position of Censor of Motion Pictures.

Mrs. Maude Murray Miller present controller of the board's destinies, owes her position to Governor Cox.

Harry E. Vestal is indebted for a $1,500 job as censor to "Bill" Durbin, via Finley.

James Maddox was the avowed candidate of Neff. He resigned from the board in disgust with the conditions surrounding it, if reports are true. He is now the manager of a Columbus theatre.

And Maddox was the only man in any degree competent to serve the interests of the exhibitors on the Censor Board.

Both Mrs. Miller and Vestal are holding other positions and doing other work, besides being censors of films.

Sam F. Cary is slated, according to inside "tips" from Columbus, the state capital, to be the successor of Maddox in the censor board. CARY IS A MEMBER "IN GOOD STANDING" OF THE COX DEMOCRATIC MACHINE.

The democratic machine is straining every nerve to throw the protection of the Civil Service around the Neff-Cox censor board, so as to perpetuate the censors in office indefinitely and prevent them from being ousted by a change of politics.

If the "powers that be" decide that Cary is to be a film censor, he will get the job, civil service examinations or no civil service examinations.

William L. Finley, State Democratic Boss, is now facing trial on a Columbus, O., grand jury indictment charging him with violating the civil service laws in soliciting campaign contributions from civil service employees.

That's how much the Ohio democratic machine cares for civil service, except when it serves the machine's purposes.

The writer of this article is speaking from first-hand knowledge of his subject. He was himself a candidate for a place on the Censor Board. He lost—thanks, principally, to M. A. Neff.

For this reason the writer expects to be charged with spite, "soreheadedness" and malice in writing this collection of facts. That such a motive actuates him is absolutely untrue.

The writer became a candidate for a place on the board purely because a number of manufacturers, exhibitors, scenario writers and authorities—all vitally interested in censorship—were kind enough to say they wished him to serve on the board as a man who could represent the industry honestly, intelligently and conservatively.

He became a candidate at a financial sacrifice.

And he now takes pleasure in recording his gratification that he lost the appointment. Fate was kind to him, for later developments have proved that no one who had a glimmering of the details of the motion picture business had or ever will have a word to say on the board. Had he been appointed, he would have had the choice of making himself subservient to the dictates of politicians' favorites, or resigning.

And he gave up the fight when there was still a chance to overcome the powerful Neff influence against him, because he realized how untenable his position would be.

The writer will have occasion, before he is through, to discuss in detail his encounters with Neff, and the schemes Neff worked to keep him off the board.

Reasons That Dictated Appointments

The purpose of this article is to show that merit never entered for a moment into the appointment of any of the members of the Ohio Board of Censors, that fitness for the position was never thought of, that political and private reasons dictated each appointment.

Remember that prior to the last election the Democratic clans of old Ohio have been far away from the pie-counter for lo, these many years. Boards, more Boards, yet more Boards and Commissions, and rumors of Commissions, have been created and discussed.

But there are many hungry political mouths left to feed and these Censorship jobs looked mighty good.

Merit and all such was lost sight of. "We need the jobs for the machine," was the cry of the Bosses.

William L. Finley, the Democratic campaign manager in Ohio, is former state oil inspector, former this and that, and is manager of the Democratic campaign-literature bureau. Incidentally, he is now under an indictment for alleged irregularities.

Mr. Finley is familiarly known to strenuous politics as "Boss" Bill Finley. Boss Finley has a chief lieutenant named Bill Durbin.

W. W. Durbin, until the past few weeks, when he was lambasted by one Carl Smith in a postmastership contest, has been absolute political ear of Hardin County, Ohio. Finley also originally came from Hardin County. Together they swing Central Ohio for tried and true Democracy.

Rewarding a Henchman

Now, Harry Vestal is a friend of "Bill" Durbin. Vestal lives in Ada, Ohio, which is close to the throne. He was to be rewarded some way.

Aha, a job on the Censorship Board!

Durbin goes to Finley, his chief, and virtual State Boss.

Finley goes to Cox. Cox, it is said, passes the word to the Industrial Board, and Vestal who lives in a town of three or four thousand inhabitants lands a state appointment of great importance.

It may be contended that Mr. Vestal, being an exhibitor, could be counted upon to look after the interests of the exhibitors as a member of the board. Unfortunately for this argument, Mr. Vestal is much better known in Ohio as a political lieutenant of Durbin than he is as an exhibitor.

In addition to his political activities, he is the owner of the "Ada Herald," a newspaper devoted to the fortunes of the Democratic party in Ohio.

Real Representation Never Intended

If there had been any intention on the part of the managers to give the exhibitors real representation on the Board, would they not have consulted the exhibitors, and endeavored to find out the man whom they wished to be their representative?

There are several communities in Ohio, the names of which will occur to anyone, which are more deserving of representation on such a board than the obscure town of Ada. Does it not seem strange that of all the exhibitors in Ohio—assuming, for a moment, that the engineers of this deal had any desire to give the industry a voice in its own defense—no one could be found but Vestal to sit on the board?

It does seem odd, unless the reader remembers that Harry Vestal lives in Hardin County, and is a faithful vassal of Bill Durbin.

As for Mrs. Maude Murray Miller, her appointment as censor was predicted in the Columbus, Ohio, newspapers, long before the bill became a law.

Mrs. Miller, it may be said, is a newspaper reporter. Besides being a censor, she is a writer on the "Columbus Evening Dispatch." She is also a member of one or more other State boards.

Mrs. Miller was formerly a special writer on the Springfield, Ohio, "Daily News," owned by Governor Cox.

She worked for Governor Cox for years.

"The Dispatch," it is hardly necessary to say, was enthusiastic over the appointment of Mrs. Miller from the first.

So was George Burbia, Governor Cox's secretary, when he heard of the appointment. Mr. Burbia's career has been somewhat similar to Mrs. Miller's. He was editor of the "Springfield Daily News," and from there Governor Cox transferred him to Dayton, and made him editor of the "Dayton Daily News," another of the Cox newspapers.

Fitness for Post a Mystery

Nobody in the State of Ohio has yet been able to discover that Mrs. Miller had any particular fitness for censoring motion pictures at the time she was appointed. No one ever accused her of knowing anything about the manufacturing or technical side of the business.

Apart from her ability to furnish made-to-order publicity for the censor board—and she furnished it not wisely but too well, until her superiors called her off, and put the "lid" on her "interviews" with herself—Mrs. Miller's equipment is a unique assortment of notions, prejudices and convictions.

Sensationalism of all kinds is taboo with her. No matter what part the sensational ingredient may play in a picture, no matter what the general tone or lesson of the picture may be, the offending scene must come out, regardless of the damage the "cut" does to the picture.

To assert that Mrs. Miller was appointed because of her qualifications for the place is ridiculous. If she has any, they were not considered at the time she was appointed, and they have never been apparent since.

Mrs. Miller the Real Censor

Yet Mrs. Miller is, in everything but name, censor of all the features that come into the State of Ohio. The costliest pictures that the manufacturers produce pass under her scrutiny.

With the duties attached to her membership on other boards and those of her newspaper work, one can imagine how much time she has devoted to a consideration of the picture she views.

The men appointed as judges at horse shows and dog shows, of live stock and produce at county fairs, are selected with an eye to their actual ability to pass judgment in such matters. Yet here is an industry in which millions of dollars are invested, which gives thousands a livelihood and hundreds of thousands entertainment and amusement, and their fate is placed in the hands of a woman reporter, with a little political influence as a recommendation for the position!

Cincinnati, April 28.

WHY IS THERE A CENSORSHIP LAW IN THE STATE OF OHIO?
A year has passed since the law became a law. Yet no one has been able to answer the question.

A Democratic Legislature at Columbus last May didn't know why there should be a film censorship, when the bill came before them to be made a law. But they didn't stop to inquire very deeply. They passed it because it was one of Governor Cox's pet measures.

The very idea of Governor Cox working himself up to such an astounding pitch of enthusiasm over such a measure appealed strongly to the Legislature's sense of humor, however. And they showed themselves "wiser" than their votes may have indicated by dubbing the measure "Jimmie's Magic Lantern Bill."

When the bill was passed and the good people of Ohio awoke to the fact that a kind-hearted and thoughtful Governor had arranged to shield them from naughty motion pictures at their own expense, they, too, began to ask, Why? They hadn't demanded it. They had little fault to find with the pictures that were shown at Ohio's motion-picture theatres.

Moreover, the voters were beginning to grow weary of "Jimmie" Cox's numerous boards and commissions and tax laws and license laws. They believed there was a limit to regulation. And they suspected that "Jimmie" was having a violent rush of law-making to the head, to say the least.

Why, then, this film-censorship law? The people hadn't asked for it. Who had, and why?

The Men Responsible

Two men in all Ohio are thoroughly competent to answer that question.

One of them is Governor James M. Cox.

The other, M. A. Neff, President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

And it's a hundred-to-one shot that neither of them will ever tell.

Governor Cox would probably reply that the law was a response to popular clamor for the regulation of motion pictures.

Neff's answer (for publication) would be that the exhibitors of Ohio had asked for it as a relief from the various local censorship boards.

Both of these gentlemen ought to be informed, if they do not know already, that neither of these explanations is in accordance with the facts.

"Popular Clamor" Manufactured

The so-called "popular clamor" was manufactured by the Democratic state organization. What the legislature mistook for "a public demand" was only two or three politicians shouting through a megaphone into their ears.

It was just as real as the shouts of a mob of stage supers. And as for the exhibitors, their wishes in the matter were never consulted. Their present attitude toward the State Board of Censors is enough to make it plain that Neff does not represent the exhibitor, and did not at any time during his campaigning for State censorship.

The only exhibitors he consulted were the delegates at his "personally conducted" conventions, who were instructed to do what he told them.

That's What They Call the Censorship Law in Ohio—But It Is Really M. A. Neff's "Safe and Sane" Censorship Device for Exhibitors; and Why Governor Cox Was So Anxious to See It Made a Law His Own Legislature Never Knew, and No One Has Since Found Out

Origin of the Cox-Neff Alliance

The origin of the Cox-Neff alliance is somewhat shrouded in mystery. But here are a few facts concerning it that will serve as a word to the wise.

Neff and Cox have long been political bedfellows. Cox, before he became Governor, was Congressman from the Dayton district. Neff is known as a Bryan-Cox Democrat.

It was the political craft captured by State Boss W. L. Finley and an able crew of Democratic "machinists" that fired the winning shot across the bows of the Ohio Ship of State at the last election, and took possession in the name of "The Democracy of Ohio." Cox's first act, on taking command, was to nail the banner of "Reform" to the masthead.

Then he and his legislative crew proceeded to navigate the vessel according to their own ideas.

Governor Cox and his legislature at once became very busy in passing laws, many of which have since torn the business interests of the State with dissension and strife.

Chief of these laws are the Anti-Screen law, which has precipitated a walkout of more than 300,000 coal miners; the Workmen's Compensation Law; the Wages Tax Law, which has for its object the increase in personal tax returns in Cincinnati alone of $100,000,000; the Liquor Licensing Law; last but not least, the Motion Picture Censorship Law.

State Censorship Fathered by Neff

Now, State Censorship has been an obsession with Neff for some time. If the idea was not original with him, he adopted it and fathered it. Just when Cox first "saw the light" is unknown.

But the fact remains that Cox, then Congressman, attended the meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, at Toledo, in June, 1912, when Neff was preaching State censorship and trying to convert the exhibitors to the cause.

Was Cox converted then? Nobody knows, except Neff and Cox.

When the latter became Governor, however, he developed a marvelous enthusiasm for State Censorship of films. Needless to say, Neff did not discourage this, although he had the trouble to consult the sentiment of the exhibitors of Ohio, he could have found many reasons for opposing such a law.

At the Toledo convention it was pointed out to the exhibitors that the censorship law was a step to prevent the creation of censor boards locally in all the cities of the state under the provisions of the proposed home rule for cities act.

This has formed the basis of Neff's argument as well as that of the Governor.

"Jimmie's Magic Lantern Bill"

Cox became so enthusiastic in favor of the bill that the legislators in Columbus referred to it laughingly as "Jimmie's Magic Lantern Bill."

It created a board of censors of three members, who were to act in the censoring of every film to be shown in the state under the supervision of the Industrial Commission, which was only one of the numerous commissions established under the new constitution.

Whatever we may say of Governor Cox, it would be useless to deny that he is a very clever press-agent. The Governor received his early training in the offices of the Cincinnati "Inquirer" and is at present the owner of an influential paper in Dayton.
The enactment of new laws, the creation of new commissions, the making of new and unusual news stories has been his specialty.

His every act has had a peculiar news value and that news has aided him in building up one of the strongest and most complete political machines the state has ever known.

At the head of the Ohio State Board of Censors, Governor Cox, true to his press-agent instincts, placed Mrs. Maude Murray Miller, a newspaper writer of Columbus, O. Two male exhibitors of the state, one from Columbus and one from Ada, were also named as members of this board.

Governor's Object Never Clear

The Governor's object in pushing this law was never clearly understood by the legislators. There had been no great cry for reform of the "movies" in the state. The exhibitors were enjoying a prosperous business, their patrons seemed satisfied that the film shows were fast becoming a medium for education as well as being a clean and wholesome amusement.

What did the Governor hope to gain by the passage of this law? the legislators asked.

No wonder "Jimmie's Magic Lantern Law" was the subject of many a jest in the corridors of the capitol and the lobbies of the hotels!

But "theirs not to reason why—theirs but to do or die," and so the legislators had the freak law its required majority and passed on to more interesting matter.

The board of censors, once appointed, started immediately to work, but before they had gone very far they were stopped by court injunction as the result of the suit brought against the constitutionality of the act by the Mutual Film Supply Company. The board and the law have been upheld in two decisions and the suit is now before the Supreme Court of the United States on appeal.

Neff's Statement of the Case

"The creation of the State Board of Censors was for the sole purpose of heading off municipalities from creating local boards and putting the exhibitors out of business," said President Neff, of the M. P. E. L. of America. "Previous to the appointment of this board, Cleveland had a local board of censors. The exchanges were assessed so much each week for the expenses of this board and the exhibitors also contributed a stipulated amount.

"It was understood at that time that all the exhibitors and film men of the state were satisfied to have the films censored, until the Mutual came along with its suit."

"It seems that the only objection the Mutual Film Company had against the censoring of their product was the payment of the $1 charge for each film censored. It will possibly be news to know that the State of Ohio spent $1,000 for leaders to put on censored films. This was the first order the board gave.

"The amount of money to be paid in by the film manufacturers and exchanges for the first year would be only $2,000 more than the expense of operating the board, but in the second year the number of films in the state would show a decrease, with the result that either the charge for censoring the films would have to be raised, or a member of the board would have to be discontinued.

"The expenses of the board are: Salary, three members, $4,500; salary, secretary, $1,500; salary, operator, $1,000; incidental and equipment, $1,000; 25 cents for printed leader on each film censored for 15,000 films, $3,750.

"Where is the money to come from for the second year's work, as only 850 films come into the state each month or about 10,000 films annually?"

Neff's Statement Contradicted

In direct contradiction of President Neff's view comes the statement of E. P. Bernardi, manager of the Colonial Theatre, one of Cincinnati's leading houses.

"I think I speak for the majority of the honest exhibitors here when I voice my opposition to the state censorship board," said Mr. Bernardi, "on the ground that the censoring of our films is quite unnecessary. We are in this business to make money. If we did not show high-class, moral pictures, we could not exist."

"We feel the pulse of the people, who frequent our theatres every day. We know what they want and we know that we cannot give them pictures that are immoral or out of keeping with the best thought and teaching of the times. I do not think this state board is necessary to prevent the creation of local censorships.

"Cincinnati, at least, has made no effort to tell us what we should and what we should not show. In fact, I would much prefer to have a local board censor the films that come into my theatre than to depend on the vagaries of strangers in Columbus. We could get in personal touch with local censors, and surely the expense could not be greater. I think the law is utterly ridiculous, inasmuch as the films are censored by the National Board in New York before reaching us, and this board is surely as competent as the state board would be.

"The law means nothing but delay and the possible ruin of films to make our business conform with some theoretical ideas of impractical persons."

Others Agree With Bernardi

Other exchange men and exhibitors in the Cincinnati district were equally as strong in their protests against the law on the same grounds. Mrs. Miller, who heads the commission, it was pointed out by others of the exchange men, is opposed to any feature film that has in it the semblance of cruelty to man or beast. During the short time in which she has acted as censor, she is said to have cut out the chief scenes in most of the features which passed before her eyes, because they did not conform to her personal ideas of what pictures should be presented to the public.

"We cannot explain to the public that these scenes have been ruled out by the censors," complained the film man. "And we are up against it. The public wants to see and feel the thrilling parts of each picture and if a horse is killed and takes a tumble it should be in the picture, even if the censor is a woman opposed to 'cruelty to animals.'"

Mrs. Miller's expressed idea of the right kind of picture is "Quo Vadis," according to the statement of an exhibitor, who agrees with her that this particular picture is a wonderful production, but says that he cannot help it if the public would rather see a train hold-up, or a battle picture.

Question Now Up to Exhibitors

The legislators who gave Ohio "Jimmie's Magic Lantern Law" have long since ceased to ask why, but they have passed the question on to the thousands of good citizens, who are making their livelihood by operating motion-picture houses of a respectable character.

These men have not been assailed by local authorities; their honesty of purpose has never been questioned, yet their business interests are being placed in jeopardy. And for what?

There have been hints as to the real reason of the law, but they are only hints and involve an intricate and subtle system of intrigue. Meanwhile many exhibitors, manufacturers and exchange men declare they will oppose the enforcement of the law until a more plausible explanation is given for its passage than any that has been presented hitherto.

PLANS FOR DAYTON CONVENTION

Preparations for the fourth national convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America to be held in Dayton, Ohio, on July 6 are now nearly complete. The Hotel Algonquin will be used as convention headquarters, and it is here that visitors and others will obtain their badges. The meeting itself will be held in Memorial Hall, where there is 30,000 feet of floor space.

The social side of the program is also being taken care of by the eight committees of the Dayton League. The National Military Home, the Wright Aviation Field, the National Cash Register Plant and other places of interest will be open for inspection.

First Gun Fired in Repeal Fight

Cleveland Photoplay Exhibitors’ Board of Trade Appeals to Ohio Exhibitors to Declare Themselves on the Censorship Question—All Exhibitors Urged to Fill Out Questions on Second Bulletin at Once

OFFICIAL BULLETIN No. 2
MR. EXHIBITOR!

1. How many complaints have you had from patrons regarding so-called “im- moral” pictures since last November?

2. In your judgment (from a moral standpoint only) what has been the per- centage of improvement in motion pictures during the past two or three years?

3. Have you ever been in favor of legalized censorship?

4. Have you ever voted for it in convention?

5. Do you favor the present Ohio State Censor Law?

6. Have you read the bill?

7. Do you understand it?

8. Do you favor the repeal of the Ohio State Censor Law?

9. Do you receive the weekly bulletins of “cut-outs” ordered by the National Board of Censorship?

10. Do you approve of their work?

11. If the present Censor Law is not repealed, are you willing to pay your share of the increased cost of office work, expressage, clerical, and tax fees?

Please answer all questions Yes or No. You may add further details on a separate sheet.

To Cleveland Photoplay Exhibitors’ Board of Trade:

Gentlemen: As a bona-fide exhibitor doing business in Ohio, I wish to be recorded as above on the questions submitted.

Yours Fraternally,

Name: ____________________________

Theatre: __________________________

Town: ____________________________

Cleveland, Ohio, April 28.

THE CLEVELAND PHOTOPLAY EXHIBITORS’ BOARD OF TRADE has made the first move in the campaign for the repeal, by petition of the voters, of the Ohio State Censorship Law.

Two bulletins have been prepared and these will be sent to every exhibitor in the state of Ohio. One is an appeal to the individual exhibitor for his support in the censorship fight. The other is a series of questions which will enable each exhibitor to put on record his views on censorship of all kinds.

The importance of this opportunity should not be overlooked by a single exhibitor in the Buckeye State. The first is that it has been made to test the sentiment of the exhibitors on this question, and it will be a wide-open, honest test.

No exhibitor, in justice to himself, can afford to neglect answering the questions on bulletin No. 2 of the board of trade.

THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS joins with the Cleveland Exhibitors’ Board of Trade in urging every Ohio exhibitor to join in the fight for the law’s repeal.

Both the motion picture industry and censorship cannot survive. Either the motion picture industry must crush censorship or censorship will annihilate the industry. There is a place for every exhibitor in this fight and every exhibitor should be in his place.

Read the questions in the box accompanying this article, read and digest the appeal of the board of trade printed below, and then act.

"Cleveland Photoplay Exhibitors’ Board of Trade.

"Secretary’s Office, 235 Columbus Building, Cleveland, Ohio.

"(Official Bulletin No. 1)

"AN INJURY TO ONE IS THE CONCERN OF ALL

"Dear Fellow Exhibitor:

"This is a personal appeal to you and it deserves your immediate attention. Don’t lay it aside, for every exhibitor must be recorded Yes or No.

"Every film exchange in Ohio is co-operating with us and we want a full and free expression as to where you stand on the question.

"The present odious Ohio censorship law was enacted without the slightest demand from the public.

"No opportunity was ever granted to the film industry to oppose its enactment. On all legislative matters a hearing is always granted. It was not so in this case. The Ohio censorship law was railroaded through the legislature at the behest of certain individuals and the trade representatives’ requests for a hearing were totally ignored.

"The provisions of the law are mandatory. There is not a 'permis- sible' section in it. Section 3 makes it mandatory on the part of the board of censors to censor all motion picture films to be exhibited in the State of Ohio. To censor means to put through the machine.

"To pass a reel without putting it through the machine is a dishonest act, by a state official, for services not rendered. An arbitrary tax of $100 (one dollar) must be collected on every reel, no matter how many copies of the same reel are released by the same company. That is legalized graft and the exhibitor will not hesitate to tell you that means you. We are not fighting this battle for the exchanges. They can pay the tax and add it to your bill, and you know that is what they will do. You would do it if you were in the exchange business yourself.

"Can you stand a raise in your film service expense to pay this exorbitant tax? You have been raising films for five months while the Ohio Censor Board has been held up by the courts. That film is clean. It was passed by the National Board of Censors; a body of nearly one hundred conscientious church workers, who pass the films before release.

"Why should three people again go over the work of one hundred for the sake of collecting a fee? It is legal- ized graft on the part of the state. The motion picture patrons of Ohio do not need this law; it will cause delay in shipments if they censor as the law demands. If they don’t, it simply means a censor-for-revenue-only law. It will lead to confusion as much as any city, town or village can still claim the right to choose their own local censors.

"Read the law. One thousand family theatres in Ohio have exhibited over twenty thousand reels to seventeen million patrons since the Ohio censors were stopped and not a single complaint has been entered with the authorities, though there are plenty of laws governing ‘bad pictures,’ so-called, upon the statutes now.

"You have entertained thousands of patrons, many of them minors, since November at your theatre. How many complaints have you had? Don’t let the un-American censorship advocates put you on the back and say it is ‘the other fellow.’ If the ‘other fellow’ shows bad pictures, the present laws will take care of him and you will not be affected. The family man will ‘cen- sor’ his box-office quickly.

"The ‘five per cent of ‘fearful men’ who do not submit their pictures to the National Board for approval are coming in line. Now, please, for your future good and ours, let us know at once just where you stand.

"EVERY state has its full complement of hungry grifters watching Ohio and waiting to pounce upon the helpless exhibitor’s pocketbook.

"They have forced us to fight and the battle is on. It is your fight and I am sure every trade journal shows the attacks by politicians and grifters all over this country and it makes the exhibitor feel as though his investment was no longer a safe one.

"Let us clear the air by a test in Ohio and let every exhibitor register his opinion. Please read carefully the enclosed questions and give us a.

Censors Start in Pennsylvania June 1

Sex Plays and Sacrilege Barred, Says Announcement of Plans—Will War on Lurid Posters, Too

Harrisburg, Pa., April 28. The examination of motion pictures by the Pennsylvania State Board of Motion Picture Censors will begin on June 1, according to the recent announcement made by J. Louis Breitinger, chief censor. Mrs. E. C. Niver will assist Mr. Breitinger in the work. Their plans and rules were formally announced at the same time.

Sex plays will be absolutely barred. Everything sacrilegious will be banned. The purposes of the board, as formulated in its announcement, is “to restrict the motion pictures to such as would afford clean entertainment or amusement and to eliminate everything which would tend to debase or inflame the mind to improper or false standards of conduct.”

Likewise, “the board will endeavor to banish posters or handbills or other advertising matter concerning motion pictures where the same are sensational and misleading.”

Other regulations are:
Barrooms, drinking and drunkenness. These have a legitimate place in the motion picture drama. The objection, however, lies in the proportion they may bear to all other scenes. If the dramatic emphasis is not such scenes and gives them realism and local color, and if used with discretion, they may be permitted.

Prolonged passionate love scenes. If these experiences are treated truthfully, sympathetically and artistically, no objections will be made to their being shown.

Costuming, tights and insufficient clothing. Frank exposure of the person may be less objectionable than exposure which is partly hidden and partly revealed.

Women drinking and smoking. The board disapproves of showing a good woman doing what would be considered a bad thing by the society of which she forms a part.

All films must bear the inscription, “Approved by the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors.” Patrons of motion picture houses are invited to complain to the board as to the unfitness of pictures. Such complaints must give the name, address and occupation of the complainant, with the title of the picture and the place where it is shown.

Exchanges Aid Children’s Matinees

Omaha Supply Men Donate Reels Free, and Exhibitors Give Half the Proceeds to Playground Fund

Omaha, Neb., April 28. Film distributors, cooperating with the social service board, child welfare league and other such organizations, have arranged for special children’s afternoons at a number of the picture houses of this city. The programs of pictures are selected by Mrs. Paul Getelman, head of the social service board.

The reels are furnished free by the film companies and the theater proprietors give one-half of the proceeds of the show toward a fund to build playgrounds about the city.

The plan was put in operation about two weeks ago. T. F. Sturgess, head of the social service board; E. U. Graff, superintendent of the city’s public schools and Frank Denison, head of the Young Men’s Christian Association, met with Manager E. R. Pearson of the General Film Company, and discussed the plan. Mr. Pearson readily agreed. Several days later there was another meeting, when the program was selected.

The censor committee selected such pictures as “Skiing in Switzerland,” “The Budding of the Flower,” and others of a like nature, with several choice comedies. The bookers at the General Film Company helped in arranging the program.

The first Saturday afternoon the show was put on at one of the houses supplied by the General Film Company. The plan had been specially mentioned in the daily newspapers and met with instant success. Children, many of them being single and alone, and with their nurses and fathers, flocked to the theater and the first day’s income promised well for the playgrounds.

The second Saturday, besides the General Film Company’s film, the Mutual had one show in one of the houses it supplies, and the other film companies are arranging to follow the example.

The feature in the advertising is that the programs are the very best that can be offered a child; that they are educational as well as humorous, all arranged on a scientific basis.

ARTHUR-FRENZEL.
"YOU ask me how the exhibitor can advertise to the best advantage?

"Well, newspaper advertising has always been my strong point. The newspaper is as valuable an advertising medium as the exhibitor can have.

"But it isn't worth the while of the average American exhibitor to advertise in the newspapers as long as he changes his program every day."

Mr. Williams's remarks didn't come in just that order, and he paused between them to illustrate his points with incidents from his own experience. But considering the revolutionary character of his criticism of the daily change of program—which is the hallmark of the American motion picture theatre—his last observation cannot be given too much prominence.

Not many exhibitors in the United States need to be introduced to J. D. Williams, formerly of Sydney, Australia. His personal acquaintance and friends among the exhibitors are scattered across the country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific Coast. Those who don't know him personally know him by reputation.

At present Mr. Williams is New York manager for W. W. Hodkinson, at 110 West Fortieth street, New York City, and is handling the Bosworth productions of Jack London's works.

And Mr. Williams's reputation is that of a man who has done big, spectacular things in filmdom and has made fortunes by doing them. He deals in big ideas; his mind is geared to them. It is one of Mr. Williams's methods that if an idea is worth carrying out at all, it is worth carrying out to the limit of your purse and your energy.

Another of his axioms is that nothing succeeds like advertisement. If intelligently and wisely used.

Still a third is that the daily change of program is a snare and a delusion—it cultivates an unhealthy state of mind in the patrons of a theatre, because it invites them to glut themselves with something new every day. It is, says Mr. Williams, wasteful prodigality on the part of the exhibitor, for when he gets a particularly good picture, it vanishes from his house after a single day, before he has half exhausted its profit-making possibilities.

Which brings us back to the beginning of our story.

"RUNNING a new program of pictures every day is, to my mind, the most serious mistake that the American exhibitor makes," repeated Mr. Williams. "It's bad enough with the regular program pictures, but it seems positively foolhardy to put on a three, four, five or six reel feature for a single day, and then cast it aside to make room for another feature. And yet that is what most of the exhibitors all over the country are now doing with features."

"It's such a state of affairs that practically closes to the exhibitor who permits it, what is probably the most valuable advertising avenue he has—the newspaper. Besides which, it neutralizes the benefits of the word-of-mouth advertising that any good feature will get from those who have already seen it.

"Of what use, for instance, is it to an exhibitor to advertise in the columns of a morning newspaper that 'The Longshoreman's Revenge' will be shown at the Blank Theatre today? It would be all right if everyone who read the advertisement and wanted to see the picture acted upon it as soon as he had read it.

"But nobody does that. Perhaps Mr. and Mrs. Jones can't go to the theatre to-night; they have a dinner engagement. So they plan to take in the picture to-morrow night. Around to the theatre they go the next night."

"Why, 'The Longshoreman's Revenge' isn't here!" exclaims Mrs. Jones.

"What's become of the picture that was advertised in yesterday's paper?"

"They don't advertise in the newspapers any more," they answer at the box-office.

"That was here yesterday," is the reply.

"What? Don't you keep a picture like that here more than one day?"

"No, ma'am."

"AND what the exhibitor ought to do after a conversation like that is to sign a pledge, swearing off the daily change of program forever. Every advertisement on a one-day picture means that fifty per cent or more of prospective patrons whom his advertisement has reached are disappointed because they miss the picture."

"The theatre-going public, you see, are accustomed to the methods of the legitimate theatre. They know, when they read the advertisement of a particular show at a two-dollar house, that they can see that show at any time, we'll say, within two weeks. They know it will be there when they get ready to go. And very few of them are ready to jump at an advertisement, like a cat at a mouse, the moment they spy it.

"The only other alternative that the exhibitor has, therefore, is to carry a general, standing ad of his theatre in the columns of a newspaper."

"That's all very well, but such an advertisement isn't one, two, three for value to the exhibitor compared with the advertisement of a particular feature of some particular merit. It's the specific article that counts, not the advertisement of the house. And it is the possibility in the advertising of the particular picture that the exhibitor loses by his daily change of program."
"Let me give you a practical illustration of the result of the daily change in program, compared with the weekly or bi-weekly change, as practised in Australia and in most of the European countries.

I made an experiment with the daily change in Sydney for my own benefit. I was anxious to test the two plans and find out for myself which was the right one.

I selected two of our theatres in Sydney. In one of them I changed the pictures every day. In the other the usual rule was followed of changing them twice a week. The theatres were almost side by side. Both had exactly the same conditions to meet. I exercised scrupulous care to pick as good a program for one house as for the other.

"When the experiment was over I found that the twice-a-week house had played to two-thirds greater business, consistently, than the theatre where a different program was offered every day.

"I regard this test as conclusive evidence that the exhibitor who changes his program every day weakens himself, diminishes the strength of every picture on his program and the strength of the program as a whole, and fails to give his audience, or, more properly, his patrons, the satisfaction they would get from the longer run.

"Let me tell you why I consider newspaper advertising valuable to the exhibitor," resumed Mr. Williams after a brief pause.

"There is, of course, the obvious advantage that he is appealing to every reader of the newspaper in which he advertises. But there is the even greater advantage that he raises his business to the level and dignity of the so-called legitimate theatre, the operas, the concert, by advertising on the same scale, in the same medium, as these forms of amusements, which command the attention, admiration and respect of the general public.

"Moreover, the exhibitor ensures courteous and considerate treatment from the newspapers when he advertises in their columns. He will be certain of personal attention from the newspaper's reviewers; of legitimate publicity; and when a question arises that affects the exhibitor or the industry he will find the newspapers disposed to give his side a fair and just hearing, and to argue in his favor when he is in the right.

"I do not mean, of course, that he would be treated unjustly or persecuted if he did not advertise. But advertising is regarded to-day as a certain criterion of the importance of a business, that the man who does not advertise is apt to be overlooked or neglected as being of no consequence, as having no interests that are worth serious consideration from anyone.

"If I have practised what I'm preaching," concluded Mr. Williams. Practised it, not in inches, but in pages. Many a week the advertising bill for our theatres in Sydney was $2,000 and more.

"And every cent of it was money well spent. The investment was worth while."

Detroit Operators' Head Resigns

Branch is Succeeded by McDonald as President of Local No. 199—Membership of 80 Recorded—Independents Negotiate

Ray Branch has recently resigned his position as president of Operators' Local No. 199, of Detroit, having given up his position as operator at the Northwestern Theatre to give all of his time to inspection work at the Universal exchange, which is in his charge. He is succeeded as president of the local by John McDonald, operator at the Liberty Theatre.

Other officers of the local, elected each six months, are: R. V. Moulton, vice-president and financial and corresponding secretary; Max Ruben, recording secretary; James P. Murtagh, treasurer.

The union has had a struggle to gain even toleration, but under a safe and careful leadership is now being looked upon with more favor. It has a membership of 80 and has the opposition of an independent operators' union which numbers about forty members.

Many of these would join the big local if the Independents could be taken in in a body, but this the local will not do, as some of the Independents are not up to the qualifications required of the union and some of them are receiving below the minimum of the union scale, which is $13.50. The initiation fee, $25, keeps some of them out. The union will receive and act on the independents individually, that the management's interests are served.

Mr. Branch was with the Northwestern Theatre six years and saw it grow from a money-losing proposition to one of the most profitable residence district theatres in the city, under the management of its owner, Charles Seestadt.

IMPORTANT RAMO CHANGES

Changes for the betterment and enlargement of its interests have occurred in the Ramo Films, Inc. Homer H. Snow has taken the direct management of the company. C. Lang Cobb, Jr., manager of sales and publicity, becomes chief adviser and member of the board of directors. The company has been recapitalized at $200,000, the stock has been allotted and the money paid in.

Mr. Cobb recently concluded the best way for the manufacturer to protect his best interests was to become his own distributor. Consequently, on a recent trip covering 6,500 miles in fourteen days and visiting thirteen cities, Mr. Cobb arranged for the installation of Ramo Feature booking offices at Denver, Kansas City, Des Moines, Minneapolis, Montreal, Indianapolis and Atlanta. On April 27 he opened the first office at Des Moines, Iowa, and placed in charge P. J. Hall, who opened and managed the Kansas City offices of the Mutual Film Corporation and is widely known among the exhibitors and trade through his connections with that company and the W. H. Swanson Film Exchange of Denver and Kansas City.

Mr. Cobb left for Montreal, April 27, where he opened an office at 41 Catherine stret, East. The Denver offices will be in charge of J. C. Butts, late manager for Goldgate Feature Service, with offices in the Nassau Building. Mr. Butts will commence his bookings on May 4. On the same day, Messrs. Bacon and Nolan, of the World's Leader Features Company of 921 Walnut street, Kansas City, Mo., will hang out their busy day flag and start booking Ramo Features.

Ramo Films, Inc., have their own studio at 102 West 101st street, New York City.
"Let Producers Fight Censorship"

By J. W. LOONEY

Pittsburgh Exhibitors "Put It Up" to Manufacturers—If Film Makers Will Lead the Battle Against Censors, Exhibitors Will Co-operate

Pittsburgh, Pa., April 28.

THE life of the Pittsburgh exhibitor is no bed of roses, as F. J. Herrington, President Rittenhouse of the Motion Picture Protective Association, and a hundred others will testify.

Between the city police and Mayor Armstrong, the clergy of Pittsburgh, and the Department of Labor and Industry at Harrisburg, the exhibitors have been tossed from one wave of agitation to another, until most of them feel as if they had just finished a stormy sea voyage.

Not that any of them are ready to give up the fight. Far from it! The battle with the Department of Labor and Industry over the new building rules that have been issued has only just begun.

And this is the main battle ahead for the Pittsburghers at present. It is practically the unanimous opinion of the exhibitors of this city that if the new building code is enforced it will drive from one-third to one-half of the exhibitors out of business.

Until this question is settled they feel that all other matters must take second place.

Censorship Up to Producers

Censorship, needless to say, is an issue in Pittsburgh, as it is in or will very soon be throughout Pennsylvania, when the new State Board of Censors begins their activities. But to the Pittsburgh exhibitor it is not the "burning question." Far from it! The question is how to defend their pictures.

Moreover, the Pittsburghers feel, and with justice, that the censorship fight should be waged by the manufacturers. They are willing to co-operate with the producers, but they refuse to bear the burden and heat of a battle which is primarily a manufacturers' battle, unless they see a much clearer disposition on the part of the manufacturers to make a fight than they have yet shown.

Let it be understood that the Pittsburghers are far from indifferent on the subject of censorship.

Exhibitors Denounce Censorship

At one of the late meetings of the exhibitors when the question of censorship was raised F. J. Herrington, one of the live-wire exhibitors, had some pertinent things to say about censorship. He declared that "the exhibitors" were to submit tameley to the censorship of films it would be the beginning of the Russianization of America for, he contended, the censorship of the film would open the way for the censorship of the press and finally of the private actions of the citizens.

President Rittenhouse, of the Motion Picture Protective Association, endorsed Herrington's statements and spoke along the same lines.

Discussions Frequent

Censorship discussions are held frequently by the exhibitors and exchange men of Pittsburgh and vicinity. The censorship board, appointed last January by Governor John K. Tener, of Pennsylvania, consists of J. Breitinger, of Philadelphia, chief motion picture censor, and Mrs. E. C. Noyles, of Charleroi, Pa., Governor Tener's home, as his assistant. Under this act the chief censor is paid $1,500 and his assistant $1,200 a year, and they have authority to pass on films, views and pictures. The manufacturers pay a fee to the state for each film passed on. For the exhibition of pictures not approved the exhibitor is subject to a fine.

In addition to this state censorship, Mayor Joseph G. Armstrong, of Pittsburgh, has begun a complete city censorship. Acting on suggestion of the mayor the public safety department commenced a crusade against the exhibition of "objectionable" motion pictures. Police Superintendent W. N. Mathews issued instructions to all secret service officers to be on the lookout for all "objectionable" motion pictures, and to report immediately any instance of its being shown. The object of the department to permit the patrolmen and detectives to spend their time in motion picture shows looking for possible infringements of the rules, but they will have to form their opinions as to whether or not a picture film is objectionable by the indications outside of the theatre—its title, the pictures used in billing the film and similar "surface" indications.

Ask League to Co-operate

The Motion Picture Exhibitors League has been asked to co-operate with the department to improve the moral tone of the pictures shown. This league expressed itself ready to do at any time, only asking that it be informed of any cases where improper pictures were shown.

The exhibitors still are awaiting this information.

Here an organization of ministers and laymen, known as the Pittsburgh Christian Social Service Union, stepped in with an additional and enlarged plan. It was proposed that a board of censorship for Pittsburgh be appointed. This board would pass on all pictures before they are exhibited in the city.

All pictures not censored, or disapproved after censoring, would be barred from exhibition in any theatre in the city under penalty of a fine.

Mayor Flouts Ministers

The city administration apparently did not take kindly to suggestion as nothing has been done to realize the plan of the ministers. Orders were issued, however, to the police and detective divisions to be on the lookout for suggestive or obscene posters advertising films. This order was a part of a general order instructing the police to clean up criminal poolrooms, stop the sale of obscene literature and indecent post-cards. It was the last straw.

The cap-sheaf of censorship ran wild, however, when an order was tentatively issued compelling motion picture theatre owners to seat women and girls on one side of their houses and men and boys on the other. Men and women entering together might be seated together—ran the order. This order originated as a suggestion to Mayor Armstrong by H. A. Connaughy, immigration secretary of the Y.M.C.A.

Mayor Armstrong sent Mr. McConaughy's recommendation to Director of Public Safety Charles A. Hubbard with instructions to see that it was followed out. Then came the order to the motion picture men.

This proved too much for the exhibitors. The breaking point had been reached. A committee of exhibitors and exchange men again called on Mayor Armstrong and a conference was arranged. The city officials were told plainly that the motion picture men were in a legitimate business and expected to be treated as other business men.

Exhibitors Demand Fair Play

The city officials were told that there was no objection to sensible censorship and regulation for safety and comfort of patrons, but that the motion picture men did not intend to be made the playthings or subjects for experimentation for the reformer and crank in Pittsburgh. The new plans were not pushed very hard after that.

One film has been barred from the city. "The House of Bondage," a state-right film. This was prohibited by the civilian side to the safety bureau, Arch Mackrell,
A BUILDING LAW TANGLE
By C. B. TAYLOR

Mitchell H. Mark asks suspension of Eight-foot Alley Rule, as in the Case of Remodelled Olympic—Aldermen Are Puzzled—Theatre-owner Declares House Will Be Safer if Ordinance Is Violated.

BUFFALO, N. Y., April 28.

Since the board of aldermen amended the ordinance by wiping out section 192 of chapter 12 so far as the remodeled Lafayette Theatre, now the Olympic, is concerned, and permitting that theatre to do business in direct violation of laws designed to safeguard the lives of theatre audiences, other theatre promoters and companies are now coming to the front with theatre plans that also violate the building ordinances.

The new companies say: "If the Olympic Theatre Company can proceed along lines that menace the lives of their audiences, why cannot other companies do the same thing?"

How can the Common Council exempt the Olympic Theatre from the entire ordinance and compel others to spend money complying with them?

These are a few of the questions that the more serious-minded aldermen are asking since Col. Ward notified the board that the Mitchell H. Mark Palace Theatre Company had filed plans for a new theatre at 327 Main street that did not comply with the ordinances, the eight-foot open-air courts on each side of the theatre being omitted.

The aldermen decided to refer the matter to the ordinance committee. Some of them declare they can foresee the time when the city would be dotted all over with theatre fire-traps if the halt was not called at once. Many applications for permission to construct motion picture theatres reach the Common Council every week. If the eight-foot courts can be eliminated, just so much less land will be needed by these theatres.

Mitchell H. Mark appeared before the Aldermanic Ordinance Committee and urged that he be not required to live up to the letter of the building ordinances adopted for the protection of theatre audiences. Mr. Mark claimed at the meeting that, according to the plans filed for his theatre, the audience would be better protected than it would be if the eight-foot open-air courts were included. A representative of Esenwein & Johnson, the architects who drew the plans, made the same claim.

"There has been a lot of criticism already," said one of the aldermen, "because an effort has been made to suspend the ordinances so the Olympic could continue with its construction."

MR. Mark said his company had given far more to the city in the way of making the theatre safer than was asked in return. It was shown by the plans that if the present laws were lived up to, a part of the eight-foot court required on each side of the theatre would result only in a dead pocket.

Mr. Mark explained he believed the theatre's plans would obviate this dead pocket and make the theatre safer.

"This does not come within the same class as the Olympic Theatre," said Councillor Wimmer, who is an architect and examined the plans for the new theatre. "It merely provides for a suspension of the ordinances on a technical point, which will make the theatre safer than it would be if built according to the present laws."

"There will be the eight-foot courts on each side of the new Palace Theatre, and it will simply eliminate a pocket at the end of the court; whereas if the ordinances were followed people would get into this pocket and find themselves up against a dead wall."

The committee announced it would probably report out the Palace suspension so it could be acted on at the last meeting of the board.

THE new Palace Theatre, with a seating capacity of 1,500 on one floor and costing $100,000, will open September 1. This theatre is being built by Mr. Mark, who also controls the Strand Theatre in New York City at Forty-seventh and Broadway. Two of the features of the house will be a $15,000 organ and a 15-piece orchestra.

The policy of the house will be the showing exclusively of Broadway and other big features, with admission prices of 15, 25 and 50 cents. The theatre will be under the personal supervision of Mr. Harold Edel, manager of the Buffalo Strand Theatre. Speaking of the policy of the new theatre, Mr. Mark said:

"It is my intention to take all of the big productions out of the Strand Theatre in New York and bring them to Buffalo to be shown at the Palace. The opening attraction will probably be Dustin Farnum in 'The Spoilers,' the Selig nine-reel feature which opened at the Strand, New York. This will be followed by Jack London's 'The Sea Wolf' and John Barleycorn."

"I believe that at the present time there is a demand in Buffalo for bigger and better features, especially the current dramatic successes. I believe that the public will be willing to pay the increased price asked for these big productions and I shall endeavor to bring only the best to Buffalo."

KANSAS CITY THEATRES MERGE

Standard Chain and Richards & Flynn Houses Come Under One Management by Recent Deal—Eight Theatres Affected.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., April 26.

The virtual consolidation of eight of the largest picture houses in Kansas City, Mo., was announced in that city last week. A new corporation, known as the Triangle Amusement Company, was formed to take over the Broadmoore Theatre, Thirty-fourth street and Broadway, one of the better-known houses in the residence district. It has as its officials the heads of both the Standard Amusement Company and Richards & Flynn of that city.

The Standard company owned the Alamo Theatre, Thirty-fourth and Main streets; the Palace Theatre, 928 Main street; the Tenth Street Theatre, 15 West Tenth street, and the Twelfth Street Theatre, 211 East Twelfth street. Richards & Flynn owned the Wonderlan t Theatre, 211 East Twelfth street; the Richlynn Theatre, 215 West Twelfth street, and the Subway Theatre, 809 Walnut street.

The new company organized to operate the Broadmoore named the following officers: E. E. Richards (Richards & Flynn), president and treasurer; B. H. Lappé (President, Standard Amusement Company), vice-president, and Winthrop Allen (Secretary, Standard Amusement Company) secretary. The house will be managed by Nugent J. Flynn (Richards & Flynn).

No announcement was made of the consideration. It was purchased from 'thos.' and started cooking many. The new owners will not change the policy of the house, but will redecorate and partially rebuild the interior.

TURNING A "HOODOO" INTO A WINNER

THE Walnut Theatre, Louisville, Ky., is meeting with considerable success in its experiment with motion pictures at twenty-five cents. The Broadway Amusement Company, which is operating this house, is not only trying what is an innovation for Louisville, but ventured into a "hoodoo" theatre, the Walnut having gotten that sort of a reputation after the legitimate, stock companies and vaudeville syndicates had failed there.

The best class of feature films being presented, and a large Wurlitzer orchestra is one of the features of the theatre. Jack London's "Sea Wolf" attracted large crowds during the past week.

One of the coming films is "Lucille Love," a Universal feature. This is obtaining a large amount of free advertising through co-operation with a local newspaper, which is running the story in serial form. Recently this newspaper distributed throughout Louisville and the vicinity 100,000 posters advertising the serial and incidentally the film. The Lucille Love series will require fifteen weeks to complete.

A SUNDAY SCHOOL MATINEE

THE Broadway Theatre, Detroit, Mich., is again open as a picture house under the management of R. C. Whitney.

Mr. Whitney is the owner of the Detroit Opera House, which plays Klaw & Erlanger and other first-class attractions, and the Broadway is Mr. Whitney's first venture into the motion picture business, though he has been in the theatrical business for years. The Broadway reopened with "Traffic in Souls" which ran two weeks, and has on this week and next "Life in the Philippines."

On May 3, the Universal release, "Samson" will be offered. Street-car fronts and newspapers are the chief means of advertising.

A special matinee for Sunday school children, for which tickets will be distributed through the Sunday school superintendents, will be one of the means of popularizing "Samson."

Two performances daily are given.

Theatre and having printed on the reverse the request for specific information as to patrons' likes and dislikes as shown in the accompanying cut.

The idea has caught on and many valuable suggestions are received. The scheme also gives an opportunity for circularizing just the people whom it is desired to reach with a certain play.

ADVICE ON ADVERTISING

"FEATURE FACTS," the monthly house organ of the Casino Feature Film Company, 2211 Dime Bank Building, Detroit, Mich., contains this bit of excellent advice on advertising from the same source:

"Getting a 'big flash' in front of your theatre does not necessarily mean covering your entire front with a lot of advertising matter. You can obtain a better and bigger 'flash' by the judicious display of a few posters than by covering your entrance so that it looks like an advertisement fence.

"Neatness is the keynote of successful advertising."

GETTING THE WOMEN'S O. K.

By a clever bit of diplomacy Manager Schappell, of the Colonial Theatre in Madison, squelched all opposition to the presentation of "The Traffic in Souls" in Madison and packed his house.

Previous to the public presentation of this photoplay, Manager Schappell invited all of the women's clubs and various other organizations to pass upon the picture at a private exhibition and agreed to abide by their decision as to whether or not the production was fit to be run in Madison.

The women were unanimous in passing the picture and the result was that they gave it such thorough advertising amongst their friends that the house was packed all during the run.

DOES THIS WORK? TRY IT!

THE Monarch Theatre, managed by Sam Bloom, one of the popular managers of Winnipeg, Canada, has inaugurated an original (to Winnipeg at least) idea.

This consists of giving all purchasers of admission tickets a card for each sale bearing a large capital letter. The card states that the first person sending in cards with letters which exactly spell "Monarch Theatre" gets $50.

One fifty-dollar bill has already been given out and the idea has caught on and patrons are taking a very keen interest in the contest, for that is what it really seems like.

Certain it is that a lot of extra business is being done and the excellent shows are making friends for the house, which runs Universal.
HEARD IN THE LOBBIES

F. W. PAPKE, of Campbell, Minn., has just opened a motion picture theatre in that city. He was in Minneapolis recently visiting film agencies and completing arrangements for the equipment of his new theatre.

The stage at the Winona, Minn., opera house is being graced by "real" actors during the spells that the so-called "legit" shows are not booked at the house. O. F. Burg ingame, the manager, is filling up all open time with motion picture shows.

Dreamland theatre building at Klein, Mont., burned to the ground recently with a loss of $25,000 fully covered by insurance. The building was owned by the Bull Mountain Trading Company.

Frank Bonk, of the Empire Theatre, Two Rivers, Wis., has bought the Iris Theatre in Milwaukee.

EXHIBITORS PLAN FEATURE CONTROL

Several motion picture theatre proprietors have incorporated the Kentucky Photoplay Feature Club, with a capitalization of $10,000.

The incorporators are: L. J. Dittmar and Judge Allan Kenney, Louisville: L. H. Ramsey, Lexington; Sherman Arn, Maysville; George A. Fleich, Owensboro, Rodney C. Davis, Paducah, and Charles O. Brown, Middleboro.

The first three incorporators were chosen president, vice-president and secretary-treasurer, respectively.

The purpose of the organization is to control the feature film service of Kentucky, Alabama, Georgia, and Tennessee, and leading theatres in both states will be supplied.

Already six theatres in Louisville, the Majestic, Orpheum, Columbia, Casino, Princess and the Alhambra, have joined.

Patent Notes

Several curious patents have recently been issued by the United States Patent Office. Among them are the following: 1,093,948, which is a divisional patent, was filed in 1909, and all five claims allowed are interesting. Only the first two claims are necessary to cite here. They are:

1. The process of making prints in natural colors which comprises making a positive through a Joly-McDonough screen, exposing through said positive a superposed film, which is developable by the bichromate process and which has a Joly-McDonough screen formed upon or within it, developing said film, and transferring said superposed film and positive to paper.

2. The process of making prints in natural colors, which comprises making a positive through a Joly-McDonough screen, exposing through said positive a superposed film which is developable by the bichromate process and which has a Joly-McDonough screen formed upon or within it, developing said film, and transferring said superposed film and positive film side up to paper.

The two following patents for shutters are more interesting than they at first seem to be, if they are considered according to their titles only. 1,094,147 (claim 1). In a shutter of the character described the combination with a casing having an exposure window through which light is focussed, of a substantially rectangular holder having a number of spaced openings therethrough, said holder being supported in the casing so as to be reciprocated, whereby each opening will consecutively register with the exposure window for passage of light therethrough, and said holder being adapted to carry a number of transparent plates, a drive-shaft, and means connected to the drive-shaft and to the holder for in-parting a reciprocatory movement, the holder and also for intermittently checking the movement of the holder when the drive-shaft is rotated.

The first claim of Patent No. 1,094,148 reads as follows:

In a shutter of the character described, the combination with a casing having an exposure window, of a plurality of brackets, each carrying a transparent plate, said brackets being pivoted in the casing so as to be swung for intermittently registering the transparent plates with the exposure window, a drive-shaft, and means operatively connected to the drive-shaft and engaging the brackets for intermittently swinging the brackets in succession to register the transparent plates correspondingly with the exposure window when the drive-shaft is rotated.

BUFFALO EXHIBITORS HOLD SMOKER

The Buffalo exhibitors, Local of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, of New York state, held a smoker and luncheon at the Hotel Statler, Buffalo, on Tuesday evening, April 21, given in honor of W. A. Douque, the state secretary, who has been in the western part of the state for the past week in the interests of the state association, also the convention to be held at Grand Central Palace, New York City, June 8 to 13. The state secretary spoke at length on what the state association is doing and gave an outline of the exposition, and the Buffalo exhibitors heartily endorsed the state association in every instance. A number of applications for membership were received.

A majority of those present requested Mr. Douque to make reservations for them for the week of the exposition and convention in New York, meaning that Buffalo will send warmly double the delegates that were in attendance last year.

The committee on arrangements consisted of Mr. J. A. Pferd, Mr. P. Hoffmeister and Mr. Gettle.

GOLDBLATT REPRESENTS OPERATORS

At the amalgamation conference between representatives of Local No. 306, I. A. T. S. E., and Local No. 1 of the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union, Robert Goldblatt, president of the local, represented the operators. Through an error, it was announced that the operators' interests were looked after by Joe Bason, Dave Chavez, Simon Terr and Ralph Knasker. These men are members of Local No. 306, I. A. T. S. E.

Mr. Goldblatt was the only operators' representative present. Harold Williams, it should also be said, is a member of Local 35, I. A. T. S. E.

Campaigning in the Theatres

Motion Picture Houses Are the Scene of Exciting Political Rallies in Kansas City's Last Mayorality Campaign

Kansas City, Mo., April 27.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., has just completed a motion picture political campaign, one of the first in this country. All of the candidates for election made most of their speeches in motion picture houses, and free shows were an important feature.

The idea should be credited to Mayor Jost, whose campaign for re-election began early last fall. He rented one show-house and billed his address as a town meeting, thus harking back to the old days of the Puritan settlers when all the inhabitants gathered together in one central place to discuss local and public affairs. The mayor sent out letters to all the voters living near the show-house saying that he would appear before them to discuss the needs of that community. His address was to be preceded by several reels of both comedy and tragedy—all free.

The idea was a big success and the combination of a free show and a look at the mayor drew great crowds. It was a new thing in politics for Kansas City. The old political meetings were held in stuffy, poorly ventilated and heated halls. Politicians and men crowding about soon filled it with tobacco smoke, and for that reason many persons would not suffer the discomforts and did not attend, especially women.

But the picture-show meeting was clean. Women and men of the best class attended. And there was never a political campaign in Kansas City in which the women took such a decided stand.

The mayor got a running start on the picture-show idea. He held about fifty such before the opposition candidates began. There were four tickets against him. Three of them began hiring picture shows, paying from $30 to $60 a night for the free show offered.

The meetings were billed through the newspapers and through outdoor advertising by the candidates. In this manner each house obtained free publicity which it could not have obtained otherwise. And always the opposition was assured of a big house.

When the campaign closed it was found that the mayor and his spell-binders had spoken at about ninety picture theatres, the non-partisan citizens' ticket had spoken at forty-six and the Republican and Progressive candidates at several others.

"I know of no way in which we could have reached so many persons in such a short campaign," F. A. McGervay, secretary of the speakers' bureau of the citizens' movement, said. "Each show averaged at least three hundred voters and one ran as high as two thousand."

Exhibitors Win Censorship Victory

Detroit Board of Estimate Rejects Plan to Censor Films at Police Station—Women Appeal to Board in Vain

Detroit, Mich., April 27.

MOTION Picture Exhibitors of Detroit won a quiet victory when a committee of the Detroit Board of Estimate eliminated from the city budget an item of $43,400 for the establishment of a censorship bureau in the central police station. This was to fit up a room, provide an assistant to Police Censor Lester Potter and a machine and have all films carted to the police station, exhibited and passed upon there.

Mrs. R. H. Ashbaugh, a prominent club woman, appeared before the board committee and urged the appropriation and declared that the club women of Detroit are working hard to have a woman appointed on the police force to censor films. The committee board refused to reconsider its action.

The police commissioner has expressed himself as satisfied that the work of Police Censor Lester Potter was conscientious and efficient.

Orrin Giddings Cocks, secretary of the National Board of Censorship, of New York, addressed the Detroit Motion Picture Exhibitors' League Tuesday, April 21. He was introduced by A. J. Gillingham, head of the Detroit exchange of the General Film Company. He urged the Detroit houses to shun the fly-by-night films which have escaped the censorship of the national board. He declared that 97 per cent of the films exhibited in this country had been passed by the board and that it was the other 3 per cent that brought odium upon the motion picture business.

Speaking briefly of the proposed plan of having all films taken to a room at police headquarters for inspection, Mr. Gillingham reminded the exhibitors that disorderly houses and pawnbrokers were at present the only institutions being made to report to the police and that it was proposed to class the motion picture exhibitors with these.
THE opening of the new Elmwood Theatre at the corner of West Utica and Elmwood, on Monday evening, April 27, was an event in the local motion picture world. The theatre is one of the largest and costliest playhouses in the United States, devoted exclusively to photo- plays, with capacity of 1,600, and every device for the comfort and convenience of its patrons has been installed.

The ventilating is of sufficient capacity to renew the air every few minutes; an air-filtering device making the air absolutely pure being in use. The balcony is reached by a few steps of easy grade, making that section as desirable as any part of the theatre. The lobby is of Rossetti marble and the interior is finely decorated.

A capacity audience was in attendance on Monday evening and were enthusiastic over the beauty of the surroundings, the music and the excellent photography projected upon the screen.

Church Organist Plays

The orchestra consists of eight men, under the direction of Irving A. Tallis. A four-manual Skinner organ supplements the orchestra program. Prof. Bertram A. Forbes, who was organist at the Central Park Presbyterian Church, has assumed the position of organist.

The boxes are set directly opposite the stage, following the London arrangement and are furnished with large easy chairs. The new Elmwood Theatre will use the General Film Company service.

The rumor that the Star, Teck and Majestic are planning to run motion pictures this summer, has created some comment among local exhibitors. When asked what the local men would do to combat this situation of added competition, Manager Edel, of the Strand, said:

"There is nothing to do to offset the situation. There is too much booking in the open market. Local houses cannot handle all the material which feature men are offering, and they must place these films somewhere. They find a solution in the local legitimate houses."

Mr. Sherry has been in Toronto to arrange for the opening of the new Hippodrome Theatre, owned by the Shea Amusement Company. It is rumored that he will later manage the new Hippodrome Theatre in Buffalo, which will soon be opened by the Shea Company.

The new offices of the Victor Film Company, at 35 Church street, Buffalo, are now completed and present an up-to-date appearance. Manager Hopkins recently gave a private exhibition of "Samson" at the Family Theatre, which was attended by a large audience of local exhibitors.

It is rumored that the Green Features, Inc., will establish an office in Buffalo. Mr. Cohen, of that company, was in Buffalo last week and gave a private view of "A Modern Mephisto" and "Vampires of the Night" at the Strand Theatre. The first will be shown in Buffalo at the Allendale Theatre.

II. M. Warner, of Warner's Features, Inc., New York City, was in town recently looking over the local field and consulting with Manager Chalkin of the local branch at 35 West Street. Manager Chalkin reports a great demand for "Zingo," the big four-part feature of this company.

Post-Lenten Business Booms

Mr. E. H. Peterson, of the Wintergarden Theatre, in Jamestown, N. Y., was in Buffalo and reported a very noticeable awakening of business following Lent. The Wintergarden is one of Western New York's most modern theatres and enjoys great popularity with motion picture enthusiasts of Jamestown.

William H. Kneel, of Erie, Pa., owner of the Wilkey Theatre in the above city, was recently in Buffalo making a survey of the film market that is concentrated in Buffalo.

Manager E. Meadows, of the local special feature department of the General Film Company, has been working up considerable interest among the local suffrage organizations in connection with his coming release, a five-reel Pathé film, entitled "A Militant Suffragette." Manager Meadows has invited the entire membership of the Buffalo organization to be present at a private showing of the film at the Strand Theatre.

Rochester Exhibitors Visit Buffalo

During the past week Manager Edel, of the Strand Theatre, has been showing "The Three Musketeers" to capacity audiences. On Monday, May 4, and continuing to the 7th Burr McIntosh comes to the Strand in "In Missouri."

T. S. Powers, manager of the Gordon Theatre, Rochester, one of the most beautiful photoplay houses in Western New York, and who is a real wideawake exhibitor, took advantage of the Rochester Sunday closing law last week to visit Buffalo and look over the local field.

He was accompanied by W. A. Callahan, secretary of the Rochester Exhibitors' Guild, who is interested in the new Hippodrome Theatre in Rochester. Mr. Callahan stayed in Buffalo over Monday and gave some interesting details of his new house, which will open next Labor Day.

The new Hippodrome will be one of the most modern houses in the country, and will set a new pace for pictures in this part of the State.

George W. Erdman will assume the management. On the opening bill will be "Goodness Gracious!" direct from the Vitagraph Theatre, New York City.

Mr. William Rosenthal is making a tour of the State representing the exclusive feature service of the General Film Company.

"Perils of Pauline" Shown

Manager Henry Marcus, of the New Lyric Theatre, is showing "The Perils of Pauline" in connection with the Buffalo "Sunday News," which is running the series of stories each week, devoting an entire page in their special motion picture section. Manager Marcus reports a gratifying business at his popular theatre.

William Leyser, manager of the beautiful Marlowe Theatre, corner Virginia and West avenues, has "Paid in Full" on the program for his patrons this week. Manager Leyser also starts the first series of "Lucille Bliss, the Girl of Mystery," which is running the series of stories every week, devoting two pages to the feature. The Family Theatre is showing the pictures simultaneously with the publication of the stories.

Harry Graves has been appointed assistant manager of the Strand Theatre under John G. Kaliska. Mr. Graves is a new man in the motion picture business.
Some important changes have been made in Buffalo exchange circles. Dan Savage, for the last few years manager of the local branch of the Mutual Film Corporation, has resigned. He will be succeeded by M. M. Miller, of Cincinnati, where he was engaged in special work for the Mutual company. Mr. Miller is now on the job while it is announced that Mr. Savage will engage in the motion picture supply business in Buffalo.

Another change that is creating a great deal of comment is the resignation of Joe Schugert, manager of the regular service of the local branch of the General Film Company. Mr. Schugert has resigned because of the pressure of outside interests which will take up all his time in the future. A handsome loving cup was presented to Mr. Schugert by the employees.

Manager E. Meadows, of the special feature department of the General Film Company, gave a private exhibition of "A Million Bid" at the Strand Theatre on Wednesday evening at which a large audience of local exhibitors and exchange men were present. The film was well received and will be shown at the Strand for four days, May 4-7.

LEAGUE CONVENTION DATES

The following is the corrected list of convention dates of the Motion Picture Exhibitors’ League of America for the United States. These dates will positively remain as stated.

Springfield, Ill., St. Nicholas Hotel, April 28-29; Rochester, N. Y., Seneca Hotel, May 3; New York City, meeting of New York City Local, May 7; Philadelphia, Pa., Continental Hotel, May 8; state officers will meet in executive session and afterwards attend a local meeting; Baltimore, Md., grand ball, May 9; Charlotte, N. C., Stonewall Hotel, May 18, 19, 29; Tri-state convention, North and South Carolina, will meet to organize; Birmingham, Ala., Hillman Hotel, May 21-22; Alabama, Mississippi, Georgia and Tennessee to meet in Alabama. All of these states will elect new officers and delegates to attend the Dayton convention; Des Moines, Iowa, Kirkwood Hotel, May 28-29; Grand Island, Neb., June 2-3; Detroit, Mich., Hotel Fuller, June 9, 10, 11; Indiana, June 9; West Virginia, June 16-17.

POLICE DRILL FOR CAMERA

Motion picture cameras of many companies took thousands of feet recently in Jacksonville, Fla., of the police department and officials of the city. These pictures will be exhibited for the benefit of the Confederate Veteran reunion fund. Practically the entire police force were the targets for the camera, the Mayor also posing.

A NEW concern has been formed by Mr. A. H. Sawyer, under the firm name of Sawyer Incorporated, for the purpose of booking, buying, selling and producing feature films, with offices on the eighth floor of the new building at 1000 Broadway, New York City.

Mr. Sawyer is, and has been for ten years past, a prominent motion picture man. Before the opening of his screen career he was a well-known actor. Later he controlled a large number of theatres and it was he who put Kinemacolor in America, being the manager of that concern for a long time. Under his experienced and guiding hand, Sawyer Incorporated cannot help but be a big success.

The offices and projecting room of the new concern are to be elaborate and luxurious as money and brains can make them, and will be ready for occupancy and open to visitors early this month. A new idea will be brought out in the projecting-room which will be run on the style of a club. Refreshments of all kinds will be served the guests, an innovation which doubtless will double the pleasure of those witnessing Sawyer features.

In other ways the projecting-room is to be most elaborate and luxurious. The lights are to be concealed in the ceiling and the room is to be beautifully decorated, while of course easy chairs and desks will be at the service of all.

The new firm will book feature films as a vaudeville agency books its acts and actors. Feature films will be bought and sold, and as well, and besides this Sawyer Incorporated will produce their own features. Their first piece will be the initial offering of the Helco Films, "The Lightning Conductor," in seven reels, with Dustin Farnum and an all-star cast.

This will be followed by "The Bells," "The Queen of the Snugglers," "The Bush Ranger's Bride," and others, the last being one of the dramas of Australian life, corresponding to our "Westerns." Sawyer Incorporated will release a number of these pictures.

Although the offices are not complete as yet, the firm is doing a considerable business already, and the management will be glad to welcome those who wish to visit them.

STARS WILL GATHER AT CHICAGO BALL

A number of screen stars will attend the ball of the International Motion Picture Exhibitors’ League to be held in Chicago on May 14. The Coliseum and its annex have been hired for the event, which is extensively advertised and should be attended by thousands.

Among the screen favorites who will be present are: Kathryn Williams, Thomas Santschi, John Bunny, Maurice Costello, Kate Price, Anita Stewart, Julia Swayne Gordon, Marc McDermott, Frances X. Brennan, M. Fuller, Gladys Haulette, Norma Phillips, Marion Leonard, Helen Gardner, Gene Gauntlett, King Baggot, Florence Lawrence, Leah Baird, Malcomb Williams, Mary Pickford, J. Arren Kerrigan, Crane Wilbur, Thanhouser Kid and Kidlet, Broncho Billy.

EXHIBITOR MAY SUE FOR PERMIT

Louisville, Ky., April 28.

Residents of the Highlands section of this city are objecting to the erection of a new motion picture theatre building, and when Harry R. Whiteside applied for a permit to erect the proposed airdrome the city building inspector refused to issue one.

Council has been employed and suit may be instituted to force the building inspector to issue the permit.
WILL FIX ZONES FOR PICTURE HOUSES

Minneapolis Alderman Proposes Law to Limit Theatres to Business Streets of the City, Barring Them From Residential Districts—Refuse License to Theatres Located Near Public Schools

Minneapolis, Minn., April 27.

A new ordinance establishing zones in which motion picture theatres can be operated in this city will be taken up by the city council in May as a result of the opposition expressed at the council’s license committee to-day when the application for fifty motion picture theatre licenses came up.

Protests in the form of petitions and in expressions by school officials and representatives of women’s organizations so taxied the committee that Alderman James E. Mehern announced that he had been considering an ordinance for the establishment of zones within which motion picture theatres would be allowed to operate, and that he expected the ordinance would be ready for consideration within a week or two.

Opposition to the motion picture theatres came after Nathaniel Kahm had made application for a new license in order that he could rebuild the Diamond Theatre, 302 Sixth avenue N., which was destroyed by fire a few weeks ago. The theatre is directly opposite the main entrance to the Summer School, and school superintendents were on hand to voice their sentiments against its rebuilding.

Mr. Kahm stated to the committee that the theatre was not open afternoons, with the exception of Sundays, so consequently it did not interfere with the school, but City License Inspector Gray contradicted this statement.

Mrs. T. F. Kinney, of the Women’s Welfare League, then suggested an ordinance fixing the distance from schools within which picture shows will be prohibited, like the saloon regulation.

“What distance would you recommend,” Alderman M. F. McInerney inquired.

“There are some motion picture theatres in the city that should not be permitted within two miles of a school,” said Mrs. Kinney.

“Would you like to see an ordinance passed prohibiting motion picture theatres within two miles of any school?”

“Under present conditions, yes. At any rate, I think that three blocks would be a good distance.”

T. W. Gilbert, principal of the Sumner School, also protested against the granting of a motion picture license to Mrs. R. Freedman, 718 Sixth avenue N., about a half a block from the school. He asserted that while it was not one of the worst motion picture theatres, it is “cheap, dangerous and a hangout like the Kahm place was before it burned.”

“How much worse is a theatre 400 feet from a school than one a block away?” Alderman McInerny asked. “I am willing to recognize that new theatres should not be allowed next to schools but where money has been invested and the place has been running for several years, as in this case, I cannot see any good argument. Here it would be unfair to a woman who conducts the theatre.”

“A talking machine at either place would ruin the school,” declared Mr. Gilbert.

Alderman E. J. Sweeney said he had heard no complaints against the old Diamond Theatre, but he believed the motion picture shows should be put farther away from schools.

The Kahm application was denied on motion of Alderman Frank Heywood, seconded by Alderman McInerney. The action granting the application for Mrs. Freedman’s theatre half a block away was allowed to stand.

The second motion picture license was refused on the application of J. L. Ranger, 3690 Nicollet avenue. Alderman A. H. Parks said that while there are one or two stores in the immediate vicinity, the theatre is proposed in a beautiful residence district where the property owners are almost unanimously opposed to the project. He declared further that he would oppose any more motion picture theatres in the thirteenth ward.

In reply to this Mr. Ranger submitted to the committee a petition signed by residents of the ward urging favorable action and he said that if the place proved objectionable the license could be revoked. The committee, however, refused to grant it.

“Motion picture theatre men of Minneapolis should co-operate together and legitimize the business,” said Alderman Mehern in discussing the reasons for his proposed ordinance. “I think all motion picture men of the right mind will agree that such a theatre should not be operated directly across from the entrance of a public school. As it is now, the school pupil is having a hard enough time to keep his mind centered on his work, and when there is a picture-house nearby it is liable to cause a disruption in the child’s mind.”

But the film people should band together to protect their interests. Do you know that the committee’s attention was called to one of the local neighborhoods after mothers complained of the conduct of young boys and girls about the theatre? We investigated, swore out a warrant for the arrest of one of the men, and he skipped the city.

That is just one of the demoralizing conditions that exist around a theatre where the manager has no business integrity nor ambition to make his theatre a progressive one.

Of course, the majority of the motion picture theatres in this city are conducted in a thoroughly businesslike manner, but there are a few that are bad and it is for that reason that I say the theatre men should band together to legitimize their business.

In my zone bill, which I will have ready in a few weeks, I intend to allow motion picture theatres only on business streets.

I plan to make it this way in order to keep the theatres from encroaching on residential streets as they have tried to do.

“The ordinance will not be a narrow one, and will allow the theatres in the community centers as before, but they must not strike off from the main business streets of the neighborhood,” said Alderman Mehern.

NOTICE TO THE TRADE

Owing to the number of people going around and asking, as being connected with the Motion Picture Exhibitors’ Association of Greater New York and soliciting advertisements for all kinds of programs, the above organization has decided to avert this nuisance to manufacturers and ask co-operation in denying all such applicants space advertisements for programs which are of no material use to them.

This will apply to the International Exposition of the Motion Picture Trades to be held in the Grand Central Palace, June 8 to 13. There will be no advertising programs of any kind published for this event. A guide, showing spaces occupied by the exhibitors, will be issued free by the Exposition Committee.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors’ Association of Greater New York further give notice that in future no advertising programs will be issued of any affair given under their auspices.

MAKING FEATURES PAY AT A QUARTER

BY G. E. QUISENBERRY

Roy Crawford, ex-Showman, Now Full-Fledged Exhibitor, Is Doing It—Billboard and Newspaper Advertising Are His Strong Points; 24-Sheets Are Good Enough for Him.

SEVERAL weeks ago Roy Crawford, Western theatrical manager, was in New York City. During his stay there he called upon J. J. Shubert, head of the theatrical syndicate of that name.

"The day of the motion picture is here," Shubert told the Western man. "During the next year or two many showmen, now operating 'legitimate' theatres, will go into the movie business."

Mr. Crawford returned to his home in Kansas City and in two weeks his house in that city, the Willis Wood—in which have played Wilton Lackaye, Kitty Gordon, Emma Trentini, Robert Edeson, Max Filman, Charlotte Walker, Ethel Barrymore, DeWolf Hopper, Joseph Jefferson, Maude Adams, Richard Mansfield, Clara Morris, and others—had opened to the new form of drama.

And three more of Mr. Crawford's fifteen theatres throughout the Middle West will follow in rapid succession.

THE Crawford motion picture houses play a single feature at a show. Whether it run five or ten reels, nothing else is shown and Roy Crawford believes they will be a financial success.

On the first and second floors of his Kansas City house he can accommodate twelve hundred persons. Four shows a day, twenty-five cents for the first floor, ten cents for the balcony—the gallery not opened—he does not worry about the financial end.

The Willis Wood as a motion picture house is being operated exactly as was the Willis Wood when flesh-and-blood actors trod its stage. Printed programs are handed to the incoming patrons who possibly has been attracted to the playhouse by some of the Crawford outdoor advertising. A uniformed usher leads the newcomer to his seat and if an intermission is under way, the patron may listen for a few minutes to the orchestra.

"My theatre force is exactly the same as it was before the silent drama was installed, except for the stage hands," Mr. Crawford said recently.

"My advertising is the same and in every way my aim is to run the Willis Wood with motion pictures exactly as it was when musical comedy or drama was being played. The motion picture has developed until it has reached the point that such a show is entirely profitable."

In Topeka, Kan., of the two Crawford houses, the Majestic has already been converted into this type of house and the Novelty, vaudeville, will turn to it next fall.

In El Paso, Tex., the Crawford already is running feature films along similar lines and a deal is pending whereby the Brandeis in Omaha will be leased by Crawford and his father for similar amusement.

M R. CRAWFORD'S billboard advertising is probably unique in motion picture circles.

Each week he puts out 24-sheets at thirty stands, 8-sheets at one hundred stands, and 1-sheets at five hundred others.

Newspaper advertising runs twenty-eight lines on Sunday and eight weekly with an occasional special announcement of forty to fifty lines.

He is using at the present time no other advertising except the conventional lobby display.

"A few years ago vaudeville came in as a child of the ten-cent show and has been increased to 10, 20, 30 prices," he explains.

"The movie came in at 5 cents, went to 10 and will go to 25 and up. "The growth and increase in the motion picture show business is now exactly as was early vaudeville.

"Producers are putting out high-class films to-day. Fine, big theatres are needed in which to show them and it is only through the big theatres that such elaborate productions may be put on profitably. And they will pay big in the big houses.

"Next fall the theatre season will find many surprises for itself.

"Many a traveling theatre company will give way to the box of reels sent by express.

"Many houses now playing to voice and song and flesh and blood will play the white screen and the magic movement."

"Reel Fellows" Plan Headquarters

PERMANENT headquarters was the big topic under discussion at the last meeting of the Reel Fellows Club, of Chicago, at the new Fort Dearborn Hotel. This meeting was attended by practically all the old members and a number of new members. The suggestion of permanent headquarters made by the board of governors was enthusiastically received.

The matter was put up to a committee consisting of Harold Vosburgh, Allen Haase, Wallace Beery, Walter Early and Tom Quill. Among the affairs suggested was that of a combined theatrical and ball.

Many new members were taken in at the last meeting among whom were numbered William Shaw Bastar, ABO Feature Film Co.; A. L. Haase, Electricity Magazine Corporation; Edwin H. Ribben, Saturday Evening Telegraph; Wallace E. Beery, Essanay; Eddie Redway, Essanay; S. E. Kinkel, Geo. Kleine; Cullen Holmes Terrel, George Kleine offices; Homer C. Conde; Morton L. Vance, Vance Mfg. Co.; Albert V. Steis, Essanay; Fred H. Wagner, Essanay; Wm. M. Young, Essanay; Edward S. Gaylor, Jr., the Morgan Lithographing Co.; George Berg, Kleine Optical Co.;

G. E. Still, Photoplay Magazine; Charles A. Ziebarth, Bell & Howell; Frank S. Phelps, George Kleine offices; Joseph A. Roach, Essanay; Richard C. Traverse, Essanay Film Mfg. Co.; Harvey E. Gausman, Essanay; Ralph Holmes, Essanay; E. L. Hickey, Barnes, Crosby & Co.; Merle E. Smith, George Kleine offices, and Harry McBee Webster, Essanay.

It is seriously being considered by both the board of governors and the members of the Reel Fellows Club to increase the initiation fee as soon as one hundred members are secured.

PICTURES IN PUBLIC SCHOOL

Motion pictures in public schools in New York have at last become a reality. After much opposition, No. 135, in Brooklyn, has built a booth and has started exhibiting. The auditorium is not sufficiently large to hold all the students, who are taken down in three shifts, divided according to grade.

At the present time the pictures shown are "Little Red Riding Hood" for the younger children, "Paul Revere's Ride" for the intermediate grades, and "Julius Caesar" for the oldest pupils and alumni.
The Playhouse, a Motion Picture Theatre

The Motion Picture News presents here reproductions of photographs and drawings illustrating a theatre built by the editor of this department. It enables the writer particularly to emphasize an important point in a recent article upon the "Selection of Sites" and further to describe a peculiar fire-proof construction. It is built upon a lot 50 feet by 100 feet—a size very often met with by city builders of small theatres.

The illustration of the longitudinal section (Fig. 1) shows the height of the grade at the rear wall line. The excavation at the rear was to a depth of 22 feet, and over the entire area of the lot there was an average of about 12 feet. The earthwork consisted of hardpan, all of which had to be removed from the premises.

As shown on the plan (Fig. 2) there had to be built a substantial retaining wall about the stage, which was built of reinforced concrete. The excessive height of the earthworks of the site raised the cost of the building up to $2,000, this cost, of course, being a total loss, for the owner receives no return upon this part of his outlay.

The owner purchased the site with the specific object of placing a theatre upon it, but did not take into consideration this important matter. Nevertheless, with all that, luck was with him, for his neighbors on either side erected buildings on their land, thus saving him from the necessity of constructing retaining walls to support both sides, at a cost of almost $2,000 additional, as well as from narrowing the space of the land for occupancy by almost three feet.

The problem presented to the architect in this case was to obtain a maximum seating on a lot, as before said, of 50 feet frontage by 100 feet width, to provide a small stage for light vaudeville, and 4-foot alleys for both sides as required by the local building ordinance for an interior lot, and to provide also an absolutely fire-proof building. The additional factor of minimum cost was, as usual, also present.

To obtain the greatest number of seats, the thinnest wall construction had to be adopted. Had the walls been built of brick of the thickness required by the building ordinance, they would have had to be, with furring and interior plastering, at least 18 inches thick, or for the two walls 36 inches, whereas the writer designed the structure with but 6-inch walls, or a saving of 24 inches.

Steel purlins were riveted on between the trusses, over which was placed Berger Ferro-Lithic Rib-Trus steel, self-centering lath, which received 2 inches of concrete on the top and a cement plaster at the bottom, thus providing a 3-inch reinforced concrete roof without the expense of wood centering.

On a line with the bottom chord of the roof trusses, there was placed a metal-lathed and plastered ceiling. All interior partitions were likewise built of metal furring, metal lath and plaster.

The front or street section of the building was built of brickwork. With the above described construction the writer was enabled to obtain the accommodation shown in the accompactly designed and a seating for 530 patrons.

The photograph of the interior shows wall pilasters and ceiling beams, resulting respectively from the column and truss construction. The decorations, simple as they are, follow Greek lines and the strong colors of Pompeii. Attention is here given to the indirect system of lighting adopted, permitting a comparatively light house.

The screen was furnished by the lessees, and it is to be regretted that they only use a white canvas. As the section shows, there is a very prominent slope to the auditorium floor, and a clear view of the stage and the screen may be had by all patrons.

The masonry is of tapestry brick and terra cotta, and the cornice is entirely of sheet metal.

This theatre, which is located in one of the larger cities of northern New Jersey, was built in the midst of a field already over-supplied by a number of 300-seat capacity houses. By its capacity, its coziness, and its system of heating and ventilation it has met with immediate and continued success, to the detriment of all others, who now only get its overflow.

PITTSBURGH THEATRE WILL COST $50,000

A $50,000 motion picture theatre will be opened to Pittsburgh motion picture lovers early in September of this year on Penn avenue, just west of Highland. Rowland and Clark, among the first to operate motion picture houses in the Smokey City, will operate the new theatre, which will have a seating capacity of 1,000.

The new theatre, which is to be called the Regent, it is said, will be one-story in height, with a foyer opening on Penn avenue, faced with marble, and giving off into retiring rooms for men and women. A large fountain, the water spouting from a jet held by a Cupid, will spout at the interior end of the passage.

The screen will have a regular stage setting and promises to be one of the largest in Pittsburgh, measuring 22 feet in width by 18 in height. On the left of the screen will be a pipe organ. The lighting system will be semi-direct, with parallel rows of red and white lights, either of which can be used separately. The most improved ventilating system will be installed.

2,000-SEAT HOUSE FOR PORTLAND, ORE.

The era of big motion picture theatres is beginning to dawn on the Pacific Coast, especially in Portland, Ore., where Melvin G. Winnstock is engaged in constructing a theatre that will seat 2,000 persons, and will cost $100,000 before it is ready for the public.

The new house will be known as the National and it is the intention of the manager to open it as early in the summer as possible. The theatre will be remarkable for its departure in many ways from the present type of motion picture house.

In the first place, every seat in the house will be reserved for every performance. Two elevators will carry patrons to the balcony and the gallery. These cars will run to the roof as well, where in summer a roof-garden and open-air theatre will be operated.

Last but not least, the basement of the building will be devoted to a children's playground, and toys and games will be provided by the management. Parents will be encouraged to bring their little ones and leave them in the play-room, while they enjoy the pictures upstairs.

Two shows will be given every afternoon and two at night.

Vol. IX May 9, 1914 No. 18

WHY?

The first of William Lord Wright’s revelations in connection with the Ohio Censorship Board is printed on another page of this issue of The Motion Picture News. Mr. Wright’s integrity is as unassailable as his familiarity with the situation he discusses. His words speak for themselves. Let those involved answer them satisfactorily, if they can.

But there is one question that needs to be answered at once.

Why is M. A. Neff so fervent and enthusiastic a champion of State censorship of motion pictures?

The Motion Picture News is not asking this question.

It is the thousands of exhibitors in every locality of the country who are asking it. They will continue to ask it until the true answer is forthcoming.

THAT board is already a political sty. It was created as such, and such was its manifest destiny. The Illinois exhibitors can scarcely hope for a better outcome. They could not imagine a worse.

State censorship is damned in the eyes of all Americans, as every form of censorship is and, let us hope, ever will be. But let the exhibitor remember, too, that state censorship is nothing more nor less than thinly disguised graft. STATE CENSORSHIP OF FILMS MEANS CENSORSHIP BY POLITICIANS; AND CENSORSHIP BY POLITICIANS MEANS LEGALIZED ROBBERY.

The Ohio exhibitors know it. The Illinois exhibitors ought to know it. And the lesson should be learned, here and now, once and for all, by exhibitors in every state of the Union.

"FREDERICK THE GREAT"
(Edison)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

The scenery and settings are the strong points in this feature. The scenes in the old palace, in the monasteries and on the battlefield are excellent. Several famous paintings are reproduced on the film, among them being one by Mezel and another by Wurthmuller. None of the scenes are marred by bad photography. The camera work is clear and distinct throughout. A delightful and stirring drama.

The story is that of the life of Frederick the Great. He was mistreated by his father in his youth, but when the latter's death came he swore to avenge an insulting message sent to his father by the Austrians. This led him into the Seven Years' War, from which many dramatic scenes are shown. Frederick the Great called but one man his friend during his life and that was Voltaire. Voltaire is shown plotting treason against the king, but his intended treachery is discovered. The king had lost his only friend, and he died a broken-hearted man. The last few scenes are very pathetic.

The acting is worthy of special mention. The members of the company impersonate the old Prussians of the eighteenth century very well, moving always in stately fashion and not like modern people, dressed in clothes of a past century just for the fun of it. The acting, combined with the magnificent interiors and the well-staged exteriors, make this feature a valuable production.

"PIERRE OF THE PLAINS"
(All-Star)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

It is not the exception for stage favorites to appear to very poor advantage before the camera, and it is this that manufacturers have had to fight against. Great as some of the "legit" stars undoubtedly are when they are before the familiar footlights, where they can throw the personality of their voice into the audience, they often fail miserably to score a hit when having nothing but a clicking camera and a watchful director for an audience.

Edgar Selwyn is not one of these. In this picture he has proven his versatility and ability to act under any and all circumstances. There is not an iota of camera shyness in all his make-up. Mr. Selwyn is not only the author of the original play, but interpreted the role of Pierre, as in this picture.

The story is a peculiar one, combining romance with adventure. Superstition also plays a large part. Pierre, a rough Indian half-breed, is in reality a gambler, not noted for his fairness, as most stage gamblers are. He reads his future in the cards, and even decides what course he will pursue in the most momentous occasions. Once, when pursued by the police, not knowing which way to turn, he refers his fate to the inevitable cards and eludes his pursuers.

One of the facts that impress those that understand even the rudiments of photography is that, although almost every exterior is a snow scene, there is not even a trace of exhalation. The pictures, it is claimed by the All-Star, were taken in the North Woods, and in many scenes the snow is very deep.

The adventures of Pierre are well known. The production in its original form has been seen in nearly every theatre of size in the country. How Pierre the gambler, despised by the girl he loves, proves that he is very much of a man, is a familiar story. His helping the girl, when she unwillingly has had her brother placed in jail, and the method by which they freed him, is but a small part of the interesting five reels. Finally, when he had come to believe that she did not love him, in fact when he thought he knew she hated him, the scene closes and a verse is flashed on the screen. Then comes a vision of the future. The audience sees them together before the fire and then the scene closes and "Pierre" is disclosed. The verse, telling of the peculiarities of a woman's love, is most apropos.

Mr. Selwyn is supported by a capable company. Dorothy Dalton, "the girl, plays with much grace. She is admirably suited for the part. William Conklin plays "Durkin," the heavy; Sydney Seaward is the presumed lover, "Sergeant Tom"; William Riley Hatch plays the inn-keeper, Peter; and Joseph Reider is the brother "Val," who causes much of the trouble.

"A WILL O' THE WISP" (Paramount)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

PHOTOGRAPHICALLY this four-reel picture is perfect. With the exception of one foreign company there is not one manufacturer that can even equal it in beauty and finish. The clearness of detail, the lights and shades are worked out with an artistry which at once brings it into prominence. The preceding paragraph does not by any means belittle the story, nor convey the meaning that the plot is not sufficiently good to go with such perfect mechanical detail. But the salient point is the photography.

The story as told on the film impresses one with being true to life in every way. The writer was informed that it was a tale from life for its foundation, and this seems very likely. The rendition is left in the hands of a capable cast headed by Henry King, formerly of Lubin, and Jackie Saunders. The latter, because of her resemblance to Mary Pickford, is called "the second Little Mary." Her mannerisms are also closely allied to those of Miss Pickford.

In the latter part of the picture some excellent rain effects are obtained. Real flood scenes, taken in California, form an important basis for certain portions of the drama. This is very realistically portrayed.

King and Julia break their engagement and King leaves for the wilderness. His duel with his rival is stopped by Julia and he goes his way. Arriving in the country he changes clothes with a tramp and builds a hut for himself. He meets the Will o' the Wisp and saves her life from the quicksand.

The villain buys Hazel, the Will o' the Wisp, from her father, telling the latter he intends to marry her. Again King saves her and takes her to a farmhouse and hidden her there for safety. The rising rivers become a great menace to the blind father, who has been shut in his house by the villain in revenge for allowing Hazel to escape him. He is rescued by King after an arduous trip and the villain dies in the water.
“CHICOT THE JESTER”
(Leading Players of France)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHEL

A THREE-REEL dramatization of the novel by Alexander Dumas, which is released May 10. The director must have had difficulty preventing himself from spreading this out into at least one extra reel, but fortunately the opportunity was ignored, hence a story teeming with real action, minus padding of any sort. The plot may be said to be historically true, following the original story with great exactness, even to the minor details.

which are so important. Henri III, King of France, was known to be a degenerate of the worst sort. He has been vividly described, his life made a part of history, by a number of writers, principally Dumas senior, and consequently required but little originality on the part of the director.

The picture is more of a romance than anything else. Although the name might suggest comedy, but little trace of it is found. It is the story of the seemingly impossible love of two young people, one of whom, the girl, is married forcibly to an older man. All concerned are members of the court of Henri, and it is through his unknown aid that their reconciliation is effected.

Similar to other tales from the pen of this master writer, the plot contains a number of duels. And still like others, the hero always seems to fight and win against the greatest sort of odds. If the time were modern, and the characters in agreement, we might laugh at it as impossible, but so much faith is placed in the ability of medieval characters when they have a sword in hand, that it is easy to accept the plausibility of believing their actions.

A number of court scenes are introduced, showing the character of the courtiers in that period. Although frivolity and foolishness plays a great part, sensuousness is left out entirely, making the film that much better without it.

Chicot the Jester is the only man who dares to disobey the King, and also the only one who really loves him. When the King, jealous of de Bussy, orders Chicot to arrest him, he refuses and de Bussy hides. Diana, whom he loves greatly, is forced to marry de Monsoreau. After much difficulty de Bussy finally frees her from him, and Monsoreau is killed by Chicot, who has been ordered to arrest him. The fights are well staged and a splendid finale is pictured.

“THE STILETTO”
(Reliance)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

This one-reel drama produced by the Mutual Company, featuring Courtney Foote and Donald Crisp, is far from the ordinary in more ways than one, and owing to this fact is refreshing and pleasant to see. There is nothing in it to arouse one’s finer sensibilities, although the spectator’s interest is held without interruption from beginning to end. The piece is remarkable in that only one character appears on the screen a large part of the time.

The “Vendetta” is a branch of the Black Hand that has been committing various atrocities in the mountain districts. A young engineer incurs their enmity by killing one of their hand, and thereafter they try to do away with him. He, however, escapes unscathed and kills their leader, who had secreted himself in the young man's house with intent to murder him.

“FIGHTING DEATH”
(Box Office Film Attractions)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHEL

This picture was reviewed in the projection-rooms of the Box Office Film Attractions Company, which controls the rights for New York, northern New Jersey and New England. It was made by Herbert Blache at Fort Lee, New Jersey.

The feature of the story is the daring work of Rodman Law and his partner, Constance Bennett. Not satisfied with merely jumping from the Brooklyn Bridge (incidentally Miss Bennett is the first woman to do this), Law crosses a chasm over a hand cable and dives with Miss Bennett on a horse into the water frozen over with ice, a distance of fifty-eight feet. In this respect, if in no other, the film out-rivals anything else of its character.

Miss Bennett doubles for Claire Whitney in the thrilling parts, since Miss Whitney evidently did not care to take such chances. Mr. Law has found in Miss Bennett a partner worthy of his daring. From all reports she is as willing as he to do anything suggested.

The picture is made doubly interesting by combining a good story with the reckless work of the leading characters. None of their actions but what have a reason. The story is of sufficient worth to stand by itself without the work of either Miss Bennett or Mr. Law. It has a strong romantic interest and is well told.

The story of the film, which is in four reels and released

April 10, is as follows: 'Being very hard up, Jim accepts $500 to take care of an illicit still for his enemy. He is nearly caught by the police and forced to run away.

He meets Clara and together, to escape the posse, they make the leap into Ausable Chasm. They are married and soon escape.

Later they meet again in New York, after stirring adventures and Clara, dressed as a boy, accepts an offer to leap from the Brooklyn Bridge. Jim, unknown to her, also accepts. Here they meet again and become inseparable thereafter.

CLARA REPULSES BARFORD
Edward Peple's popular war drama enacted by famous screen players. Its story has touched the hearts of a nation. Its battle scenes will set a new standard in motion picture production.

A peerless feature under any conditions, but unusually appropriate now that the whole country is excited over the trouble in Mexico. Five reels. Complete line of advertising matter in thorough keeping with the high quality of the picture. State Rights selling.

The Twentieth Century Feature Film Company announce "A Cry in the Night" as their initial release. It is a four-reel drama, depicting the life of an innocent man who escapes from prison, starts life anew and successfully lives down his past.

Work is well under way for the Twentieth Century's studio to be located in Edgewater, N. J., where all the future releases will have natural light, insuring perfect photography. Frederick Beck, who made the American production of "The Three Musketeers," will direct their releases.

George Nash, who is starring in the all-star production of Upton Sinclair's book "The Jungle" is one of America's greatest character men. In the accompanying picture Mr. Nash is seen in the character role of Jurgis, which he portrays in the play. This is the first work he has done for the camera. He has played in The original book has been translated into seventeen languages, it is said.

Helen Hesperia, who is said to be one of the highest paid screen artists in Europe, has been engaged by one of the Warner Features companies and will exclusively appear in pictures "The Blunderer's Mark," is now under way.

The Tivoli Opera House, San Francisco, has purchased and installed one of the American Photo-Player Company's new style #6 Fotoplayer. The installation took place Sunday, April 12. The Tivoli is practically the largest motion picture theatre in San Francisco, and uses a nine-piece orchestra in connection with the Fotoplayer.

The Turner & Dahnken Circuit, which controls a chain of theatres in the West, now has ten Fotoplayers installed in various theatres of their chain.

Dorothy Gwynn, who starred in the Cosmos production of "The Three Musketeers," is now posing for Charles Dana Gibson in a series of pictures Mr. Gibson is drawing for "Life." Previous to her appearance in pictures with the Biograph Company, Miss Gwynn was well known upon the stage, having played for several years with Francis Wilson. She has also been in stock.

George S. Dougherty, one of the best known detectives in this country, and until recently head of the Pinkerton Agency, is said to have warmly praised "The Black Triangle," the first of the Webb series of pictures. This picture, he said, is the greatest detective story ever brought to this country. It was produced by Films Lloyds, Inc.

"Brewster’s Millions" has played at the Strand Theatre, New York, all week. The picture is in five parts and with the appropriate music played by the orchestra and organ of the Strand the play was well received. The following program was rendered: Operette: "William Tell." The Torr-reed Song from "Carmen," Louis Torre. Sextette from "Ludia" Strand Sextette. Selections from light operas and incidental numbers were given by the orchestra during the exhibition of the motion picture plays.

The Weiland Film Company, of Pittsburgh, have moved from 133 Fourth avenue to larger quarters in Delray street, in that city.

Samuel Goldish, executive head of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, left New York on April 27 for a month’s visit to the Hollywood studios of that company.

"Tess of the Storm Country" has established a record in Pittsburgh. More than 17,000 persons paid double price to see it.

The Universal Company have formed a "general" stock company, exclusively made up of extra players on the Coast who have shown sufficient talent to be kept on hand and used with the regular companies when needed. This is a precedent which should work out well. The former extras will be on salary and will be advanced to the "regulars" as required and as their talent deserves.

R. L. Goldberg, of the Casino Feature Film Company, of Detroit, Mich., has just returned from a tour of the state. He reports business very quiet in the copper district, on account of the prolonged strike, but promising in the lower peninsula.

The Famous Players Film Company, of New England, report rapid booking of the feature "Pierre of the Plains." The office of the company is at 31 Beach street, Boston, Mass.

The All-Star Feature Corporation has contracted with Lew Dockstader, the famous minstrel, to appear in a photoplay written especially for him, within a short time. Many of his stage associates will appear in the production.

Augustus Thomas, director-general of the All-Star, will personally supervise the making of the Dockstader film. The picture will probably follow "The Jungle," the Sinclair story which the All-Star is now making.

The marriage of Tsuru Aoki, the Japanese leading lady of the New York Motion Picture Company, and her leading man Sessue Hayakawa, took place on May 1, in Los Angeles, Cal. Miss Aoki has been starring with Thomas H. Ince for some time, and is now working in "The Typhoon" and "The Wrath of the Gods." She first came to this country from Tokyo, Japan, at the age of eight, and was left in Los Angeles in a convent.

The number thirteen plays a prominent part in the adventures of "Our Mutual Girl." The thirteenth chapter was shown on April 15. Reliance Brand, 29 Union Square, Philip K. Mindil and sixteen actors besides Norma Phillips have the superstitious number of letters to their name.

Colored stickers are being used by the Broadway Theatre, Detroit, Michigan, telling of the showing of "Samson" and depicting the wrecking of the temple.

G. W. Sawin is now manager of the Famous Players Film Company, branch office at Atlanta, Georgia. The office is in the Rhodes Building, and controls the product of the company for Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, Florida, Tennessee, Louisiana, and North and South Carolina. Mr. Sawin was formerly manager of the Washington branch of the General Film Company.

The Manhattan Feature Film Company is now located at 143 West Fortieth street, New York. They have purchased the American rights to nineteen foreign productions which they will book direct from their own exchanges.

The Rolands Feature Film Company, producers of "Trapped in the Great Metropolis," have made arrangements with Victoria Wallace and Albert Prisco, the principals of this production, to appear in the theatres where it is shown.

Leon J. Bamberger left New York on Tuesday last to go to Pittsburgh for Warner’s Features, Inc. Mr. Bamberger will assist Max Herring, the manager of that exchange, and cover the surrounding territory.

James Steele, manager of the Famous Players Film Company, of Pittsburgh, has returned to that city after a visit of several weeks duration in New York. He has brought with him a number of features which he will use in connection with his large productions.

A. W. Blankmeyer, formerly of the Universal Exchange, in Detroit, the managership of which he resigned, is in New York on business, the character of which he will not disclose. He says he will continue in the motion picture business, however.

Bert Adler, one of the best known publicity men in the business, who has had charge of the interests of C. J. Hite since his coming into this business, has been raised in position. He has been created special representative of the Thanotis Company with a roving commission that will take him all over the country.

William L. Sherry, of the William L. Sherry Feature Film Company, Inc., was in Buffalo and Rochester, N. Y., recently, and spent a day in looking over the local field.

There is a strong demand for "Forgiven" or "The Jack of Diamonds," according to the Stellar Photoplay Company.
"NEPTUNE'S DAUGHTER"
(Universal Special Features)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

JUST as Thackeray is remembered by the world as the author of "Vanity Fair," so will Herbert Brenon be associated as the producer of this wonderful seven-reel masterpiece. Not that others did not contribute to its worth. Credit is certainly due Captain Leslie T. Peacocke for the scenario, Annette Kellermann and those supporting her for the acting, and Andre Barletier for the photography, but the principal praise belongs and must be ascribed to Herbert Brenon as director.

Mr. Brenon has directed a number of features. Among them might be mentioned "Absinthe" and "Ivanhoe" as the most notable, but he has never attempted anything of the proportions of this. It is difficult to find words to describe its value to the world of motion-picture followers. Sufficient to say nothing has ever been done of its kind that can equal it.

The play, which is really an extravaganza, does not deal with "water stuff" exclusively. The plot concerns two kingdoms, that of Neptune beneath the sea, and that of King William, a mortal. Neptune's daughter, played by Annette Kellermann, acts as the go-between for the two.

Miss Kellermann, in a recent interview, said she did not wish to go in for swimming and diving any longer. She wanted a play in which she could have a dramatic part so she might be judged for her histrionic merits. In this production she has proven her right to such consideration.

The remainder of the cast are as follows: William E. Shay as King William, Edward Boring as an old man of the sea, William Welsh as Neptune, Edmund Mortimer as Duke Boris, Lewis Hoover as Count Rudolph, Francis Smith as the jailer, Leah Baird as Olga, Mrs. Allen Walker as the sea witch, Millie Listen as the mother, Katherine Lee as Angela and Herbert Brenon as the wolf.

Probably the feature of the picture is the fight at the bottom of the ocean between Annette and the Wolf. The combatants are actually far under the water, struggling with one another, yet the water is so clear that they can be seen as though only the glass were between. Miss Kellermann performs a number of her aquatic feats. Her splendid figure, appearing to advantage in tights, drew murmurs of admiration.

The photography is of excellence. The water scenes were particularly good. A number of tricks of double exposure and dissolving are of necessity resorted to with good effects. The film is tinted in a number of places with color that brings out the natural beauty of the surroundings. The caves at the bottom of the sea, the interiors, the fishing scenes are all fitting and supply the atmosphere so hard to obtain in a picture of this class.

A word about the story itself: Annette, to avenge herself for the death of her sister by the fishermen's nets, becomes a mortal. She meets King William, dressed as a civilian, and a love match starts. Not knowing him to be the King, she goes to his court to kill him. Her charm is lost and she is unable to turn herself back to a mermaid. After saving the King from some assassins, they become reconciled, and she marries him.

A large cast supported the actors. Katherine Lee, in the role of Annette's daughter, drew much praise for her beauty.

"THROUGH DANTE'S FLAMES"
(Ramo Features)
REVIEWED BY MERRITT CRAWFORD

THIS is by all odds the best offering which the Ramo Company has ever made. It bristles with novel and thrilling situations and sets a standard hitherto unattained by this popular concern. For consistency and rapidity of action, for clearness of plot and perfection of photography, throughout its four parts, it is quite in a class by itself.

Stuart Holmes in the dual role of the artist and the artist's twin brother, the minister, registers a distinct success. It is said that Mr. Holmes actually painted the picture of the Madonna, on which he is seen at work on the screen, which is but another instance of his unusual versatility.

Lois Howard, as Kate Clarke, the character around whom the plot of the piece is woven, portrays her somewhat difficult part in a fashion which will give satisfaction to the most fastidious. A number of cleverly executed double exposures also add much to the value of the piece.

The story, which is of the kind that is different, deals with an accident which causes the heroine to undergo a complete transformation of character. Later by means of a train wreck, which is admirably shown on the screen, she again becomes her old self. In the meantime an artist who had seen her as a cabaret dancer and had used her as a model for the Madonna he was painting, falls in love with her. Unable to get her to pose, so that he can finish the picture, he grows ill and in a delirium finishes it without her. His twin brother, a minister, at whose house Kate has taken refuge after the train wreck, gets the picture of the Madonna after the artist's death and recognizes Kate as the original. The balance of the story includes the raid of detectives upon a den of counterfeiters, of which Kate's brother is one, and a fire scene at a church festival, both of which are most effective.

In the end, of course, Kate weds the minister and everybody is happy ever afterwards.
THE FOTOPLAYER — a pleasing harmony of piano, reed organ and pipes for every orchestral effect.

THE FOTOPLAYER — "the all but human orchestra" — the only instrument that renders appropriate music for every detail of the picture.

Uses ordinary player music and is always under the perfect control of the player.

Changes instantly from one selection of music to another.

Drums, cymbals, bells, crash, wind, siren, thunder, locomotive bell, steamboat whistle, horses' hoofs, chimes, orchestra bells, etc.

"THE SWAMP FOX"
(General Film Masterpieces)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A THREE-PART drama of Revolutionary days produced by the Kalem Company. Photoplays of the old days before America became a nation are not very often produced and hardly any have appeared in comparison to the large amount of Civil War dramas. Needless to say, because of this fact a drama of this sort is extremely interesting to witness.

Guy Coombs plays the lead in this production, taking the part of Francis Marion, the Swamp Fox. His is not a star's part, but he acts well and is ably assisted by the rest of the cast, of whom Helen Lindroth, Robert W. Walker and John Mackin are the most important. The fights between the patriots and the English are vividly depicted, unusually large armies of trained men taking the part of the soldiers. The film was taken in the swamps of Florida, and, although this is not the place of the scene of action, it is a fine substitute.

The first scene of the prologue deserves special mention. It reveals a marauding band of Indians, lying waste the settlers' homes on the frontier, killing women and children as well as men, and carrying off everything that would be of use to them.

The photography is of a high standard throughout; it is clear and the light effects are good; in fact, there is no fault to find with the entire production.

Francis Marion, after repulsing an attack of the Indians, finds Mary Videau, rendered an orphan by their atrocities; he takes her to his sister's home. News of Cornwallis' landing is brought to Marion. He organizes a troop of backwoodsmen, and offers his services to General Gates but he declines the services of his little army.

Balfour, a suitor for the hand of Mary, is a Tory and tries many times to betray Marion into the hands of the British but is unsuccessful. Many hot battles between the British and the patriots are shown on the screen, not allowing the interest to lag once. At the end of the war Marion and Mary are happily reunited.

"THE DEATH SIGN AT HIGH NOON"
(General Film Masterpieces)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A THREE-PART drama of the olden days when settlers and Indians fought for the supremacy of the plains. The scenery and the Western atmosphere insinuated in the picture could not be better. The picture was taken in the heart of the West; in fact, on the same spots where its scenes are supposed to have happened years before.

In the third reel there is a fine battle between soldiers and Indians, the latter completely overwhelming and killing all but the leader of the helpless soldiers. A marked inferiority of the piece is the characters who assume the roles of the principal Indians.

As far as acting is concerned not much room is left for improvement, but the Indians are not Indians; their skin is white and their features are scarcely those of Indians. It seems strange when the Kalem Company has such a number of capable Indians that none should be used for the leads in this piece.

The drama goes to the extreme in some places, but on the whole it is better than the usual run of Indian stories, and will command attention from start to finish. Some beautiful light effects are obtained; all the photography is good and leaves little room for criticism.

The daughter of Painted Horse, White Thrush, is sent to the settlement school. She and the teacher Hadden fall in love. Her father gives her to Three Elks, a wealthy Indian, but she refuses to marry him and runs away to Hadden. The Indians demand her from the settlers and she is given up. Hadden is asked to resign by the settlers and he sets out for another post. Silver Thrush runs away and they meet.

The Indians, thinking the settlers have her again, give them till noon to return her. They send for help to a near-by fort and the soldiers set out, but they are intercepted by the Indians and all are killed but the Colonel. He comes upon Hadden and prevails upon him to return Silver Thrush. He does so and for appeasing the Indians the settlers welcome him back.

"THE MAKING OF A SCOUT" SUCCESSFUL

A dramatic story is entwined in an educational feature describing truthfully the good that the Boy Scouts accomplish. Their various modes of communication, their habits while camping, and so on, are all graphically told.

In "The Making of a Scout" the story deals with two boys, one the son of wealthy parents, and the other born in poverty. The latter joins the scouts and redeems himself. The adventures of his drunken father and the many hindrances placed in his path form a good story.

The film, which is now on the road, is said to be meeting with a warm welcome wherever exhibited.

EDISON WILL FILM "BUSTER BROWN"

Buster Brown, the kid creation of R. F. Outcault, the cartoonist, is to be produced by the Edison Company. At the present time some 300 newspapers are running the cartoons of this irresistible boy, and this publicity should make the pictures most popular.

There will be twelve films in all, released on alternating weeks. The production will commence as soon as Tige finishes his vaudeville engagement.
Our Lawyers' Communication to the General Film Co.

In view of protests received daily from Motion Picture Theatres against the elimination of PATHÉ'S WEEKLY, and in view of the many demands from Moving Picture Theatres that the PATHÉ'S WEEKLY be continued on their program, we have found it necessary to refer the matter to our attorneys, who have written the following letter to the General Film Company, which letter explains to the various exhibitors in question the reason for their not being supplied with the PATHÉ'S WEEKLY at present.

Coudert Brothers,
Counselors at Law,

New York, April 28, 1914.

GENERAL FILM COMPANY
200 Fifth Avenue
New York City

Dear Sirs:

In the contract which regulates the relations between yourselves and our client Pathe Freres, and under which you have the right to demand as many copies of Pathe films as are released by them, and as you require, it is provided in part as follows:

"The party of the second part (General Film Company) covenants and agrees that it will, during the continuance of this agreement, use its best efforts to introduce the same [Pathe's Films] and extend the use thereof by Motion Picture Exhibitors, using the licensed projection machine."

For years Pathe Freres have been supplying you with the film known as Pathe Weekly and have averaged a large number each week. Within the last fortnight you have been cutting your orders materially. Pathe Freres would have been puzzled to find an explanation for such an unprecedented reduction as has taken place in what they inform us is one of the most popular films known to the moving picture world, had it not been for the receipt of letters from licensed exhibitors containing such expressions as these:

"We are informed by exchange that they have cut the Pathe Weekly. We have been getting the Pathe Weekly regular at about seven days and do not care to cut it from our list—what figure would you book us direct?"

"Ever since you started the Pathe Weekly, this house has been running it, or had until recently. If there is anything that you can do to help me get this back, please do so."

This and many similar requests—some by wire, furnished our client with the answer looked for. In addition to this Pathe finds in the City of New York that there are large posters advertising the withdrawal of the Pathe Weekly and the substitution of another weekly in its place.

We have advised our client that your action in this connection not only does not amount to using your best efforts to introduce their films and extend their use by Motion Picture exhibitors, but it shows an organized effort on your part to suppress the use of their films by exhibitors. This in our opinion constitutes a clear breach of your contract with Pathe. Our client demands that, without delay, you make the necessary amendments for this willful breach of your obligations, and that you notify us in writing of your future actions with regard to their films. In case we receive no satisfactory reply, we shall be obliged to take such steps for our client's protection as the law provides.

We remain, dear Sirs,

Yours very truly,

[Signature]

We intend to help you just as we advertised that we would. Write us:

In writing to advertisers please mention "THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS"
"In the Line of Duty." (East India Feature Film Company. Four reels.)—Rita Sacchetto is featured in this picture, which is laid in the far eastern surroundings that Kipling made famous. The plot is the old one of "the other man" who fills the place deserted by a husband absorbed in his work, but it terminates in a powerful climax, when the husband, an army doctor, agrees to save his rival from the deadly cholera, after the young officer has been overcome in the doctor’s home.

The exposition of the first reel or two is filled with inconsistencies, but once the drama is well under way it moves smoothly enough. The action, too, is slow at the start. Excellent photography by Miss Sacchetto and the two principal actors, combined with fine photography in many places, gives the picture, on the whole, a high rating.

"The Unlawful Trade." (Rex. Two reels. May 14.)—Undoubtedly one of the best pictures the Universal has made. The company, Pauline Bush, George Cooper, Lon Chaney, Murdoch McQuarrie and W. C. Dowlan, play admirably together. The story is of the moonshiners and their war on the revenue men, yet it is different from the thousand or so others of this class. For instance, the revenue man does not marry the girl, and the fight between the officer and the outlaws is to a finish.

A "half-breed" or cross-blood, as he is called in the picture, insults a girl and kills her father. His friends, believing the revenue official guilty, set out to revenge themselves. The war is continued with much action.

There is good grouping in the fighting scenes.

"The Pawns of Destiny." (Victor. Three reels. May 8.)—A Universal, featuring Florence Lawrence, who again takes the part of a servant girl. The action is rather slow at times, but rapid and interesting at others. Miss Lawrence induces a lot of fine humor in parts, that is good to see. The photography, though not perfect, leaves little to be desired. The picture takes place "inside" of the time.

Robert, rendered blind by fire, is cared for by a servant in his boarding-house. Later he comes into a fortune and marries his friend. He is operated on and his eyes restored, but she is in deadly fear he won’t love her after seeing her. But his wife is mistaken; and the drama ends in a pleasant scene.

"Michael Perrin" or "A Spy For a Day." (Ambrosio. May 3. Three reels.)—There are many beautiful and well-produced scenes in this production. The first scene of the Republican troops raiding, devastating, and burning a Royalist town at the period after the Napoleonic wars is very well done. In Paris several parades of the Republicans and Royalists are depicted. The photography is of an average nature throughout.

Michael Perrin, an old minister, is employed by the republican government as a spy, but he does not know the part he is playing. He is the main tool in capturing a band of Royalists, among whom are some of his friends. On being informed that he was the cause of their capture, he bursts into tears and resigns his position. The Republicans have his old church rebuilt for him after it was burned by them in a raid, and he is reinstated amid much rejoicing. To top his happiness his niece is married happily—a very pretty ending.

"The Body in the Trunk." (Majestic. Two reels. May 3.)—It is surprising that the plot of this drama has not been used before, but such is not the case, at least it has not been employed to excess, as most plots are.

The last scene keeps one in continual suspense, caused by the shifting of the scene back and forth from Gaston preparing to die, to his sweetheart speeding to him with his pardon.

Carlos and Gaston and their partner, a young girl, are knife-throwers performing in vaudeville. Carlos has a weak heart, and one day falls on a knife held by Gaston and is killed. Gaston, knowing he will be suspected, puts the body in a trunk and plans to bury it. But he is apprehended, tried, and sentenced to be hanged. Then evidence turns up to prove him innocent. His faithful sweetheart procures a pardon from the governor and reaches him in nick of time.

"The Card Sharps." (Domino. Two reels. May 17.)—A drama in which the scene of action takes place most wholly on an ocean liner. Not much variety in scenery is obtained, but water relieves the monotony of all land pictures, and the scenes on board the ship are all beautiful and effectively staged.

Two card sharps are released from prison. One of them decides to lead an honest life, the other to go on in his old ways. Harris obtains a reliable position as secretary to a rich man, and falls in love with his daughter. They go abroad, and on the ship her brother loses to Barnes, Harris’ old partner. But Harris then sits in the game and the young son wins all back. Barnes tells of Harris’ past life, thinking to disgrace him in the eyes of his partner, on the contrary, she believes his story that he intends to live straight in the future.

"DON’T BE CRUEL TO US"
Scene from "Satanette" (Eclair Universal—1 reel—April 26)
"HER FIGHTING CHANCE"
(American)
REVIEWED BY C. J. VERHALEN

The thought behind this production is the difference of vocations of a man and his wife. He has no desire for society, while she apparently takes no interest in his life work, writing. Among the many letters he receives is one from an admirer which rings truer than anything he has ever received. This, of course, starts the plot of the story on its way.

The story is interesting and acted by the second American Company, with Ed Coxen and Winifred Greenfield playing the leading parts. The interior scenes are tastefully arranged, and the outdoor scenes, of course, are the kind which have characterized the American productions.

From the point where Coxen receives the letter, a correspondence starts between him and Miss Greenfield because of their mutual sympathies in their work. She finally turns out a successful book which is sold through Coxen's efforts. She comes to the city and friendship is starting to ripen into love when Coxen decides to go on a hunting trip through Africa.

While he is away Miss Greenfield and his family happen to stop at the same summer resort. An acquaintance is struck, and Miss Greenfield discovers that Coxen's wife has a talent for writing. She assists her, with the result that she writes the best seller of the season. When the husband returns he is apprised of his wife's fame at the club. A reconciliation is effected and the peacemaker returns to her home in the country and the district school.

"CAUGHT IN A CABARET"
(Keystone)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

Another rip-roaring, side-splitting comedy with Charles Chaplin and the usual comical cast.

A production that will surely keep one laughing until his sides ache from the very beginning to the last scene.

This time the "Ham and" man in a Bowery cabaret poses as the prime minister of Greenland and is invited out in high society. He is finally shown up by a slumming party, much to his sorrow.

"THE WOMAN OF MYSTERY"
(Blache)

Dual personality and "spirit control" combine to make Madame Alice Blache's latest picture, staged for the screen under her personal direction, one of the most interesting photodramas that she has produced. "Jekyll and Hyde" personality is developed in a detective by a Hindu priestess, who revenges herself upon him by means of the uncanny psychic powers she possesses. The action takes place in America, and the introduction of the priestess, who maintains a secret temple in a lonely villa, where she is surrounded by a number of faithful followers, gives the drama an unusual air of mystery and adventure.

The detective is summoned to clean up a peculiar case, in which an actress has received a box of poisonous snakes from an unknown enemy. He traces the gift to the priestess and she is thrown into prison. She makes use of a psychic secret which enables her soul to leave her body and influence the detective without his knowledge.

At a certain hour each night he steals away to a den of thieves and leads them in the robbery of a bank, which he is engaged as a detective to watch. His companions see him with the chief of police, and, thinking that he is preparing to lead them into a trap, plan his destruction. His mother and the actress learn of his habit of leaving his home dressed as an underworld character, and save him from the vengeance of the crooks. But the actress is captured with him by the Hindus and he returns to his real personality in the temple of the priestess, where he learns for the first time of his other self from the description of his actions by the actress. Both finally succeed in effecting their escape from the temple.

The capture of the priestess is defeated by her spectacular death, accomplished by the use of a poisoned ring in the temple of the gods.

Clever "double exposures" and fine light effects add to the attractiveness of the drama. Vinnie Barns plays the priestess and Frankie Frannholz interprets the difficult "Jekyll and Hyde" role of the detective in a really excellent manner, with Claire Whitney as his actress sweetheart.

"Bobby and the Banker." (Selig. Split reel. April 27.)—On the same reel with "Knockout Kelly." Bobby saves his father from being a victim of a larceny.

"Knockout Kelly, Magician in Spite of Himself." (Selig. Split Reel. April 27.)—On the same reel with "Bobby and the Banker." Kelly gets hold of a magic wand which makes water spring from anything he touches; the results are side-splitting.

"Hop Head's Dream." (Biograph. Split reel. April 27.)—On the same reel with "Along Came a City Chap." A comic burlesque on the wars of the poison needles.

"Along Came a City Chap." (Biograph. Split reel. April 27.)—On the same reel with "Hop Head's Dream." A farce comedy. The villain has about ten wives, but he is finally brought to justice by the "force.

Heart-Selig News Pictorial, No. 17. (Selig.)—April 27.—A young man in Indio, California, who is the wife of her son, a minister. She misreads his letters, but later regrets seeing her baby.

"Shotgun Jones." (Selig. Two reels. April 27.)—A drama for the action and perfectly plotted. Jones finds a large sum of money with which he buys a ranch in Canada. His wife, thinking him a young woman, later finds that the money belonged to her father. He persuades him to return the ranch to her, but she persuades him to stay and they are happily married.

"Professor Spuff's Romance." (Pathé. April 27.)—A good comedy. Professor Spuff is in love with one of his teachers, Angelica Sweet. Spuff is a somnambulist and gets into a load of trouble before he finally wins her.

"McBride's Bride." (Kalem. May 8.)—A good comedy. McBride finally wins the dates of Highbury, one of the police magistrates, after many complications.

"Will Blood Tell?" (Lubin. April 24.)—A fine drama, far from ordinary. Harry, who is a detective, goes to a severe test to prove his honesty. He comes through it successfully and is made a detective.

"Mike the Avenger." (Selig. Split reel. April 24.)—An overworked but comic plot. Mistreated Mike avenges himself when he becomes full of electricity on the same reel with "Doc Yak, Artillery Man."

"Bromco Billy, Gunman." (Fasanay. April 25.)—A disconnected drama owing to the lack of sub-titles.

"Doc Yak, Artillery Man." (Selig. Split reel. April 24.)—The eighth of the Doc Yak animated drawings to be shot by various artists in the audience with a camera, in this number.

"The Tangled Tangoists." (Vitagraph. April 24.)—Comedy. A tango dance in which they are able to learn, their efforts and results are extremely comical.

"The Master Bogue." (Kalem. Two reels. May 4.)—A clever drama featuring George H. Melford in a dual role. Frank and Helen are twin brothers. Frank is taken into the home of a rich family, and his guardian offered a reward by anyone who can cure his boy blindness. An unscrupulous physician undertakes to cure the boy, Albert for Frank. But all is well in the end.

"The Detective's Sister." (Kalem. Two reels. May 6.)—A gentle woman falls in love with a detective in trouble. She helps him out of it, but their affair is mutual when the young girl dies.

"The New Medicine Man." (Kalem. May 9.)—A fine drama. An Indian graduate of a medical college, proves his superiority over the oldest medicine man.

"Little Breeches." (Lubin. Split reel. April 25.)—Boys seen reel with "A Drift of the Circus." Pretty winter scenes and a lot of clever help to make this a pleasant drama. A little boy strays away from his father in a snow storm and takes rest in a sheep fold, where after a long search he is found.

"A Dream of the Circus." (Lubin. Split reel. April 25.)—Boys reel with "Little Breeches." A little boy has a dream of the circus which is in a ruck and Judy style. A comedy which will surely amuse the children.

"Her Great Scoop." (Vitagraph. Two reels. April 25.)—A well acted and well staged and holding drama. Fanny, a young reporter, has a large scoop which she offers to many newspapers. None believe her, but at last she goes to "The Times," the scoop is run by one man. Her story comes from overhearing some bank robbers planning to loot a bank; through Fanny's writer's and the "Era" she gets the story out before all others. Her circulation is tripled and Fanny and the owner are engaged.

"Breaking Even." (Pathé. Two reels. April 25.)—A comedy of the "19th century" type. There is no climax to it and could be brought to an end at any time during the two reels. Later, after the story is finished, a man is left standing by the side of a hill; he starts to walk around the hill.

"Rice Culture in Indo-China." (Pathé. April 25.)—On the extreme end of the last reel of "Breaking Even." Showing the different ways, both ancient and modern, of cultivating rice.

"A Week End at Happyrhurst." (Edison. May 4.)—A comedy in which a tired business man is invited to a weekend party. Children and a wife make him miserable for him and he gladly returns to the city.

"The Lucky Vest." (Edison. May 6.)—An excellent comedy. Dr. Flynn has no patients until he comes in contact with a lucky vest. Then he becomes rich, has more patients than he can handle, and marries a pretty girl. One day he goes out without the vest, but has bad luck and vows never to go without it again.

"The End of the Umbrella." (Edison. May 9.)—The seventh of the Dolly of the Dailies series. Following the clue left by finding the handle of an umbrella, Dolly locates the perpet rator of a crime. One fine scene and after that a good drama.

"The Song of Solomon." (Edison. Two reels. May 8.)—Solomon writes a song and he determines to have Triste, the popular songstress, sing it. He has many difficulties to overcome before he realizes his plan, but he finally does and his song is the hit of the season.

"Colonel Heza Liar in Mexico." (Pathé. Split reel. April 22.)—A fine comedy of about 30 scenes. The Colonel occurred in a famous case in Mexico and is rewarded by President Wilson for his bravery.

"Siamese Customs, Indo-China." (Pathé. Split reel. April 22.)—On the same reel with "Colonel Heza Liar in Mexico." A pretty picture of the kind that the title implies.

"Wrong All Around." (Essanay. April 22.)—A mystery drama, a jealous husband and wife, the results follow until the real murderer is found and the desert.

"The Klondike Bubble." (Lubin. Two reels. April 22.)—A drama with a long introduction to the plot and then when the plot comes to life it is all well. Producer Lamb is induced to invest in a mine up in Alaska, straightway his family start to live in anticipation of their coming wealth. After fifty years of waiting they are finally found and the gold is dug up.

"The Last Man's Club." (Selig. April 24.)—Some soldiers of the Civil War form a club, the last man of which is to drink a bottle of wine to the health of the others. After fifty years the finally find the wine and drinks the wine. Rather a slow drama.

"Fanny's Melodrama." (Vitagraph. April 22.)—A high-grade comedy-drama. A husband and wife, a woman, who is the subject of a play acted by her and her friends, by his jealousy. He rushes in while the play is being rehearsed and spoils the whole thing.

"Gray Eagle's Last Stand." (Kalem. Two reels. April 23.)—A thrilling drama of the West. Wanoka, an Indian maiden, is rescued by her suitor in aiding the soldiers of a near-by fort to protect themselves. Taking her advice the soldiers completely wipe out the hostile Indians in a fine battle scene.

"The Tango Craze." (Pathé. Two reels. April 23.)—An exceeded slow drama. The tango epidemic infects a certain Paris circle. Its actions are supposed to be funny but are not likely to strike many as such.

"Pathé's Weekly, No. 33." (Pathé. April 23.)—The present situation in Mexico comes war news to be the most popular in this number.

"A Man in the House." (Biograph. Split reel. April 23.)—On the same reel with "The Tango Flat." Hubby goes away and wifey takes the house. He unsuspected return gives the tenants a fright and the audience a laugh.

"The Tango Flat." (Biograph. Split reel. April 23.)—On the same reel with "A Man in the House." A farc comedy. Grouch objects to all noises and the tango, but when surrounded with it he just naturally gets the habit.

"The Little Madonna." (Vitagraph. April 23.)—An unusual drama. A model dressed as the Madonna is the means of routing a burglar and saving her little daughter, who was adopted by an artist.

"Slippery Slim and the Stork." (Essanay. April 23.)—A comedy in which Slim has a baby thrust upon him by the boys. His bride-to-be gives him a drabbing to see it, and then its mother turns up and Slim gets it again.

"The Tale of a Chicken." (Lubin. Split reel. April 23.)—A story in which an "other Tale." An anti-gusted comedy. Two dorks are in love with the same girl. Her character finally wins her.

"Another Tale." (Lubin. Split reel. April 23.)—The antics of some queer little bugs lend a comical effect to the end of the reel. On the same reel with "The Tale of a Chicken."

"The Schooling of Mary Ann." (Selig. April 23.)—An excellent comedy drama. Mary Ann goes to college fresh from the country. Her experiences there are both comic and romantic. She finally comes out much the better for her education.

"The Klondike Bubble." (Lubin. Two reels. April 22.)—A drama with a long introduction to the plot and then when the plot comes to life it is all well. Producer Lamb is induced to invest in a mine up in Alaska, straightway his family start to live in anticipation of their coming wealth. After fifty years of waiting they are finally found and the gold is dug up.
"The Tattoo Mark." (Vitagraph. Three reels. April 5.) An entertaining drama, but difficult to follow because it is composed of two reels without joining the plot. Dan, mistreated by his father, runs away for seven years later and becomes a well-known crook. His sister, who has become a secret service agent, is assigned to run him down. Dan and his father Dan are about to shoot her when she recognizes him by the tattoo on his arm. The two plan to escape from the house, but Dan is shot while climbing out the window. He dies in his sister's arms.

"The Skeleton." (Powrs. April 20.) While Dorothy Davenport appears as the principal, a bet is made between two club members as to whether the woman will see her life. Her calling on the wife of one of them is mistaken until they investigate and welcome the new member.

"Exposing the Handcuff Kings." (Powrs. April 24.) On the same reel with "The Skeleton." Showing some of the tricks the handcuff kings use in freeing themselves.

"Who's Who." (Victor. May 2.)—Comical complications arise between a pair of clowns and the crewmen when the young bride-to-be mistakes her fiance's brother for her future husband and drags him off to get married.

"The Hungry Soldiers." (Powrs. Split reel. May 2.)—On the same reel with "Exposing the Handcuff Kings." The starving soldiers go to the store disguised as their captain and filling up. A good feature.

"In the Moonlight." (American. Two reels. May 4.)—A pretty and impressive drama. May plans to ease the tensions of their son who once pretended he loved her. But the love that May becomes aware of in their son causes her to relent—she sees it is a delusion.

"When the Villains Meet." (Keystone. April 26.)—Not nearly as good as Fred's other comic experiences. He buys a new home for his wife instead of a hot and succeeds in convincing her that his plan is better.

"Their Reward." (Princess. April 24.)—An interesting but common drama. A detective plans to catch a criminal and his wife. But his plan fails and each meets his just reward.

"Our Mutual Girl." No. 15. (Reliance. April 27.)—The main event this week is an introduction to Walter Meskow's new heroine, Julia's, "Our Mutual Girl."

"The Quicksands." (Majestic. May 1.)—A drama which we want to see a good comedy. Darcy deserts his young wife and meets just deserts by perishing in the quicksands.

"A Flurry in Hats." (Beauity. April 28.)—Rather a silly comedy. Hubby and father lose the boys and wives in hubbly bubulbly butalts. Later their neighbors decide to plan and each finds their wives have bought them themselves.

"A Woman's Loyalty." (Thanhouser. Two reels. May 1.)—In this comedy drama, extremely pathetic all the way through. A good idea of the character. This is supposed to take place in Paris, where the musings that the students indulge in are shown, ending with a grand scene of a duet, in which Zurine, the chief character, is blinded for life. A young artist leaves his hard-working wife to study in Paris, where he falls in love with another and marries her model. Later he is blinded and she deserts him. The story is a rather interesting one.

"The Path of Sorrow." (Warner's. Three reels.)—A pathetic and somewhat disagreeable drama. Through the machinations of a disappointed sire, Richard Harding is falsely imprisoned for fifteen years. In his father's absence, he recognizes his daughter, who is in love with his malefactor's brother.

"The Bogus Millionaire." (Milano Three reels.)—Redwin, a millionite, falls victim to the wiles of Quilla, the wife of a man he believes is married. Later she drives Redwin, and the former reconciliation is made. Redwin is thrown over a precipice and left for dead, but is rescued by Eldrida, his former wife, who also reteams lives. The two meet death in different ways. The photographs are worthy of a good magazine piece; the night scenes are exceptionally good. An intense and spell-binding drama.

"The Picture of Death." (Luna. Three reels.)—Some unusual and pleasing scenes are laid in this drama, but there are many superfluous scenes. The story is weakened without losing its charm. The ending is rather weak, hot enough to carry the story, but probably the only ending that would fit in with its type. John, Lissy's fiancé, robs her mother's house and is the cause of her death. Lissy spends the rest of her life trying to avenge her mother. She assumes the guise of her mother and meets with her second fiancé, to have her read the fortune of Lissy's faithful servant.

"Cigar Butts." (Majestic. May 28.)—A good drama, related in the picture. A detective is a notorious gambler, who is to judge, who smuggles diamonds in by sneaking them in cigs.

BARTOLA UNDER NEW CONTROL

Within the past few weeks the Bartola Orchestra which was placed on the market about a year ago for motion picture theatres passed into the control of W. G. Maxey, of Oshkosh, Wis., where this instrument is manufactured. Mr. Maxey is an owner of several large motion picture organs through the state of Wisconsin, and also has many other large financial interests in that state. Many of his commercial interests are centered in the city of Oshkosh, among which are some of the biggest industries of that city.

Now taking direct control of the Bartola Company he has enlarged the plant and installed machinery and expects to soon be able to turn out these instruments on short notice. Those who are familiar with the Bartola Orchestra know that it may be operated by a single piano player who can procure from it the same results as if it were a twelve-man orchestra.

It has in its make-up practically everything that is required in an orchestra for motion picture work. Its pipe-organ effect is perhaps the greatest factor of its success, because this effect can be procured with the same ease and without any extra effort on the part of the musician.

The sales end of this instrument is controlled by Charles C. Pyle, of Chicago, who has been selling these instruments for the past year or more. Mr. Pyle has been connected with the motion picture business the greater part of his business life and recognizes in the Bartola an asset to the equipment of the modern picture theatre.

ACME FEATURE EXCHANGE MOVES

The Acme Feature Exchange, of Chicago, which is owned by George Hutchinson, will move into larger and more spacious offices in the Powers Building in which they are now located. The Acme Feature Company will occupy the quarters which formerly housed the General Feature Film Company. While the Acme Company is still young, it has enjoyed splendid success and has far outgrown its present offices.

"After Dark," is the title of a one-reel drama in which J. Warren Kerrigan appears, now being produced by Jules De Grasse and his company of Victor brand players.

Manager Van Huisen of the Laemmle office had charge of taking a series of pictures showing an official government inspection of the Udall Packing Company's plant in South Omaha. The pictures made up one of the educational reels that put out last week.

W. J. Ferguson has been secured to play a part in the 16mm feature "His Last Chance."

The story revolves around a newspaper office with Miss Leah Baird and Alexander Guden in the lead roles.

The diplomatic service of Europe is visualized in a coming one-reel Reliance in which Courtenay Foote and Irene Hunt will have the leading roles.

Portrayals of animal life and methods utilized by trappers of jungle beasts will be a feature of "Frontiers of the Wild," a twored feature just completed by Otto Turner's company of "Special Feature" brand players, of which Miss Anna Little and Herbert Rawlinson are leading woman and leading man, respectively.

Chief Sebastian of the Los Angeles, Cal., Police Department has placed the entire force at the disposal of the Reliance and Majestic producing forces.

There will be a variety of marine settings in "The Pearl of the Sea," a one-reel drama now being put on by George Stanley's company of Powers brand players, of which Edna Mason is leading woman.

Jess Meredyth is playing lead in "The Count's Inheritance," a one-reel comedy being produced by Director David Kirkland's "Nestor" company. William Welfurt and Eddie Boland also appear in the picture.

Arthur Mackley, the old sheriff of Esvany pictures, is at work on another Reliance drama, "The Angel of the Giddeh," is the title of the picture.

Robert Leonard and Hazel Buckham have the principal roles in "His Father's Wife," a one-reel drama being completed this week by Lloyd Ingraham's Rex brand company. The story is an unusually gripping one.

Through R. F. Porter there has been installed a Simplex projector with the Cinema Clearing House Company, New York.

"Sapho of the Films" is the title of a one-reel comedy now being produced by Al Christie's company of Nestor brand players.

The Orpheum Theatre & Realty Company, New York, has purchased two Simplex machines to be installed in the Orpheum theatres at Memphis, Tenn., and Des Moines, Iowa.

Three single-reel dramas a week is what Willis L. Robards, the Frontier director, recently did.

Excessive of the spirit of harmony, the American Company under direction of Sydney Ayres, gave a dinner party to Mr. and Mrs. Ayres at the Santa Barbara, at Santa Barbara.

Edythe Sterling, who has been with Frontier for the past year, has left and is taking a much needed rest prior to accepting another engagement.

Director Pollard of the Beauty Company has succeeded in putting out an excellent comedy under the title "A Flurry in Hats." The dramatic action is well carried out and evidences a splendid versatility on the part of the entire cast.

Clever light comedies, suitable for full reels, are wanted by Frontier. Send your scripts direct to Santa Paula, California.

Charlie Hageman, recently a member of the Santa Monica Kalem Company, is now with Frontier.

Edwin Angius is receiving valuable tributes upon the formation of his own company, One lady admirer sent him a California bear ornament and a beautiful box of ties and an old cameo scarf pin.

The "Lucille Love, Girl of Mystery" serial is going along its adventurous way. Both Grace Gurney and cranius Ford are taking all sorts of risks, but their acting is making the series.

Extensive improvements are being made at the Frontier plant at Santa Paula, California.

The First Baptist Church at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., is now using a Powers 8A.

Dolly Larkin, lately with Luhin, has joined Frontier as leading star of the dramatic company.

An article by Arthur J. Lang of the Nichols Power Company in "Salt Motion Picture Machines," which appeared in the April 11 issue of Scientific American, has caused considerable favorable comment in motion picture circles.

Bertie Bushbee has left Frontier, and is now with the Kaye-Bea forces at Santa Monica.

"Famous Players Weeks" (Sherry feature every day) are now in progress at Leo's Park Theatre, Stapleton, and Leo's Empire Theatre, Rochester, N. Y.

The West Coast Photoplayers' Baseball League has just been formed, out in Los Angeles, and three of the Mutual organizations have organized teams to play the Universal and General Film companies' teams.

Al. E. Christie's Nestor Comedy Company has just completed "Could You Blame Her," a one-reel comedy.

Several interesting African jungle scenes are being put on by Otis Turner and his Special Feature company in "The Prowlers of the Wild." Herbert Rawlinson, Anna Little and William Tobin are the players in the production, which will be two reels in length.

"The Fighting Blood," a two-reeler Romaine Fielding Lefebre feature, is the first picture to give Texas location. It is said to be one of M. Coli's biggest successes.

Victor Johnson, P. A. for Warner's Features, is certifiably over the Warnor program and Mr. Johnson does not feel happy unless her name is constantly in print. Last week the star was proposed to by an Arabian sheik, who offered her a horse, and this week, in order to get realism, she went down on Hester Street, New York, the heart of the slum district, and lived for nine days on one solitary "morsel." All in the cause of art.

"Sheriff" Mackley is hard at work upon a one-reeler Western drama by Mary Bider Mchtdad, entitled "Dad's Outlaws," which will be an early release.

"Universal Like After the East!" is the title of a comedy being put on by Harry Edwards. Arthur "Sheriff" Mackley is assisted by Louise Gaum, Helen Thatchers, Fred Hornbee, Harry Moodie, and "Chlo" ELM of Universal Company's elephant.

General Cinetor's successful attack on Tyrrell stands still further interest to the "Life of Bult," the Mutual Company, which W. C. Cabanne has been working on for some weeks.

"The Battle of Gettysburg," a five-reeler comedy produced by Romaine Fielding, of the Lubin Company, is ready for the war in Mexico.

Olive Griffith has just finished producing "Home, Sweet Home," put out in Los Angeles, with a cast comprising the entire strength of the Resistance and Majestic forces.

“WILHELM TELL”
(Greene Features)
REVIEWED BY E. KENDALL GILLET

THE Greene’s Feature Photoplays, Inc., are to be congratulated upon having obtained the American rights to this wonderful reproduction of Schiller’s famous drama, Wilhelm Tell. Without doubt it can be compared with the best photoplays ever produced, and should attain a wide popularity throughout this country.

The reproduction was made amid the very surroundings in which the tragedy was supposed to have been enacted. As the original is the historical drama “par excellence” of German literature, so this screen reproduction is beyond reproach.

You see the Swiss chalets in all their rustic beauty surrounded by the hills and snow-capped peaks for which Switzerland is famous the world over. These are used throughout the picture as a background in such a way that they inspire awe, and when the picture is through one is left with a feeling of mingled wonder and amazement, for the beauty of it all is like a dream.

The photography throughout shows that the greatest skill was used, for the lights and shadows are employed in a way which is almost unbelievable. In several scenes, taken from the topmost peaks, the shadows of the clouds throw the snow-capped peaks into relief in a way which is grotesque.

The leads are taken by some of the foremost foreign actors. Karl Kienlechner plays Wilhelm Tell, a big, burly, muscular, mountaineer living apart and alone with his family high up among the peaks. He loves his freedom and will not take an active part in the canton’s defence till actually forced into it.

Fritz Fehr, as Lord Gessler, depicts a common type of bully when surrounded by friends, but a cringing coward when alone. This is brought out by his attitude toward Tell when he first meets him alone among the mountains and then later when surrounded by his soldiers he commands and threatens, forcing Tell, as the legend states, to shoot an apple from off the head of his son with his cross bow.

Margaret Wilkens, as Hedwig, wife of Tell, brings out the qualities of the trusting, devoted wife and mother admirably.

Tese von Tasso takes the part of Gertrude, wife of Werner Stauffacher, whose imposing chalet is burned while the infuriated inhabitants of the canton surge about in vain effort to break through the soldiers and save the home of their idol.

In Emil Lind, as old Heinrich von Melchital, we see a type of man to be revered for his love and courage. After his son has struck one of the soldiers and escaped to the fastnesses this poor old man is threatened with having his eyes put out unless he produces his son within three days. He is unable to do this and so Gessler, true to his word, carries out his threat. The old man comes in in the midst of a royal oriole when the governor is drunk among his retainers.

His eyes are burned out by the soldiers, who force him back into the banquet hall. This is the saddest part in the play and not soon to be forgotten.

The story from start to finish is beautiful. It brings out the hardships which the three cantons suffer, shows their struggle for proper treatment, their final handing together under the ultimate leadership of Wilhelm Tell, who has the post forced upon him by the story and sight of old Heinrich von Melchital.

The titles throughout are exact translations of the original, which adds greatly to the effectiveness of the entire piece.

In conclusion, let me say that this is one of the few features yet produced which makes one sorry at the end of the six reels that there are not six more yet to come.

"THE OTHER HALF OF THE NOTE"

(General Film Masterpieces)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A THREE-REEL detective story—one that holds the interest throughout. It differs from most detective stories in that the detective is an ordinary detective; he doesn't perform impossible feats, but is just possessed of an average amount of intelligence which he knows how to use and when to use. The smugglers, the object of the detective's attack, are just plain smugglers. In other words, the story is entirely possible and although as a rule a picture doesn't hold one's interest unless it contains something of the impossible, this one does.

The photography leaves nothing to be desired in clearness, though some of the light effects are not as good as they ought to be. For instance, Brady, one of the smugglers, goes into a stateroom on board ship and turns on the electric light; instead of the room becoming lighter, it grows darker, but this is the only serious fault that may be found. Most of the scenes are easy to take, and for that reason are as nearly perfect as possible. The plot of the drama revolves around a torn note, as the title implies.

Jack, the nephew of Senator Munroe, is bringing in a rare book to his uncle in Washington. Brady, a smuggler, coming in on the same ship, secretes some diamonds in the binding of the book, making an innocent accomplice of Jack. Detective Cole, who is in love with Jack's sister, is told to meet the ship and watch out for the diamond smugglers.

On the arrival of the ship he sees Brady slip a note to an accomplice, reading, "Gems in nephew's present—the rare book—in binding." Cole tries to get the note from Clark, but only succeeds in getting the half of it that reads—"the rare book—in binding."

The rest of the story is devoted to the efforts of Cole to find the diamond smugglers. He finally tracks them through George, the senator's butler, who proves to be an accomplice.

The cast includes Robert Ellis, who plays the part of Cole; Richard Purdon, Edward Hoyt, William Dunn, and Irene Boyle. The acting of Winthrop Chamberlain, who plays the part of Jack, the senator's nephew, is poor.

"IN THE MOONLIGHT"

(American)

REVIEWED BY C. J. VER HALEN

NOTHING sensational, nothing startling, but just a smooth-running story with plenty of interest, good acting and good effects makes this film an interesting subject to view. Winifred Greenwood does some good acting in the part of Mary Langton. The opening scene is especially pretty where the moon breaks through the clouds and floods the small lake with its silver lights and discloses a canoe anchored among the water-lilies. The production is enjoyable from both scenic narrative standpoints.

George Lyton and Mary Langton, guests at the home of Mrs. Westley, Mary's sister, are strangely influenced while canoeing on the placid moonlit waters of a lagoon. Later Mary learns that Lyton is married. She realizes that she has been deceived, and the thought of his presence is unbearable to her. She leaves to forget her troubles in travel. Several years pass. Dora gives a house-party for her daughter, Sunshine, and Frank, the son of Lyton, is invited. The father is also asked to come for a week end. Frank and Sunshine fall in love. Then Mary returns from abroad. Mary alone cares to go canoeing in the moonlight with Frank, and the moon plays Cupid, so that Frank proposes and is accepted.

Lyton arrives and is presented to Mary by Frank as her new father-in-law. Lyton pleads with her to give up his son. Mary's heart is broken. She rushes to the lagoon and paddles out. In the library Sunshine and Frank find happiness before the fireplace. Flashing back to the lagoon the empty canoe is seen drifting beneath the moon, which again breaks through the clouds that would cover its face.

"WAR IS HELL"
(Eclectic)
REVIEWED BY A. DAINSON MICHELL

THIS four-part special of the Eclectic Company, coming at a most opportune moment for them, is beyond doubt the finest film of its kind in existence. A more thoroughly interesting picture would be hard to make or imagine.

The story, which is running in the Hearst papers in novel form, is not entirely composed of war scenes. The main plot is a beautiful love story carefully worked out, in conjunction with numerous battle scenes forcefully illustrating the title, "War is Hell." Sudden death in all its grimness is shown, yet without any semblance of the gruesome. There are many chances for blood to be shed in such a manner that might offend, but this is entirely eliminated.

The picture is colored by "The Eclectic Natural Color Process" which has been successfully used in a number of other pictures. There are a large number of scenes which the coloring makes more effective. The burning of the enemies, war balloons, which is one of the greatest and most expensive photographs made, would not attain the same valuation without the coloring which distinctly emphasizes the flames and smoke mounting in the air.

The uniforms of the soldiers against the green foliage is also assisted greatly by the coloring. Unlike many other tinted pictures, there is no change in the hue from start to finish. The colors do not "jump."

When General Sherman said "War is Hell" conditions attending the killing of fellow-men in the cause of patriotism were much different than those dealt with in this picture. War was hell undoubtedly at that time, and more so now with the use of aeroplanes, balloons and dirigibles. All of these, and more, are intermixed in this film with the main story which concerns the war between two small principalities in Europe.

Lester, the hero, is living in one of the principalities when war breaks out with his own country. He leaves and becomes an army aeronaut, after exchanging gifts with his sweetheart. His destruction of the balloons sets the enemy against him personally, and after a time the brother of the girl he loves captures his airship, and he is forced to seek shelter in a windmill. After holding off the enemy, who cannot capture him alive, he is killed in the blowing up of the building. This is a wonderful piece of work and worthy of the highest praise.

Some time later his fiancée hears of his death and becomes a nun, rather than marry anyone else. The manner in which she learns of it makes an interesting episode in a thoroughly good picture.

"THE BRUTE"
(Famous Players)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

PRESENTING in four reels the drama of Frederick Arnold Kummer, with Malcolm Williams playing the title role. Mr. Williams is well adapted for the part, and for an actor of the speaking stage has no difficulty in playing for the camera. His gestures, upon which he relies mostly, are strong and expressive. He is assisted by House Peters as Billy West, Helen Hilton as Edith Pope, Mme. Dalberg as Mrs. Pope, Mary Moore as Alice Pope, William Vaughn as Emerson Hall and the child actor, Jack Darling, as Bobby Rogers. Their interpretations, taken as a whole, show the work of a careful director.

The plot itself allows for strong dramatic scenes. It is in this that the cast excels. Money versus love is the thought upon which the story hinges. A woman loving her husband dearly, although she has been morally false to him, also loves money and riches. She is given her choice; she must select one or the other. She chooses the latter, but finds out her mistake.

The title, "The Brute," is selected from one of the passages: "You have called me a brute, then I'll act like one." Probably this is the point where the interest is centered more upon the characters than anywhere else. What will he do to prove to her that her assertion is true and that he is a brute?

A number of innovations are introduced. One of these is the night scene on Broadway, showing the lights of the theatres and the other electric signs along the "Great White Way" north from Times Square. Considering the difficulty of such a picture, the result is excellent. It is shown only as a flash, depicting a man's thoughts of home and his desire to be there.

The actors are introduced by Father Time turning over the pages of a great book, through the leaves of which the members of the cast step.

One of the scenes is particularly effective. The wife, imagining she loves her husband's friend and willing to elope with him, dreams, while sitting in her chair, that he crosses the room and kisses her. By a well-timed double exposure the husband enters the room just at that time, and it is he who bestows the kiss, just as the dream-man touches her lips. The effect on her face as she discovers the real donor is a clever piece of acting.

The settings are numerous and costly, fitting well with the action represented.

Miss Julia Nagi, a prominent Omaha society woman, was recently married to Giddon James, one of the directors of the Vitagraph Company of America.

Nevada people are interested in Universal pictures showing the laying of the cornerstone of the Nebraska building at the Panama-Pacific exposition grounds. The pictures are being shown throughout the State this week.

The "Zingo" series of the Warner Feature Film Company are being enthusiastically received in Cincinnati according to A. Mueller, manager of the local exchange.

The Los Angeles chapter of the State Club of America has moved into its new quarters in the Westlake Park district, and, as an adjunct to moving, gave a house warming party. A half hundred persons prominent in motion-picture doings were in attendance, among them being Philo Smith, Allan Dwan, Hobart Bosworth, Lois Weber, Fred Balshofer and Austin Farnum. Philip Smalley and Miss Lois Weber contributed $50 to the local chapter, to be used in purchasing technical books for the library.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Important to Every Exhibitor

To Our Friends, the Exhibitors:

The enormous success and the unprecedented popularity we have experienced with the PERILS OF PAULINE has led us to take another step toward giving the American Exhibitor the very best possible in the way of feature pictures.

We received such good service, such hearty co-operation and such perfect results from PATHE FRERES on the PERILS OF PAULINE series that we have made a further special agreement with PATHE FRERES to lease more of their studio facilities, more of their leading stars and more of their directors to produce under our direction and for our sole use and release multiple reel American features. These special features will include both comedy and drama.

We have been giving our patrons the cream of the European studios and now we can offer the highest quality American plays as well, so that you can fill a feature program from one of the Eclectic exchanges and be assured of the heartiest co-operation and the highest quality. These new plays will be made in the Pathe studio in America and will all be Pathe standard which you know means the best possible.

Watch for the first announcement. We are working on the first release now and it is a whirlwind. We have shown you what we can do in the PERILS OF PAULINE. We have a reputation to sustain and it will be sustained. Write us here or to the nearest office for privileges.

THE WAIF

One of the best European features we have ever been able to purchase

Leading part played by Mlle. Fromet of the Theatre du Vaudeville

TRUE TO LIFE

The advantages of this truly wonderful feature are the chances it affords to show your patrons the way the small street arabs of the continent live and work. The pictures, taken on the spot, are an actual showing of the exact existence of these small future criminals. The action of this particular story is both

PATHETIC AND JOYFUL

Pathetic in his separation from his fond parents and in his experiences during the years he is forced to beg for a living before he is restored to loving arms. Mlle. Fromet never put such feeling into any play before, and the kind-hearted people Remi meets on his travels show up in strong contrast the villainous uncle.

A BIG HIT

AS GOOD AS A TRIP TO EUROPE

The story of THE WAIF is laid in Paris and London mostly, but the travels of Remi and his companions take them to all parts of France and some places in England. The photography of the places they visit along their route includes some of the most to be seen in Europe. The picture was taken in France by one of the best of the European manufacturers, and we consider ourselves very lucky to be able to offer the exhibitors in America a feature of this class.

WONDERFUL SCENERY

Action

There is something inspiring in a battle between two great dreadnoughts. Something sinister in the movements of the long, lean torpedo boats and destroyers. They steal upon the enemy unawares and aid in the work of annihilation and destruction.

Many such scenes as the above have been acted for the camera and are today depicted in motion pictures.

When projected on the screen by Power’s Cameragraph No. 6A, perfect definition of the action is shown.

An Insult and an Injustice

CENSORSHIP by statute has been assailed on many grounds and can be assailed on many more. But no graver charge can be brought against it than this: That it violates the fundamental principles of American justice, and that it is the most flagrant insult that can be offered to the reputable motion picture manufacturer and to the motion picture industry.

CONSIDER what censorship means.
The law forbids the exhibition of immoral, obscene or harmful pictures. The motion picture censor's attitude of mind is that every picture that every manufacturer makes is immoral, obscene or harmful until the contrary is proven.

And he forces the manufacturer to produce every picture before him and prove that it is not immoral, harmful or obscene.

THAT IS TO SAY, THE MANUFACTURER IS FORCED TO PROVE THAT HE IS INNOCENT, BEFORE THERE IS ANY EVIDENCE AGAINST HIM TO SHOW THAT HE IS GUILTY!

AND HE IS COMPELLED TO PAY FOR THIS UNHEARD-OF PRIVILEGE!

SUCH censorship overthrows the fundamental, unwritten statute of American law, which holds that a man is innocent, in the eyes of the law, until he is proven guilty. To the legal injustice of censorship is added the degrading personal insult implied to each individual manufacturer.

He is assumed to be a perpetual law-breaker. And more.

HE is rated as a trafficker in vile and filthy pictures, as a scavenger of society's offal, a vender of moral sewage, until he can prove that he is a respect-able and honest citizen, seeking merely to make a harmless livelihood.

By all legal standards, the attitude of the censor, adopted as it is arbitrarily and without specific provocation or foundation, is tantamount to libel or slander.

It is a wanton and unjustifiable assault upon a manufacturer's reputation.

"YOU'RE a scoundrel and a criminal!" exclaims the censor.

"I'm not!" retorts the producer.

"Prove it!" cries the censor.

"I will!" says the producer. And he does.

"All right," admits the censor; "you've convinced me you're not a criminal. Two dollars, please!"

Only the matter is much more serious than that, especially when the censor fails to be convinced and begins to whet his knife, like Shylock.

FOR the producer very soon finds that he is before a drum-head tribunal. The censor is prosecutor, judge and jury, all in one.

The producer has no counsel. He can have none. He can offer no witnesses. He cannot take the stand in his own behalf. His judges are controlled by neither precedent nor law.

They act under a statute which empowers them to make law out of their own prejudices.

And he has no appeal, save the costliest possible.

IMAGINE a system of justice under which every business man was compelled to come into court, before entering into any transaction, and pay the costs of a proceeding to prove that he was guiltless of any illegal act or intent, on a purely arbitrary summons, unsupported by a shred of evidence.

That is what censorship by statute does to the motion picture producer.
Detroit Denounces State Censorship

Exhibitors Hear "News" Articles, then Vote Unanimously Against Censoring by State—Accept Present National Board

Special to The Motion Picture News
Detroit, Mich, May 5.

SECRETARY O. G. COCKS of the National Board of Motion Picture censors addressed the Detroit Exhibitors' League on April 21, and made a very favorable impression.

At the meeting of April 26 the Detroit representative of The Motion Picture News had the articles on censorship in the issues of April 25 and May 2.

An informal ballot of the members present was unanimously against any form of censorship save that of the national board, which the members were willing to accept.

Among those present at the meeting were: President Peter Juico, of the Pastime and Montclair theatres; Secretary C. M. Orth, Parkview; J. C. Ritter, Boulevard; H. M. Anderson, Clay Avenue; S. Ackerman, Eastside; Charles Seestedt, Northwestern; Howard Fierce, Liberty; R. L. Bishop, Globe; Ruby Fischer, Warfield; O. Seestedt, Theatorium; J. E. Stocker, Myrle; Herman Warren and August Kliest.

Dallas Operators Walk Out

Exhibitors Refuse Contract—Operators Strike and Issue "Unfair" List of Houses—Struggle Promises to Be Bitter

Dallas, May 3.

Because the exhibitors refused to consider their demands for better working conditions, members of the local operators' union walked out April 23.

They are still out and the struggle for recognition promises to be a long and bitter one. Since the strike started one house has signed, but 26 operators and idle 12 shows are being widely advertised as "unfair."

The playhouses now on the "unfair" list are: Hippodrome, Queen, Palace, Candy, Empire, Princess Bioscope, Favorite, Washington, Crystal, Best and Nickelodeon.

The vaudeville houses were not affected, because of the affiliation between the operators and the stage employees' union. On the third day of the strike the operators leased the Dixie Theatre and opened it with a big demonstration preceded by a parade which was led by mounted policemen. The strikers carried banners telling of their battle.

The trouble started when the exhibitors refused to consider a contract offered by the operators. The contract called for a salary of $52 for seven days and a decrease of the working hours from 11 to 9. As a reciprocal measure, the operators offered to stand all losses for damaged films.

Robert H. Campbell, representative of the American Federation of Labor, who is conducting the strike, then asked the exhibitors to draw up a contract of their own. They refused.

Operators were scarce and negro porters and ushers were stationed in the booths. The city electrician disqualified many of these, whereupon men were imported to turn the levers.

The strike is being conducted in an orderly manner. Only one difficulty has been reported. The strikers have not picketed, but dodgers have been scattered all over the city.

The unionists declare they will stay out until the exhibitors accede to their demands, and the exhibitors seem to be equally stubborn.

DETROIT POLICE CEASE CENSORSHIP

Special to The Motion Picture News
Detroit, Mich., May 5.

Police Commissioner John Gillespie has announced that he will return Motion Picture Censors Lester Potter to the ranks and make no attempt to censor pictures because the Board of Estimates would not allow the sum asked for an assistant censor and the fitting up of a room at police headquarters where all films would be taken and passed. The added expense would have been $4,200.

The work of Lester Potter has received no criticism from either exhibitors or patrons of the motion picture houses, and exchange managers have expressed regret that he may be retired. As a matter of fact, he has followed closely the rulings of the National Board of Censors.

SAVES ACTOR FROM DEATH

Alfred Norton, a Thanhouser actor, was rescued from certain death recently in New Rochelle, by A. Leo Stevens, an aeronaut. Mr. Norton had been required to do some perilous work in midair in a balloon, and lost his balance. At great risk to himself Mr. Stevens pulled him back in the basket.
ONCE more the voice of the censor is heard in the land of Ohio, after many days.

The fifteen-day time limit of the Ohio district judges has expired, the Mutual has not seen fit to ask for a further suspension from the United States Supreme Court, and the Cox - Neff - Durbin - Finley board of censors is preparing to resume its depredations upon the motion picture.

"I am much gratified that we have won the case," said Attorney-General Tim Hogan, Democratic candidate backed by the Cox machine for the United States Senate from Ohio, when he heard of the Washington decision.

"I never doubted the outcome, as all the w-ur-r-l-d is in favor of a censorship for movin' pictures. All movin' pictur' men who want clean pictures favor th' censorship, and, with one exception, every company in th' State has co-operated with th' censors in their work.

Harry E. Vestal, who conducts a theatre and also a Democratic weekly newspaper in Ada, Hardin County, Ohio, and Mrs. Maude Murray Miller, who is on the daily payroll of the Columbus Evening Dispatch, a pro-Cox newspaper, and who is also secretary of the Ohio Board of Censors, are supposed to be in Cleveland, according to the newspapers, to clear the shelves of exchanges of all films to be shown in Ohio.

Later, the third censor, when appointed, will assist Editor Vestal in Cleveland, and Mrs. Miller will return to Columbus and censor the special feature films, according to published statements. There is no announcement that she will resign her steady position as a newspaper reporter.

Civil Service Aid Invoked

Not content with past political performances, the Finley-Durbin-Cox-Neff Democratic political machine in this State is planning to perpetuate the present censors in office for all time.

"Are the members of the State motion picture board under civil service?" is a question that has been lurriedly put up to Tim Hogan since the protests from the gouged exhibitors of the State, the exchanges, the manufacturers, without any exception whatever, have grown in force and spirit.

No appointment will be made of the successor to J. W. Maddox, who was Mr. Neff's personal selection for the Censorship Board, and who later resigned, until the "civil service" decision of Hogan is made.

It is practically a foregone conclusion, however, that the berth will go to Sam F. Cary, a former newspaper-man of Cincinnati, and son of the late General Sam Cary, of Cincinnati, who back in the old "greenback" days of politics was a prominent factor in the game.

Cary is a Democrat, and for years has worked on the "Cincinnati Enquirer," a Cox newspaper. The Governor was also connected with that newspaper. Cary has been a candidate for several State and National political appointments. He is a member of the Queen City Cox Committee.

If the censors are under civil service (and in all probability they are) a competitive examination will be held by the State Civil Service Commission just as soon as possible, and from the list of those who pass the appointee will come.

It will be noted, however, that Mr. Vestal, personal friend of "Bill" Finley and "Bill" Durbin, both of Hardin County, and Mrs. Miller, long affiliated with the Cox string of Ohio newspapers, will not be obliged to pass any examination.

Their jobs are secure, for they have the strength of the well-oiled Democratic machine behind them.

Had to "Choke Off" Mrs. Miller

It will be remembered that "interviews" given out by Mrs. Miller had to be checked by the "Powers That Be" in Ohio, because they were strange and startling, to put it mildly.

It should also be remembered that under civil service rules in this broad free land of ours, those passing such examinations are supposed to devote their entire time and attention to the civil service position being held and yet—

Mr. Vestal conducts a theatre, conducts a Democratic newspaper, and censors motion pictures.

Mrs. Miller works daily on the editorial staff of an evening newspaper, writes special articles, is active socially and officially and censors motion pictures.

Another interesting item anent the civil service conditions in Ohio is that Boss W. F. Finley, pal of "Bill" Durbin—both more or less active in support of the law creating the Censorship Boards, both more or less interested in Vestal's appointment thereon—"Bill" Finley, we repeat, is under an indictment brought by an Ohio grand jury in the city of Columbus, Ohio, but a few weeks ago, and he is charged with alleged violation of those self-same civil service laws now to be brought to bear to further gouge the exhibitors of the Buckeye State.

Finley, be it known, is charged with soliciting campaign contributions from State employees under civil service. He filed a petition recently to quash the indictment, but the courts refused and he must stand trial.

The Pledge That Is Not Kept

When the board was first created and the membership was being considered all applicants were asked, "Will you devote your entire time and attention to the duties of censorship?"

All were required to take this pledge.

But evidently exceptions were made to this rule, as it affects Mr. Vestal—

Who conducts a newspaper, conducts a theatre, helps push Durbin's political machine—and censors motion pictures;

And Mrs. Miller—

Who works daily on the staff of the Columbus newspaper, serves on State Boards—and censors motion pictures.

Civil service under the present administration in Ohio, the administration that created the first State Board of Motion Picture Censors, is a delusion and a snare. It creates hearty laughter among the "hoi polloi." Everything is under civil service—even the township and ward assessors.
They held a civil service examination for the tax-gatherers, took the matter out of the hands of the people, and up in Hardin County (home of "Bill" Durbin and Mr. Vestal) it is charged that one Democrat was appointed an assessor who never took the examination.

Ohio has all kinds and designs of boards, made to order to satisfy the insatiable political appetites of the bosses, and the end is not yet.

It is planned to perpetuate the faithful in office, too.

The Ohio exhibitors do not relish the personnel of the present censorship board and they do not relish giving them life jobs, either.

Censoring Films by Synopses

Not all films censored in Ohio are thrown upon the screen. Oh, no! Some of the work has been accomplished—a great deal of the work, in fact—by reading brief sketches of the film's contents prepared by the producers.

In other words, by reading the stories of the releases in the motion picture trade papers and jumping at conclusions.

Wouldn't you be willing to read stories of releases in the trade papers at $1,500 yearly salary and pursue your other occupations also?

Echo answers, "yes."

Mrs. Vestal was neglected to state, purchased that Ada weekly newspaper of political tinge after he had been appointed a film censor. He is conducting it in an able manner, his friends state.

They also say he is a professed Republican in politics, that Mrs. Miller's politics is unknown, and that Mr. Sam Cary, if appointed, will be the only Democrat on the board.

No politics here, is a Columbus statement in course of preparation.

We repeat that "Bill" Durbin recommended Vestal, Neff favored Maddox, and Cox favored Mrs. Miller.

We repeat that Vestal and Durbin and Finley, all in Hardin County, are friends.

Sam F. Cary, who will probably be appointed third censor, worked for years on John R. McLean's Cincinnati "Enquirer," along with now Governor Jimmie Cox, and is a great friend of M. A. Neff. Cary, Cox and Neff are Bryan Democrats.

See how it works out?

Here is a late sample of the stuff that is being carried by the Democratic press in Ohio, and which incites the average student of motion pictures to tear his or her hair. This is the latest from a Cleveland Democratic newspaper. Read it, please, and laugh:

The Woman Censor and How She "Does It"

"Operator, Turn the Crank, or Movies for One."

"That's the title which might be given to the daily activities in Cleveland of Mrs. Maude Murray Miller, of the Ohio Board of Film Censors, Columbus, Ohio.

"Grop[e your way into the uncertain darkness of an improvised theatre in any one of the big film exchanges in Cleveland and when your eyes have become accustomed to the dimness you'll see a woman seated at a desk in the rear of the room intently scanning a picture flashed on the screen.

"If the film's labeled 'comedy,' and if a half-dozen misfit policemen tumble over each other into a groveling pyramid while pursuing a burlesque 'villain,' Mrs. Miller smiles.

"It's a natural smile, too. Having part in the censoring of nearly 10,000 reels of film has not left her without a sense of appreciation for the humorous.

"But it's the drama with the child actor that pleases Mrs. Miller most, she says. Let a child romp, finger in mouth, to the front of the picture, and the censor leans forward.

"And the pictures have on the children that does more than anything else to mold the censor's policies," Mrs. Miller said yesterday. 'We want to be fair as we can to the producers and the exchange men, but we cannot allow scenes of murder and revenge to be shown in this State.'

"To illustrate her point, Mrs. Miller marked a melodrama production dealing with a feud in the Kentucky hills 'not approved.'

"The acting was excellent, she said, but the fact every actor carried a gun was enough to condemn the film for Ohioans.

"Not all films censored are thrown on the screen. Some of the work is done by reading brief sketches of the film's contents prepared by the producers.

"If a film man labels a reel 'educational' it will pass the State Board without comment.'

The recent expose in The Motion Picture News created little sensation in Ohio—the facts as we give them are too well known in the Buckeye State. But damage has been done the prestige of the Bryan-Cox-Finley-Durbin-Neff machine in the eyes of adjoining States and leagues.

Personal Attacks Don't Alter Facts

Even now, we are informed, the Cincinnati press bureau is grinding out stuff calculated to decry the facts as printed in the News. Also some personal shafts directed at the author of these articles are being prepared.

We expected that from Cincinnati, where, to quote Cleveland exhibitors, "the personal exploitation press bureau" is located.

Personalities directed at the writer will not save the ruffled feelings of two-thirds of the motion-picture exhibitors in the State of Ohio who are whetting their political axes and bowie-knives and hoping and praying for a Republican Legislature in this State next fall, when the Neff Censorship Board can be kicked into the political discard.

Neither will personal accusations of "disgruntlement," "soreheadness," etc., refute these facts, which we repeat

That the Ohio Board of Censorship is knee-deep in politics. That two of the three members had two or more occupations at one and the same time.

That Boss "Bill" Durbin, M. A. Neff, and Governor Cox dictated the primary appointments.

That the early "interviews" given out by Mrs. Miller were deemed ill-advised.

That an attempt is now being made to "civil-service" the present members of the Ohio Board so that they cannot be touched by the whirlwind of protest that is steadily gathering from exhibitors who are mulcted from their hard-earned dollars.

A Sample of "Bill" Durbin's Influence

Maybe you think that "Bill" Durbin, political dictator of Hardin County, has not influence enough to take care of Hardin County, Ohio, or maybe you think the State Board of Censorship is too small a matter to concern Finley and Durbin, partners in political manipulation.

Kenton, Ohio, the county-seat of Hardin, is a city of about eight thousand inhabitants. Durbin has influence enough on postmasterships and other matters to stir up Washington and a United States Senate over a seemingly small political job.

A special dispatch to the Cleveland "Leader" from Washington says:

"Senator Pomerene to-day decided to hurl down the gage of battle to W. W. Durbin and Wm. Finley over the Kenton postmastership. Upon receipt of a telegram to-day from Paul Watts, of Kenton, who was appointed to canvass the result of the recent postmaster election held here that Carl W. Smith won by a majority of 35. Pomerene instructed Arthur Black, his secretary, to send Smith's name to Postmaster-General Burleson as soon as proof of the election can get to Washington by mail.

"Durbin and Finley, who are backing M. M. Thompson for the place, and who secured for Thompson the endorsements of practically every important Democratic job-holder in the State, have appealed directly to Burleson for Thompson."

Pomerene, nevertheless, will insist on Smith's appointment, and will declare to Burleson that if any fraud was practised Smith was not guilty of it. The Senator has lost patience

Do Exhibitors Want Censorship?

Theatre Managers and Exchange Men in Omaha, Detroit and Beloit, Wis., Declare Views in Motion Picture News’ Symposium—Congratulate News on Fight Against State Censors—Only One Man Favors Them Out of Fourteen Interviewed

Do the exhibitors of the United States want censorship of motion pictures? And if they do, what kind of censorship do they want—local, state or national censorship?

The Motion Picture News has undertaken to ascertain just what the truth of this all-important matter is. It is time the truth were known. So many contradictory assertions have been made, as to what the exhibitors wanted and what they did not want that THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS has decided to appeal to the exhibitors themselves.

The correspondents of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS have been instructed to canvas the exhibitors of their territory thoroughly, obtain their views on censorship and forward them at the earliest moment to our office.

The first few opinions have begun to come in and they are herewith submitted to the readers of the News. These opinions will be published every week until every exhibitor in the country who desires has had a hearing.

Letters from exhibitors on this issue will be welcomed and given full space in this symposium.

Exchange men have been included in the canvass because they have interests that correspond to those of the exhibitors, and because they view censorship from the standpoint of the manufacturers as well.

Omaha as a city and Nebraska and Iowa as states are nearly ideal as regards censorship. Local exchange men and exhibitors are congratulating themselves as they note the outrageous conditions existing in Ohio, Illinois and in many other sections of the country.

Omaha exhibitors are unanimous in favor of an authorized board of national censors, and are opposed to state or local censorship.

State laws in Iowa prohibit films showing hull-fights or prize-fights. An Omaha ordinance prohibits prize-fight films. A sort of state censorship law was defeated at the last Nebraska legislature. Present conditions are so satisfactory to all concerned that no attempt to change is anticipated.

The Social Service Board of Omaha inspects a number of reels, especially those not passed by the National Board of Censorship. It has recommended that several films be withheld, but it has recommended the cutting of none.

Exchange men and exhibitors have willingly co-operated with the board. The board includes men and women and is appointed as a part of the police department. The members serve without pay, but wear badges that admit them to any show. Here are some opinions:

Frank Ramsdell, Manager Mutual Exchange, Omaha: “I was in Kansas when that farce of a censorship law was passed there. It was as objectionable as the Ohio law. It still stands on the books, but it is not enforced.

“I am in favor of a national board, and decidedly opposed to either state or local censorship. The Motion Picture News is helping us with a fight that fits in exactly with my opinions.

“I have made a close study of censorship and am amazed that intelligent people would sanction such a law as exists in Ohio. They don’t understand it. Something such as your fight is needed to show them who is back of it all—the politicians—and their purpose. When the people know the truth there will remain no doubt of their action.”

Frank Harris, Manager of the Empress Theatre here and president of the Nebraska State Branch, No. 22, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors’ League of America: “I just refused a $700 contract because the film had not been approved by the National Board of Censorship. The National Board is my idea of ideal censorship. The whole trouble is being caused by the use of films not approved by the National Board. I even objected to the Social Service Board here having a say-so regarding the films. They are a bunch of old hens. Who else would furnish their time for nothing, unless they were cranks?”

“I had experience in Winnipeg, Canada, where they have provincial censorship. There they prohibited us showing posters of a man with a knife or gun drawn. We drew pictures of flowers or ribbons in the hands of the poster on the poster, and made a joke out of the matter. There would be a picture of a man with blood in his eye, his crumpling enemy, and in the crumpling enemy, and in the hand a bouquet of posies.

“That’s all such censorship is. Just a farce. The Motion Picture News is doing an excellent work in fighting such unreasonable censorship and I am with you. The subject will be a red-hot one at our state meeting on June 2 and 3, and I have no doubt we will voice all the sentiments now being expressed by you.”

E. R. Pearson, Manager General Film Exchange, Omaha: “A national board of censors with authority is my choice. It would be more economical and more effective.

“The films should be censored while still in the possession of the manufacturers. Many films are shown all over the world, so the board should have international power. The state or local censorship, aside from the fact that politicians use it for graft, is objectionable from this point: The board in one city or state would find one thing objectionable in a film. The board from another state or city would find another thing objectionable. As a result, the poor film would be whacked and cut until it would be worthless.

“The Motion Picture News is making a great fight. While our conditions here are just as we would have them, we can sympathize with the other fellows. I hope they win. I hope your campaign will result in a national board with authority.”

Peter Jupe, President Detroit Motion Picture Exhibitors’ League and of the Michigan league: “I am opposed to state censorship. Women would be appointed on the board who perhaps never visited motion picture theatres. They could not fairly pass upon pictures. I am opposed to a local board for the same reason. We are able to take care of business and keep it clean without any censorship, but I have no objection to the work of the National Board. It is fair and honest. Only a lot of fanatical women are shouting for censorship. There is no demand for state censorship in Michigan."

C. M. Orth, Secretary of the Detroit league and the Michigan league: "I am opposed to all censorship. We don't need it. But I have no complaint to make of the National Board. There is only a small percentage of films that escape their inspection and their work is all right. If a state or local board is formed, politics will creep in."

J. C. Ritter, Boulevard Theatre: "I oppose state or local censorship boards. Persons are likely to be appointed who know nothing of motion pictures and whose criticism will be trivial rather than helpful. I approve of the National Board and the way it does its work. There is no public demand for state or local censorship. There is no demand for state censorship and only a few women belonging to clubs here are urging local censorship. Leave the work to the National Board."

A. M. Blankemeyer, Grand Circus Theatre: "There is no necessity for any form of censorship. Motion picture exhibitors have too much invested in their business to run anything objectionable. The public will not stand for it and the exhibitors will not risk their displeasure. There are only two or three houses in Detroit that will run films not approved by the National Board. The work of the board is all right. There is no politics involved in the local censorship here. There is no public demand for censorship."

Ruby Fischer, Warfield Theatre: I am opposed to state or local censorship. It isn't needed. The work of the National Board of Censors is all right. There is no public demand for state or local censorship. Leave it up to the National Board. Politics is sure to enter into the distribution of jobs if a local board is created. The exhibitors would have 'the pay of motion pictures.'"

A. M. Renne, Ypsilanti Opera House, Ypsilanti, Mich.: "There would be an advantage to me in a state censorship. Pictures cut in Detroit are filled out again and sent to me with the cutouts replaced. I have a particular clientele in a college town and what is bad for Detroit is probably bad for me. We have no local censorship in Ypsilanti. Nevertheless, I favor what is good for the motion picture business in general and state censorship would be bad I am not sure that I am for it."

Douglas Dickerson, Detroit Manager World Special Films Corporation: "I am opposed to state censorship. It would create confusion throughout the country. Manufacturers would have to eliminate one thing for one state, something else for another. Local censorship is worse. A piece would be taken out of a film in Jackson, another in Grand Rapids and so on until there would be nothing left. There is no public demand for censorship, but the work of the National Board is all right. Create a board that has the backing of the national government and compel all manufacturers to submit their films to this board before any are sent out. Then they would not require censoring afterward. They will stop putting in features that must be cut out."

Manager Ward, Mutual Exchange, Detroit: "There is no demand for state censorship and no necessity for it. Local censorship is expensive and unsatisfactory. It puts the expense of eliminations on the exchanges where the manufacturers ought to stand it. It is not fair. The action of the National Board should be sufficient and final."

George W. Weeks, Manager Detroit Universal Exchange: "I do not favor state or local censorship if we can have a legal and compulsory national censorship. State censorship has not been considered in Michigan. Local censorship would mean that our films would be cut to pieces in every town where they were shown, or the manufacturers would have to send us blank film, for you could not get individuals in different cities to see all your pictures. It is not worth doing business and keep it clean without any censorship, but I have no objection to the work of the National Board. It is fair and honest. Only a lot of fanatical women are shouting for censorship. There is no demand for state censorship in Michigan."

"The work of the National Board is all right, but it isn't a legal body. A legal national board which would work with manufacturers and prevent production of objectionable features would advise the manufacturers what was expected of them would save time and expense. There is no general public demand for censorship, nevertheless, I propose to have my pictures passed upon before they go out, if I have to hire someone to do it myself. My objection to a state board is that persons who know nothing about pictures might be appointed and be unjust in their criticisms. Politics might creep in, likely would. It has not so far affected the censorship in Detroit."

THE attitude of the Beloit, Wisconsin, motion picture exhibitors is open to no discussion when the censorship of pictures is mentioned. Their ideas are expressed in the following series of interviews:

Frank McCarthy, of the Dixie Theatre: "I am strongly opposed to either local or state censorship. Of the two I should prefer state censorship. Local censorship would work a great hardship among the exhibitors. The film would have to be censored anew in every city in which it was exhibited. And local men, especially in the smaller places, would generally be found to be too narrow-minded to be fair. State censors would be open to the same objection. The larger the territory which we have to draw from the better qualified men we will have for censors. And with so many censors throughout the country, politics would be certain to play an important and controlling part.

"I believe that the National Board of Censorship is adequate to cope with the situation. I think that they are as near the ideal as we can get. I am heartily in favor of the National Board alone, with no state or local censorship."

"There is no demand for state or local censorship, so far as I know. I believe that a demand for it has been started in Milwaukee by reformers, but I do not know its extent."

Manager Hogan, of the Rex Theatre: "I want no censorship of any kind. But if we must have censorship, let it be by the National Board. Only if we had a national board, let it be a real board. We have no real national board at present. A number of social workers in New York City have taken the censorship of films upon themselves and called themselves 'The National Board of Censorship.' They are not the real thing."

"I favor the selection of one man from each state; either by election or by appointment. This man should be paid such a salary that he could live in Washington or in New York and devote his entire time to censorship. Good, broad-minded men could thus be secured and fair censorship should result. This board should censor each reel as it comes out of the factory and before copies are placed on the market."

"I am opposed to either state or local censorship. With state censorship, before the film had gone through many states it would be so badly mutilated that it would be scarcely recognizable. With local censorship, conditions would be even worse. Also, it would be difficult to secure competent, broad-minded censors from such a limited territory."

Manager Goldstein, of the Gem, has much the same idea as has Mr. Hogan, of the Rex. Both theatres are controlled by the same Chicago management. Mr. Goldstein believes that local and state censorship is wrong. He believes that the National Board of Censorship is doing its work better than any censorial board in the United States. But he would like to see every state represented on the board. He wants to have the films censored immediately after leaving the factory; before copies are made from them."

"THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS is to be congratulated upon its good work," he said.
THE "FIVE-CENT PERIL" IN WINNIPEG

Cut-Rates Cause Consternation to Local Managers—Exchange Men, Too, Prepare to Fight Unwelcome Invader in Shape of Nicellette—"Six-Reelers" a Frost in Manitoba

Special to The Motion Picture News

Winnipeg, Man., May 3.

The first downtown five-cent motion picture house has made its appearance in Winnipeg, and it must be admitted that it has been and is being looked upon with a certain amount of consternation by the other local managers. All houses have, up to this, been charging the ten-cent rate of admission with the exception of the Grand Opera House, which, having failed in all its legitimate stage efforts, turned over a new leaf and fell in line with the demand of the public for pictures.

Situated as it is, the Grand, it did not offer any serious opposition to the downtown houses, but the new Globe does, and is offering a serious opposition, and, what is more, it has at one time assumed, doing a fair amount of business. This house was formerly the El Dorado, and before that the Elite.

Under its various management it has tried stock, burlesque, vaudeville and movies, and, in fact, change after change has done it no good. Now, that it has been redecorated with a very fine entrance and augmented by a handsome soda fountain and a five-cent price of admission, there is every indication that it will turn the corner.

The location could not be better, placed as it is this little theatre right on the main artery of Winnipeg's traffic, Portage avenue. There are picture houses on each side of it and one across the street, but the patrons in former days were few and far between.

Passing the house the other day I noticed quite a volume of business, which augurs well for the success of the house. Universal films are being run and the program appears quite good.

Vaudeville Opposition

Another serious opposition to the motion picture theatres is the Empress Theatre, which, having moved from its old home on Portage avenue, East, back to its first home on Main street in the Bijou Theatre, offers the first continuous vaudeville program ever tried in Winnipeg.

Loew interests assumed the handling of the Sullivan & Considine circuit here on May 1, and there has been some talk of a cut in prices. This will seriously affect the other motion picture houses who have reaped much from the vaudeville house as opposition. If the prices are reduced and a continuous vaudeville and motion picture program run in from 11 a.m. to 11 p.m., they indeed will thin out the thin end of the wedge of five-cent movies have entered very seriously.

The Globe, however, will have to put up a fight, for not only have the local managers to be contended with but the exchanges will do what they can to prevent a general five-cent admission price enduring, or, for that matter, commencing.

It is very obvious that, with the price down to the "nimble nickel," they will not get the same price for their services as formerly and they will not accept any cut without serious consideration, and certainly not without making every effort to prevent the five-cent house becoming general.

In spite of the opposition, there is only one downtown house. at the nickel admission price, there is, however, an underlying fear that it may become general. Of this no prophecy can be made.

Religious Pictures Not Wanted

Manufacturers appear to be growing careless lately, and one picture came in for a great deal of unfavorable criticism recently. This was a picture featuring a Salvation Army lassie. At one section of the picture she was seen holding up a crucifix, to which was attached rosary beads!! This from the Salvation Army! This incoherency was severely criticized and not in a manner conducive to the welfare of the house.

Surely in these days of high-class producers such errors should not be allowed to creep into pictures.

The mistake was noticed by hundreds.

The question of religious pictures in any case is not one that proves welcome in Winnipeg, and local managers are fighting shy of them.

Manufacturers would do well to cut religious pictures from their schedules when they are produced in a manner that only calls for ridicule as did this particular reel.

The Six-Reel "Stall"

A matter which is causing managers here some apprehension is the six-reel picture which has two reels of story and four of film, better known as "stall." I myself have the opinions of no less than seven managers here who look with disgust on some of the pictures which are more "stall" than story.

As far as Winnipeg is concerned, the six-reel film is not cared about. Ninety per cent of the managers have told me this and they flog shy of them when they can.

Nearly everyone has the same answer. The success of the motion picture program depends on the variety. It also depends on the fact that at any time transient patrons can walk in, see a picture and get out, having understood what they have seen.

With the six-reel film, they have to wade through a show of over an hour's duration with very little variety, and feeling that they may as well get their money's worth, stick it out very disgusted, determined in future to fight clear of similar pictures.

Local managers disagree with many of the producers who say that the six-reel picture has come to stay. If it has it is because the manufacturers are giving the public what the manufacturers want, and not what the public want, and thus they will eventually see a falling off in the receipts.

Big "Paper" Now in Use

The 24 to 32 pictorial stand has found its way out to the Gates of the West and local houses, for at least three of them a better picture trend, their features like the big theatres.

"The Daughters of Men" ran seven of these stands, but an angered censor, annoyed at the appearance of the woman on the edge of the tank, who, as a matter of fact was no less lightly dressed than any burlesque queen, ordered that a one-sheet be pasted over the figure.

Thus was a fine stand ruined, good advertising lost, and all because one man thought that the picture was offensive or likely to affect morals. Dominion-governed censorship is what is needed in the country rather than every municipality in the Dominion having censorship privileges, no two of whom think alike.

What Winnipeg thinks right, Brandon throws up its hands in horror at, and what Portage La Prairie thinks artistic and good is closed down by Winnipeg and Brandon. The result is disastrous to the film which from 2,000 feet may finally be run off as a "thirty-third run" in 200 feet.

In Winnipeg there is now the city censor and the provincial censor. By and by along will come the Dominion censor, and possibly one from the ministerial association. There is a general opinion that something uniform ought to be done.

NEW YORK EXHIBITORS MEET

A meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, of Greater New York, was held at the Hotel Imperial, New York City, on Wednesday, May 6, with S. H. Trigger in the chair.

Over three hundred picture theatre exhibitors were present. After the minutes of the previous meeting were read and adopted Mr. Rothapfel, of the Strand Theatre, was introduced, and spoke relative to his experiences as a motion picture exhibitor, and how the exhibitors should strive for the uplift of the motion picture exhibiting end of the industry.

F. J. Rembusch, of Shelbyville, Indiana, followed and Irving L. Davis, of Binghamton, N. Y., stated the attitude and the co-operation that could be expected from the up-state exhibitors in regard to the convention and exposition to be held at the Grand Central Palace, New York City, June 8 to 13, 1914.

Another important matter that came before the meeting was the appointment of the various committees who are to act during the coming convention and exposition.

"HOUSE OF TEMPERLEY" AT STRAND

At the Strand Theatre, New York, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's "The House of Temperley" (a dramatic version of his famous novel "Rodney Stone") will be the attraction for the week of May 10. The play had a run of more than two years at the Adelphi Theatre, London, and the splendid cast was retained. It includes Ben Webster, Charles Rock, Charles Mandell and Lilian Logan.

The incidents of the story have been faithfully adhered to and the quaint old-fashioned settings are preserved in every detail. Aside from the beautiful photography, the production is artistic throughout. The acting is said to be remarkable for restraint and lack of exaggeration.

Thrilling and wonderful as was the play during its long run at the Adelphi, on the film it is doubly so for reasons which will be readily appreciated by those with any conception of the great possibilities of motion picture productions.

ECLECTIC HELPS EXHIBITORS

To augment, if possible, the popularity of the "Perils of Pauline" series, the Eclectic Film Company have had fifty buildings illustrated with suitable advertisements in New York City.

The signs are in the immediate vicinity of houses running the feature and beside advertising the picture itself, tells where it may be seen and when. The signs are ten feet high by fifty feet long.

Pittsburghers Ready for Censorship Fight

Vote More Legal Aid to Senator Thompson—$2 Monthly Dues Will Map Mayor Armstrong

(Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS)

Pittsburgh, May 5.

THE regular meeting of the new Motion Picture Protective Association of Ohio was held Sunday, May 3, at the Columbia Theatre, Fifth avenue. A fee in the form of dues of $2 a month for each member was voted on and passed, after a brief talk by Fred Harrington as to what the expense would be in the censorship fight which they are taking up.

A vote was cast and the body passed that a charter would be applied for. State Senator Joseph Thompson, who is the attorney for the association, gave a talk on censorship and discussed ways and means of fighting the proposed censorship of motion picture films by a State Board, which is to assume its duties June 1.

He also read a report of how the exhibitors of the State of Ohio are fighting the censorship. As the fight is expected to be hard, a body voted in and passed that Mr. Thompson be given additional legal help.

The committee, as well as each member, was instructed to go after the candidates for State Senator and Representative, as well as Gubernatorial candidates, and make an offer to run slides in motion picture theatres boosting their chance in the race to secure their vote for the repeal of the censorship law.

Several severely criticized Mayor Joseph G. Armstrong for his attitude toward the moving-picture theatres, claiming that before his election he pledged protection to the exhibitors so long as they "kept within bounds," but that the first speech he uttered after his inauguration was in favor of a strict censorship. It was also suggested that a press committee be appointed to educate the people on censorship through the newspapers, but that is much easier said than done.

The Motion Picture Operators' Union, the past week, has had a wagon going through the streets, boycotting two small motion-picture houses that do not employ union operators. The managers, forgetting what it is to back a union, though they were running a place of amusement popular, with the workingman, wanted the association to bring suit against them. Senator Thompson advised the membership against it, saying that in bucking the American Federation of Labor they were going up against an organization backed with money.

New Strand Opens in Newark

Modern Photoplay House Seating 1,200 Starts Its Career in Jersey Metropolis—Affiliated with Strand, New York

THE latest addition to the Newark, N. J., motion picture theatres is the new Strand Theatre, 118-120 Market street, opened Saturday evening, May 2.

The theatre will be devoted to the presentation of motion pictures and photoplays, and the erection of it will cost $100,000.

The men whose confidence in the "movies" induced them to undertake this enterprise are Max and Edward Spiegel, who have had much experience in the theatrical business. Having decided to build a theatre in Newark, they were joined by C. L. Robinson, and organized the B. and R. Corporation of New Jersey, with George W. Rowland as president; C. L. Robinson, vice-president; Max Spiegel, treasurer, and Edward Spiegel, secretary.

The Strand is affiliated with the recently opened Strand Theatre in New York. In the erection of it, William E. Lehman, of this city, was associated as supervising archtect with George M. Keister, of New York, who designed the plans and drew the specifications.

A broad and deep foyer, extending southward from Market street, leads to the auditorium, which occupies a site between Market and Halsey streets and Broad and Broad, the stage entrance is in Halsey street and the numerous exits provided will enable an audience to disperse quickly if occasion demands. The seats in the orchestra section, the balcony and the four proscenium boxes will accommodate about 1,200 persons.

Among the permanent fixtures in the house is a two-manual pipe organ by one of the most famous makers in the country, which will be played by Thomas M. Musgrove, the theatre's organist, when the orchestra of eight musicians under the direction of Joseph M. Cavallo is off duty.

The inaugural program comprised the Edison motion picture, suggested by the national hymn, "The Star-Spangled Banner," and Von Suppé's "Light Cavalry" overture, motion pictures of current events, Foulk's Fantasia in E flat for the organ, and the photoplay illustrating scenes and characters in Jack London's popular story, "The Sea Wolf."

Springfield, Ill., May 5

WITH a larger organization than ever before, Illinois State Branch No. 2 of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America closed its annual meeting here Wednesday, April 29, after a successful two days' session.

The most important action taken at the convention was the passing of a resolution on the second day declaring in favor of national or state censorship as against local censorship.

The Illinois exhibitors, however, do not propose to take any step toward censorship unless they are forced to do so.

If cities in the state follow the example set in Chicago and name local censorship boards in the state branch of the Exhibitors' League will go before the legislature and ask for a state censorship board.

Otherwise, no action will be taken, for all the exhibitors are perfectly satisfied with films as they are turned out by the manufacturers now.

The matter of length of shows came up for lengthy discussion, but no action was taken other than the instructions to delegates to the national convention to vote for a standard of three-reel shows for 5 cents and for 10-cent shows not to exceed five reels.

The admission price on big feature releases that run five or more reels is left with the exhibitor.

OFFICERS of the association were elected as follows: President, G. M. Luttrell, Jacksonville; first vice-president, Thomas Leonard, Johnston City; second vice-president, W. F. Savage, Alton; secretary, W. Bradley, Ottawa; treasurer, W. W. Watts, Springfield; sergeant-at-arms, C. J. Law, Pana.

Delegates elected to represent the Illinois branch at the national convention to be held in Dayton, Ohio, July 6 to 11, and the alternates are as follows:

Thomas Leonard, Johnston City; F. S. Russell, Shelbyville; W. W. Watts, Springfield; W. Bradley, Ottawa; C. J. Law, Pana; E. C. Bostick, Pekin; Mrs. Conrad Streitweg, Decatur; J. J. Faust, Auburn. Alternates, Edward Kunz, Springfield; E. L. Harris, Peoria; T. L. Vondreska, W. W. Goodell, Beardstown; A. W. Ackerman, Mason City; J. C. Davidson, Danville; Edward Carrier, Peoria; Thomas O'Dowd, Witt.

The selection of the next meeting place of the branch and the time for the next meeting was left to the officers to decide.

The sessions all were presided over by M. A. Neff, president of the national organization, and W. M. Bentley acted as convention manager.

In speaking before the convention President Neff declared that the average citizen is ten years behind the motion picture world in progress of civilization.

He complimented the Illinois exhibitors on the excellent organization they had perfected. The exhibitors in this state now have a larger membership than ever before, even though not any of the Chicago exhibitors are represented in the state branch. The Chicago members withdrew from the league some time ago and many exhibitors in attendance at the session here declared that the branch was not seeking the Chicago members, as they did not care to assume the burdens which now are being carried by the exhibitors in the "Windy City."

Whenever the Chicago men want to come in, however, they will be welcomed.

The new officers of the Illinois branch plan to put an organizer in the field here at once and expect to have every motion picture exhibitor in the state in the league by the time the next annual convention is held.

COMPLAINTS were made during the convention against film bureaus as being unfair in making contracts for service. It was stated that some companies are known to have attempted to compel advanced rates by furnishing exhibitors with repeater films.

The cases are isolated, however, and there was no general complaint against any of the film exchanges. On the other hand, there seemed to be a general spirit of cooperation among the manufacturers, film exchanges and exhibitors and officers say the best of feeling exists all around.

The convention was not without its social side. Exhibitors of motion picture theatre apparatus entertained visitors with a picture show and with concerts by piano-players and organs. Members of the local entertainment committee took the visitors on a tour of the city and historic places were visited. Among them were the trips to Lincoln's tomb in Oak Ridge cemetery and to the old Lincoln home.

The convention closed with a banquet at the St. Nicholas Hotel where the convention was held. The principal speaker at the banquet was former Lieutenant-Governor W. A. Northcott, president of the Springfield Commercial Association.

Before adjourning the visiting delegates passed a vote of thanks to the local committee for their entertainment and hospitality.

Members of the local committee were W. W. Watts, Gaiety and Vaudeville theatres, chairman; Adolph Kunz, E. Kunz and J. Kunz, Grand Theatre; L. Burnstine and J. Shepherd, Capital and Casino; E. Rovin, Amuse-U Theatre; G. Kerastotes and L. Kerastotes, Capital and Royal theatres; H. Thornton, Gaiety; Harry Loper, Lyric Theatre; T. M. Lawrence, Princess Theatre.

NEW THEATRE COMPANY IN LOUISVILLE

Louisville, Ky., May 6.

Another big motion picture theatre company was organized here recently, and has leased a building in the center of the city. The company has a capitalization of $75,000, all of which has been paid up. Michael Switow, owner of a number of houses, is head of the organization, which includes some of the city's leading capitalists.

The building is to be remodeled, with an expenditure of about $60,000, and the auditorium will have a seating capacity of 1,200, making it the largest in the city. Mr. Switow plans to run high-class productions chiefly, making three houses in the central part of Louisville devoted to this class of films.

The new owners lay stress on the beauty of the house and on the ventilating features. It will probably be opened in the fall. The lease is said to be one of the most advantageous on Fourth avenue, being between Walnut and Green, now occupied as an annex of the John C. Lewis department store.

FINISH BLUE GRASS PLAY

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS
Lexington, Ky., May 5.

The Chicago Feature Film Company is completing the staging here of a "film" play with scenes laid throughout the Blue Grass region. Private sittings will be given soon for a tryout, and then the film will be sent out. This week the attention of the photographer was given the races at the Kentucky Association track, a racing scene being one of the most important in the play. The company has been here several weeks and covered a large part of Kentucky in pictures.

The Star Theatre, on Upper street, owned by the Colonial Amusement Company, has reopened after several months' suspension because of the erection next door of the Fayette National Bank's fifteen-story building.

THANHOUSER BUYS HISTORIC HOUSE

The Francis Wilson home, in New Rochelle, was selected as the site for the "house of mystery" in "The Million-Dollar Mystery," when work on the film was started, but the house could not be rented for any such purposes. Council after council was held and all decided they would have to have that house.

Consequently C. J. Hite just went ahead and paid out $200,000 and bought it. Many will recognize it immediately when the film is released on June 22.

Louisville Operators Give Dance

"The Post" Opens Motion-Picture Department—"Tess of the Storm Country" a Drawing Card—Other Exhibitors' Items

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS
Louisville, Ky., May 5.

DANCE and Dutch lunch were given by the Motion Picture Machine Operators, Local No. 163, on April 28 in the Hopkins Theatre Hall. The affair was well attended, the invitations being extended to numerous friends of the members, among them the managers of the various picture theatres here.

The management of the Walnut Theatre is advertising the Universal release of a Samson six-reel feature in which the principal parts will be taken by J. Warren and Kathleen Kerrigan, brother and sister, natives of New Albany, Ind., just across the river from Louisville. The management of the Walnut reports a very good patronage.

Goldberg and Levy have closed their new Grand Theatre for the summer, and Mr. Goldberg will again take up the management of the Olympic, a house down town.

L. J. Dittmar, manager of the Majestic, has been on the sick list for the past few days. It is not thought his ailment is of a serious nature, however. He has been under a doctor's care.

Following the plan of some of the Eastern newspapers the Louisville "Evening Post" is carrying a department devoted entirely to motion picture news. Stories of the films to be seen at the various theatres are printed daily, and, besides being a great help to the business, have increased the popularity of the paper. A complete cast of characters is used and the department, usually amounting to more than two columns, is well displayed.

A famous Players' film featuring Mary Pickford, "Tess of the Storm Country," was shown at the Majestic Theatre recently and proved the biggest drawing-card of any feature displayed in a long while. People stood in line waiting to get in the theatre, a thing almost unprecedented heretofore. The feature was put on for four days.

The last fortnight of pleasant weather has brought a rush of business to the exhibitors of this city, and consequently the film exchanges.

Harry Bilger, manager of the Hopkins Theatre, has decided to keep his theatre open all summer. It has heretofore been closed during the warm period.

The Princess Amusement Company, operating a string of theatres in this city, is preparing to open a new one. The theatre will have a capacity of 500, and will be known as the Star.

The Miller Feature Film Service has opened a branch office in Louisville from where they will cover the state. The home office is in New Harmony, Ind.

The drama "Creation" has been presented here by a Brooklyn, N. Y. minister for a week free of charge. Almost everybody saw the spectacle.

There will be several airdomes built here for the coming summer. This form of amusement has been little known in this city.

The Municipal and Commercial Film Manufacturing Company, with offices in Indianapolis, is producing at their new plant at Straw Mills, just across the river from Louisville. Offices have been established in the Preston Hotel.

Solomon and Taylor have opened a new house in Hodgenville, Ky.

J. P. Haney and T. H. Caskey have opened a theatre in West Liberty, Ky. This is the only theatre in this town.

N. A. Wilkerson, manager of the Maxine Elliott Theatre in Mt. Sterling, Ky., has installed a Gold Fibre screen.

The Henderson, Ky., Nickelodeon has offered as a prize, along with a number of other contributors, a book of twenty-four tickets.

FILMING DAYTON TO BOOST CONVENTION

Cincinnati, O., May 5.

After a long conference with President Neff, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, George H. Wiley, national vice-president and chairman and managing director of the Special Convention Committee, left Cincinnati April 24 for Dayton, O., where he is completing his arrangements for the national convention.

To stimulate interest in the convention a motion picture of Memorial Hall, where the sessions will be held, the parks, public buildings and places of interest in Dayton, is being taken. These films will be sent all over the country that those interested in the National Convention and Exposition of Arts, which will be held in connection with it, can become acquainted with the surroundings in which they will find themselves on entering the convention city.

Members of the league in California have already made 50 reservations at one of Dayton's leading hotels for convention week, July 6 to 11.

Dear Sir: The enclosed letter from Mr. W. R. Wilson, Columbus, Ohio, speaks for itself. Kindly publish it with my answer, enclosed also. The subject is of vital interest to every exhibitor in Ohio and elsewhere.

The publication of same will enable us to find out just where we stand on the subject of legalized censorship in Ohio and elsewhere.

Your Exhibitors' Forum is going to make a bid for live exhibitors.

THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF AMERICA
Columbus, O., April 29, 1914.

Mr. Sam Bullock,
Cleveland, O.

Dear Sir: I am very much disgusted with your efforts to pose as a savior of the motion picture film industry.

It seems to me that you have started altogether wrong, in as much as you have misrepresented as a base. I note particularly two paragraphs in the preamble to the resolutions as published in the trade papers of which you claim authorship, as follows:

WHEREAS: Said Ohio State Censor Law was placed upon the statute at the belst and with the connivance of a coterie of politicians without the slightest demand or request from any group of citizens, organized or otherwise; and

WHEREAS: No opportunity was granted to the film trade or exhibitors' representatives, or the representatives of the millions of Ohio's citizenship who patronized the motion picture theatres weekly, to enter objections to the passage of said Ohio State Censorship Law.

I have absolute proof that these statements are false and will create a false impression if not corrected. I believe you were fully acquainted with the real facts in the case when you wrote the above, and if you were not you should have been.

There were no politicians and no connivance, as you said, but an orderly organized demand for relief from the situation which seemed to confront us.

Don't you remember the motion at the Toledo convention, July 16 and 17, 1913? Moved that we recommend that the legislature of Ohio pass a law authorizing the governor to appoint a board to censor motion pictures in the State of Ohio, which was duly seconded and carried almost unanimously.

Don't you remember that the matter was taken up again at the Columbus convention in January, 1913, and all former action ratified? The officers were then ordered to proceed with the passage of the bill as drawn up, read and discussed. Does it not occur to you that this was a request from a GROUP OF ORGANIZED CITIZENS?

John Collier, of the National Board of Censorship; F. L. Dyer, president of the General Film Company; Alfred H. Saunders, and countless other able and prominent persons were consulted for a solution of the Censor question.

After several meetings between exhibitors and film exchange men at Columbus, an agreement was finally reached by Mr. C. M. Christensen, now of the Mutual Film Corporation, who was national secretary of the League at that time, signed a communication to the "Moving Picture World" on February 26, 1913:

"A conference of members of the Exhibitors' League of Ohio was held to-day in reference to proposed State Censor Bill as now pending in the legislature. All parties endorsed this bill after a few changes were made. We think it is best at this time, owing to conditions arising in most municipalities of this state. The ultimate results of this bill will help manufacturers, film exchanges and exhibitors." Ohio exhibitors are now solid for the bill.

I would advise that when you write for the newspapers, you be careful to make statements, as there is a law on the statute-books which makes it a crime to publish false statements. Go to it, fight as hard as you like, but be fair and DON'T MIS-REPRESENT! I have great confidence that the ultimate results will be satisfactory to the majority concerned.

Yours truly,

Cleveland, O.

May 1, 1914.

Mr. W. R. Wilson,
Treas. Ohio State Branch No. 1.

Dear Sir and Fellow Exhibitor:

Your esteemed favor of the 29th inst. indicates that you are somewhat "peved" over the action of your fellow exhibitors of Cleveland regarding their adoption of the preamble and resolutions against the Ohio State Censorship law.

I am sorry you think I am "posing" as a savior of the motion picture film industry. I shall dismiss this as a childish proposition.

Your second and third paragraphs —quoting our preamble—I stand pat on, to the letter, and will go even farther and say that the film exchange representatives; the attorney for Cleveland local No. 1 of the League, Mr. Schwartz; the president of our local, Mr. Sam Harris, and Mr. C. M. Christensen, our speaker and joint national secretary, acting with the above as a joint committee from Cleveland, to meet you and others who were "railroading" the bill through Columbus, were "double-crossed" by your coterie in the dead of the night, so to speak, in the most approved manner—and they were all friends of Mr. Neff, too.

That was their report then and they so report yet. Let us forget that.

In paragraph 4 you ask me several "Don't you remember" questions. I "remember" them all, for Cleveland always opposed them all—led by yours truly, who was "posing" thus early in the game of politics.

I notice the name of Hon. J. J. Lentz upon your letterhead as attorney for the League. Don't YOU remember his thrilling speech at the Dayton convention in which he hurled such invectives at all censors and would-be censors that some timid censors thought the silver-tongued champion's remarks were "almost sacrilegious"?

Don't you remember that he piled it.
on again a year later at the Columbus convention banquet.

Why was he not invited to speak since?

Why was he not in evidence during the "jamming" through the Legislature of that odious bill?

Because you nor anyone else could ever hire J. J. Lentz to assist in such a "jamming" proposition.

You are right on just one point, but you put it wrong. There was "a group of organized citizens" and only one.

That "group" was you, Mr. Neff and about five others.

All exhibitors.

Shame for recalling the plot.

When that "group" succeeded in convincing the "powers that be" that they represented the 1,000 Ohio exhibitors it was another case of the "Three Little Tailors of Tooley Street.,"

I don't know a hearing not granted so that the "snake" bill could be amended and made workable for a try-out.

Utilizing your biting (?) sarcasm, "don't you remember" the closing session of the Columbus convention when I "posed" with a resolution to submit the proposed censor bill in bulletin form to every member and exhibitor in Ohio "for approval or rejection?"

Don't you remember that I suggested that one thousand bulletins and stamps would give every showman a chance to vote for twenty-five dollars? I pointed to the clock forty-five minutes from adjournment—and I was "squeezed."

What followed?

President Neff thought I intended to send out said bulletins and "the group" put through a resolution amending the constitution to prevent any member from introducing any similar subject to the exhibitors "except through the executive officers."

Then we adjourned to be patted on the back for obeying orders.

You say "Ohio exhibitors are now solid for the bill." Are you "posing" as their savior? If so, let me suggest that you help us to find out whether they want it or not.

We are giving every showman a chance to vote—his first chance. Our plan is explained in this paper and in official bulletins sent out by our committee. The questions submitted enable you to "fight as hard as you like" as you say.

Line up your censor advocates. Majority rule wins and your Cleveland League members will help count the ballots.

We will then be one grand united body at the two National Conventions at New York and Dayton. I pass over your last paragraph. I freely forgive you for your veiled threats.

I am fully responsible for all I write. Come again, Brother Wilson.

Fraternally yours,

(Signature) SAM BULLOCK.

Savage Back with General Film After Eight Years—Regent Will Open in Two Months—Other News

Special to The Motion Picture News

BUFFALO, N. Y., May 5.—JOHN J. FARREN, secretary and manager of the Rochester Theatre Company, which controls the Victoria Theatre in that city and the Colonial Theatre in Elmira, N. Y., was in Buffalo last week looking over the Buffalo photoplay houses.

Daniel J. Savage has now assumed full charge of the local branch of the General Film Company. The three departments, formerly under different managers, are now looked after by Mr. Savage. These departments are Special Feature, Poster and the Regular service. Mr. Savage will make several changes in the office force, two of which have been announced.

H. E. Benedect, formerly associated with Mr. Savage at the Mutual offices here, has been engaged as head booker. Howard F. Brink, who was also with the Mutual branch, has also been engaged as road man. Mr. Savage feels as if he were coming back home again in his new position, as he was with the General Film Company here as assistant manager for eight years before assuming the management of the local branch of the Mutual Film Corporation.

Mr. Savage says that there will be further changes which he will announce.

THE ELMWOOD, BUFFALO'S NEWEST MOTION PICTURE HOUSE

After a year of hard work, and a trial period of four months, the Elwood, the newest and most modern of Buffalo's motion picture houses, opened its doors to the public on May 4.

The Elwood Theatre is located at 1445 Main Street, opposite the old Elwood Theatre, and is conveniently situated. It is equipped with the latest in projection equipment, and its management is devoted to giving the public the best possible service.

ST. LOUIS, May 5.—Prosecuting Attorney Sidener visited the Garrick Theatre, where the "Inside of the White Slave Traffic" films were being shown, and ordered the films stopped. The management complied with the order, and the Garrick is dark at present, but will re-open in a few days.

John Osborn, who was connected with the Maplewood Theatre, died very suddenly on the 2d of April. Mr. Osborn was nearly seventy years of age, but was active up to the time of his death.

The Powhatan Theatre and Air-drome, of Maplewood, is open for the summer season.

The Fairydrome, at 3100 Arsenal street, is open and seems to be pleasing its outdoor audience, despite the chilly weather.

"The Dishonored Medal," a Mutual feature which was made under the direction of W. Christy Cabanne, who is a native of St. Louis, was shown at the Park Theatre last month.
Sunday Opening the Topic at Rochester

Question Occupies Both Morning and Afternoon Sessions at New York State League Convention—President Neff Addresses Delegates—Advocates National, Not State, Censorship—Evidence of League Growth

(Special to The Motion Picture News) Rochester, N. Y., May 3.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York State held a successful meeting here to-day, mainly for the purpose of choosing delegates to the national convention, to be held in Dayton, O., the week of July 6.

While the election of the delegates was the principal object of business, the delegates, about 100 in number, took advantage of the gathering to discuss Sunday opening, and the price of admission which should be charged, together with other subjects of interest to themselves.

Contrary to his former stand in Ohio, National President M. A. Neff, who attended the convention, abandoned his advocacy of state censorship and urged a national censorship as against both state and local censors.

As a result, no action was taken by the New York exhibitors similar to that endorsed by the Illinois convention, last week, when a resolution declaring for state censorship was adopted by the convention.

The question of Sunday opening is the most pressing one just now in Rochester and other cities of the Empire State, and it was upon this issue that Mr. Neff, in his address to the exhibitors, dwelt longest and most forcefully.

Most of the discussion revolved about Sunday opening, and Mayor H. H. Edgerton, who welcomed the convention, was an interested listener at the debate.

Morning and afternoon sessions were held, and in the evening the delegates and the members of the Rochester Motion Picture Exhibitors' League held a dance at Convention Hall, which proved a very enjoyable affair with many novel features.

President A. N. Wolff, of the Rochester branch, called the convention to order. Officers of the New York State League are: A. N. Wolff, Rochester, president; Morris L. Fleischman, New York, secretary; W. C. Hubbard, Rochester, treasurer; I. L. Davis, Binghamton, vice-president; Frank C. Pearce, Geneva, national vice-president.

New officers will not be elected until the October meeting, in New York.

In the course of his address, Mr. Neff referred to opposition to motion pictures on religious grounds and objections to Sunday picture shows. "Possibly you have in Rochester a few of those critical people who imagine they have been divinely appointed to say what other people shall do," he said.

In the opinion of Mr. Neff, it would be well if such persons would confine their activities, for the present at least, to combating such evils as the growth of the cigarette habit, which is increasing at a startling rate and which resulted in the consumption in this country of forty billions of cigarettes last year.

"You close your picture shows on Sunday," said Mr. Neff, "while in Buffalo they are wide open. In requiring your picture houses to close on Sunday, you force the motion picture men to do one of two things, either charge a higher admission, or give less for the same admission.

"If you wish to continue closed on Sundays, you should advocate a ten-cent admission for the picture theatres on Saturday, in order that the picture men may not suffer because of their loss of Sunday business."

The president of the national association contended that to attend a motion picture show on Sunday was no different morally from showing pictures in an album at home, which was one of the old-fashioned ways of entertaining to which nobody objected.

With reference to improper films, the speaker declared the fault usually lay with the manufacturer, not the exhibitor, but it was always the misfortune of the latter to receive the blame.

At the opening of the afternoon session President Wolff read a telegram from Manhattan Branch Local No. 1, which was organized in the morning with a membership of twenty-five. It was from Louis S. Harris, second vice-president of the local.

Mr. Wolff simply remarked that the announcement of the formation of the new branch indicated the growth of the organization, which has enrolled seventy-five new members in the last month.

Mr. Keppler, of New York, asked that a resolution be adopted to appoint a committee of seven members from various parts of the state to devise ways and means to increase the membership of the association, and that an attempt be made to have a membership of 1000 before the next convention.

The resolution was adopted, and the president will name the committee later.

It was voted to instruct the delegates to the national convention to vote for M. A. Neff for re-election. This resolution went through without a dissenting voice.

It was decided to name a committee of five members to prepare for the next state convention, to be held in New York next October. Three of the five members of this committee were named at once: M. L. Fleischman, J. J. Wittman and John Mullaney, all of New York. The other two will be named later.

The greater part of the afternoon session was devoted to a discussion of Sunday opening. Mr. Keppler said he believed the association should stand back of any member who wished to open his house on a Sunday, and that the association should go on record to that effect. There is no place in New York, he went on, where an honest attempt to open on Sunday has been made where it hasn't succeeded. It is on record that it can be done, and whenever the question has been taken to the Appellate Division, the court has always decided in favor of the exhibitor.

Prices of admission came in for discussion, the belief being expressed that 10 cents should be the minimum figure, especially if there is to be no Sunday opening.

All the national and state officers in attendance were filmed after the meeting, in front of Hotel Seneca, two different companies sending operators.

Crane Wilbur, of the Pathé company, was the center of the group. He shook hands with all the officers, while the camera men turned the crank. He also gave a sketch at the
The dance at Convention Hall in the evening was a big success. Claire Ray, with Harland Moore, led the grand march, and later gave an exhibition of fancy dancing. The dance was largely attended.

EXHIBITORS THANK MUTUAL
At a regular meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, of Greater New York, held at the Hotel Imperial, on Wednesday, April 22, the following resolution was unanimously carried:

That, whereas a censorship bill that is detrimental to the motion picture industry at large has been passed in Ohio, and Whereas, the Mutual Film Corporation, at great expense and trouble have fought this bill in the courts in an endeavor to have it proven unconstitutional, therefore be it Resolved, that a vote of thanks be tendered to the Mutual Film Corporation for their efforts in this matter; and that the same be spread upon our minutes and copy thereof forwarded to the Mutual Film Corporation and all the trade journals.

UNIVERSAL CHANGES
With the idea of strengthening its program the Universal Film Manufacturing Company have made a number of important changes in it which will go into effect June 1.

The usual Powers release for Monday will be dropped and a Sterling kid comedy will take its place. Ford Sterling will not appear in these pictures. Billy Jacobs, twenty-nine months old, will play the leading parts. Undoubtedly he is one of the cleverest kid players on the stage. He was with Mr. Sterling in the past.

The Saturday Frontier picture will be changed to Sunday, and the release of the same brand on Thursday will give way to the regular Sterling picture. Sunday's Crystal brand will also be dropped entirely. This will give the Crystal and Frontier companies a chance to exert their powers on one release a week.

WOODEN THEATRES BARRED
Mayor Curley, of Boston, Mass., has announced that no more licenses will be issued, with his permission, for the exhibition of motion pictures in wooden buildings. Owners of buildings who are using them now for the projection of motion pictures, will be asked to change the construction to meet with the requirements.

Patrons Have Refused the Price in the Past, but Exhibitors See Change Coming, and Prepare to Take Advantage of It

CINCINNATI, April 28.
The Gordian Knot in the Cincinnati motion picture field has at last been slashed. In the past big productions have not met with the favor of the public here, and Cincinnati has missed some of the biggest feature films which other and smaller cities saw, because the Cincinnati public has persistently refused to support pictures for which a price of more than five or ten cents was charged.

Big productions which have been attempted in this city have shown for a day or two to almost empty houses and then passed on to more profitable fields. G. J. Trask, of the World Special Films Corporation, declares Cincinnati is at last waking up and that the public will support good pictures if given the chance.

This faith in the public's ability to appreciate the classics as depicted on the motion picture screen has been shared by a number of the leading citizens, and the Grand Opera House will be opened May 3 as a high-class feature picture house for the summer season.

Isaac Libson, manager of the Family Theatre, the biggest and one of the most popular motion picture houses in the city, will assume the management in the new venture. As the opening attraction, for the first week there will be shown "Les Misérables." This picture recently ran for three weeks in Toledo. Other features of a similar nature will follow.

The Lyric Theatre in Cincinnati will become a motion picture house for the summer months on May 3. J. D. Orr will take the management and first run Mutual films will be shown at popular prices.

William Munsey, of Indianapolis, has joined the forces of Cincinnati exhibitors by purchasing the Gem Theatre at Peebles' Corner, Walnut Hills, from J. Lynch, who has successfully operated the house for seven years. Mr. Lynch is to open a new picture theatre at Linn street and Central avenue. The building will be one of the most modern in the city and will have a seating capacity of 1,000.

M. M. Miller, assistant to Manager Hite of the Cincinnati office of the Mutual Film Supply Company, has left here to become manager of the office at Buffalo. X. Y. Mr. R. H. Haines has succeeded Mr. Miller in the Cincinnati office.

During the past week, the officers of the Mutual Film Supply Company, 17 Opera Place, have undergone a complete change. Owing to the increase in business in this territory the office room has been expanded by Manager Hite to take in both the second and third floors. The entire third floor of the building will be occupied by the shipping department.

The front rooms on the second floor will now, as formerly, be occupied by Manager Hite, his assistant and the clerical force. The rear of the second floor will be devoted to the use of the bookers. The company formerly occupied only the second floor.

The Lightning Conductor" a Marked Success
First Production Offered by Sawyer, Inc., Shown at Comedy Theatre, New York City—Dustin Farnum Leads Cast

THE presentation of "The Lightning Conductor," a seven-part Metro Film Company production, owned by A. H. Sawyer, Inc., at the Comedy Theatre, New York City, on Thursday, May 7, was a marked success. The picture was presented under the direction of Wm. Elliott, owner and producer of the New York success, "Kitty Mackay."

"The Lightning Conductor" was arranged for picture presentation by Mr. Walter Hale, who has a reputation as an actor, writer and traveler. Mr. Hale has motored through Southern Europe each summer for fourteen years, and is naturally well equipped to arrange the scenario from the Williamson novel. The scenes throughout this picture are laid in Europe; many of the most exciting incidents take place through Southern France and Italy.

The cast includes several well-known Broadway favorites, Dustin Farnum playing "Sir John Winston," who is mistaken by the American heiress for a chauffeur. Mr. Walter Hale plays "M. Talliyrand," the French adventurer; Mr. William Elliott, "Jimmy Payne," the fresh young American. Miss Helen Bertram, well-known operatic star, appears as the aunt, and Miss Rosina Henley plays "Nolly Randolph," the American heiress.
All inquiries pertaining to this department will be answered by Mr. Schoenbaum, either directly or through the columns of The Motion Picture News.—Editor. Address "Patent Editor," The Motion Picture News, New York City.

Y. M. C. A. to Make Operators

The West Side Young Men's Christian Association, of 318 West Fifty-seventh Street, New York City, recently announced that its officers intended to organize a complete course for the instruction of members in order to enable them to become motion picture operators.

On Friday evening, May 1, a meeting was held at the Y. M. C. A., when the future program was discussed and explained. After the chairman and H. S. Wynkoop, the official city examiner, had made speeches the public was invited to ask questions. All those who asked questions were opposed to the opening of such a school and gave their reasons for it. All agreed that there are to-day several hundred skilled operators cut out of work, so that there is no real or immediate necessity for increasing their number by filling up the present overflowing market with a number of fictitious operators.

Cements

In the issue of May 2 cements were discussed in this department and several trade names and manufacturers were cited. It would therefore be unjust not to mention the One Drop Oil Company, whose product is said to be absolutely non-buckling and fast drying. It is evident that this means something in a warm booth.

Useful Book for Operators

There is very little room in the booth for an important library, and also very often little money in the operator's pocket to enable him to buy expensive books, when necessary or simply useful, but the little volume on "Electricity," by Gisbert Kapp, published by Henry Holt of New York, will certainly be of use to many operators and money will be no question, as it only costs 50 cents, bound and illustrated.

Cines Will Film "Carmen"

Reports from Spain are that the Cines company is preparing to produce "Carmen," with Marguerite Sylva in the title role, to be accompanied by music adapted from Bizet's opera, "Carmen." Most of the scenes will be taken in Valencia, Spain, it is said.

An Operator Protests

Dear Sir:—Congratulations are in order! New York is to have another school for motion picture operators! Always room for one more, you know! And this one is conducted by the Y. M. C. A., who do not consider it a real Christian act to do something which will satisfy the tremendous, overwhelming demand for operators which exists (?) and to increase the already overcrowded market (? number of men.

Well, it really does not matter very much. Conditions really could not be very much worse than they are now, and a few hundred more operators to starve to death is only a small matter.

I wonder if the Y. M. C. A. does really know the conditions which prevail here? If they do not, why did they not find out before starting such a course? If they do know, then it certainly does not speak well for a large, world-famous Christian organization such as this to offer to train a man in such a mean, miserable trade as motion picture operating.

If the Y. M. C. A. would have made careful inquiry, it would have found out quite a few items of interest. It would have found out that operators must work seven days and might be required to work every second of the time, and most places run from 9 to 11 p.m. continuously.

Quite some hours, don't you think so? Suppose is easily arranged. The operator sends for two sandwiches, and turns the crank with the left hand and eats with the right. It doesn't matter that his hands are dirty and full of oil. While eating he wipes it on the booth.

No chance to wash his hands—he can't leave the machine; it's against the law, so he must make the best of it. Then he wants a drink of water. As I have said, he dare not leave the machine, much less step out of the hot cell that is called an "operating-room," so he waits for the boy who carries reels and is supposed to be generally useful.

These boys are, as a rule, peculiar animals, and as tough as you desire, or what is just as

The "News," the "World," and the Operators

[Editor's Note—The article published below was submitted to The Motion Picture News by Mr. Robert Goldblatt and is reprinted here at his request. According to Mr. Goldblatt, H. H. Richardson, of "The Moving Picture World, after publishing a veiled attack upon him in the issue specified below, refused to republish the article and to reply in his columns. On the principle that the columns of The Motion Picture News are open at all times, to operators and anyone else in the industry, for the presentation of every side of all questions, Mr. Goldblatt was cheerfully accorded space in which to publish his side of the matter.]

A FRIEND in need is a friend indeed, and it must be admitted beyond a doubt that The Motion Picture News has proven such in every sense of the phrase. This School also makes a statement that the salary of operators is from $3.50 per week.

It sounds attractive, but I can assure you that the salary of 20 per cent of the New York operators is much closer to $15 than it is to $35. These $35 jobs are what is known as men's jobs, passing over the stage, jumping from one town to another, setting up and tearing apart your machine, losing your sleep, etc.

And out of this, the men who do the hard work receive only a dollar a day. This school also makes a statement that the salary of operators is from $3.50 per week.

It sounds attractive, but I can assure you that the salary of 20 per cent of the New York operators is much closer to $15 than it is to $35. These $35 jobs are what is known as men's jobs, passing over the stage, jumping from one town to another, setting up and tearing apart your machine, losing your sleep, etc.

And out of this, the men who do the hard work receive only a dollar a day.

As a proof of the above statement, you will remember the great assistance The Motion Picture News has rendered unto the New York operators in their fight for a direct charter from the I. A. T. S. E. of N. S. & C., which, as you know, was issued at the last convention.

And I have been assured that the News stands ready to assist the operators in general.

The following is a reply to an attack made upon me in the "Moving Picture World" in the issue of April 11th. To this day Mr. Richardson has failed to publish this reply in his columns.

"I HAVE with great interest read the article entitled 'Important agreement' in the issue of April 11th (page 209), and I feel that it is my duty to make a reply to the same. Of course everybody is familiar with the saying, 'If the cap fits, wear it'—and it fits me jolly well. "I am amazed to think that a man of your intelligence would express his views on a matter of which you are absolutely ignorant. Possibly, you have heard but one side, which must be the case, otherwise you would not have judged so unfairly. "As to the action taken at the last Seattle convention in reference to the operators of New York, you know nothing about it, because you were barred from the convention the first day it went into session, for reasons which you know were just. On Thursday morning of the same week you departed for home, and the question of the New York operators did not come before the body until the last day of the convention (Saturday). This proves that you are not familiar with the subject.

"You also stated in your valuable article that, through misinformation, the American Federation of Labor was induced to make a ruling in behalf of the dissenting faction, better known as the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union, Local No. 1, of Greater New York.

"In making the above statement, you again prove how entirely ignorant of the case.

"In my experience with the officials of the A. F. of L., I could with pride say that not one member of the executive council of the above great organization would say that I misrepresented the truth. They are too broad-minded, fair and honest in their dealings.

"And that's more than I could say of a lot that I have been forced to deal with since the beginning of the old auxiliary.

"YOU were quite wrong in saying that it was a one-man affair; I was but one of many, and being the leader, did as I was bade. What I dreamed and fought for during the last six years became a reality at the last Seattle convention, thanks to the delegates that supported the operators of New York—and that's more than I could say of you.

"I also pray that you will not worry too much as to whether I will get an opportunity to make more trouble, as you call it. If I should happen to see things go wrong, nothing will keep me from righting the wrong, if within my power.

"As to the importance and value of the agreement entered into between the I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. N. O. U. Local No. 1 of Greater New York, you don't seem to have the slightest idea, you were unfair and listened to but one side.

"But the truth you have yet to learn.

"Perhaps you are familiar with it, and you are suppressing it for personal satisfaction.

"If it is your aim to inject into the members of Local No. 306, and those that are about to become members, a poison of hatred against me, permit me to assure you (if that is your object) that it will be of no avail.

HANDLING A FEATURE

"JOAN OF ARC," a feature played at the Broadway Theatre, Detroit, Mich., the week of April 27 at 25 cents an admission, the highest price now being charged for a photoplay in Detroit. Interest was stimulated in the production first by issuing 500 or more special invitations with complimentary tickets to school teachers of the city, the idea being that the children would be reached through the teachers and the homes through the children.

Fifty street-car signs on the fronts of cars were used throughout the week and window cards were scattered about the city. The newspapers were used generously, the display being with the regular dramatic "ads" and special notices given in the weekly and mid-week dramatic columns.

"Joan of Arc" made a hit in Ypsilanti, which is the seat of the Michigan State Normal College, and incidentally settled the matter of Sunday shows favorably for A. M. Renne, manager of the Ypsilanti Opera House. When he first received the film Mr. Renne invited the teachers in the public schools and the pupils of the fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth grades to a complimentary matinee.

In the audience was the daughter of the mayor, and after she had reported at home on the play she had seen, the mayor said, "Renne, as long as you have such educational features as that, you need not worry over being closed up on Sunday."

UNITING WITH THE STORES

MOTION picture exhibitors at Campbellsville, Ky., cooperated with the Merchants' Association to make the spring opening at that place a big success. All merchants gave to women visitors tickets for the motion picture theatres.

The advertisement that this would be done helped to bring in women from the surrounding country and insured crowded houses for the exhibitors and helped business for the merchants.

VIEW OF THE LOBBY DISPLAY WHICH MANAGER EDEL, OF THE STRAND THEATRE, BUFFALO, N. Y., GAVE TO A RECENT NUMBER OF "DOLLY OF THE DAILIES"

LESSONS IN LOBBY DISPLAY

MANAGER EDEL, of the Strand Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., is a most enthusiastic advocate of newspaper advertising. His campaigns have made other managers sit up and take notice.

His lobby displays are always on the "unsual" order, as the accompanying photograph will show. Manager Edel believes in the power of the press and spends a large amount every week to let patrons know of the excellent bills at this house.

The next attraction will be Edward Abele in "Brewster's Millions."

WINNING WITH A "LOSER"

A. W. BLANKMEYER, who has purchased the Grand Circus Theatre in Detroit, Mich., has demonstrated what can be done with a losing proposition if it is intelligently taken hold of. The Grand Circus was running behind $150 a week when Mr. Blankmeyer took it over a few weeks ago.

He sought out back reports on the business of the house, compared the receipts and the character of the pictures run on different days and from these determined that classical pictures—high-class features—were what the people of his neighborhood wanted. Now he sees to it that every feature booked is such as will please his patrons and is filling the house regularly.

Last Sunday he had to turn them away, the first time this has been the case with the Grand Circus. He doesn't find it necessary to do any special advertising stunts, just puts up his paper and his photograph frames and relies on the passing throng, and being in a busy section of the city, just in the edge of the rooming-house district, he has plenty of passersby to see his display.

A LOUISVILLE LIVE WIRE

RECENT coincidence which was taken advantage of by Manager Levinson, of the Novelty Theatre, Louisville, Ky., gave him a large amount of good advertising. Madame Nazimova, the noted Russian actress, was playing an engagement at Ma-
THE Hippodrome Theatre, Dallas, Texas, is the first theatre in that city to use nothing but features. The Mutual program was used for several months after the opening, but with a seating capacity of 1,400, Manager T. P. Finnegan decided that he could at least take a chance on the "driers." "Gross receipts have increased fully twenty-five per cent," Finnegan said, "since I have taken the feature films. I am now convinced that the public's demand for feature films with famous actors in the cast is stronger than ever."

Finnegan is building theatres in Waco, Gainesville and Fort Worth. He intends to use feature films in these theatres also.

WINNING THE SUFFRAGISTS

An interesting affair, which "incidentally" furnished some good advertising, took place at the Novelty Theatre, Louisville, Ky., in connection with the special film, "What 80,000,000 Women Want." Manager David Levinson issued an invitation to the Louisville Suffrage Club to attend the exhibition.

The club not only accepted the invitation, but asked permission to have an address made. Accordingly, Miss Emma Emery, president of the club, delivered a talk in both the afternoon and evening. The house was crowded with suffrage adherents throughout the day. Members of the club acted as volunteer ushers, and distributed literature.

One of the results of the event was that a local pro-suffrage newspaper devoted a half column to the description of the affair, in spite of the fact that the Novelty had not advertised in this paper for several months.

AN EXHIBITOR-MUSICIAN

Manager Marcus, of the Lyric Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., who was formerly musical director of Shea's theatre orchestra and who is one of Buffalo's finest musicians, has consented to conduct a series of symphony programs on Sunday afternoon and evening for an indefinite period. The orchestra will be augmented to 20 pieces.

Features of I. M. P. A. Convention

THE forthcoming exposition in New York City, at the Grand Central Palace, June 8th to 13th, will afford plenty of opportunities for the manufacturers to exchange views as to the annual convention of the International Motion Picture Exhibitors Association and the Independent Exhibitors of America will be held in the Convention Hall of the Grand Central Palace.

This convention will be an open one, permitting the exhibitor to voice his views, to express his thoughts upon the remedies for the evils affecting the industry.

Identification cards are being issued to all bona-fide exhibitors applying to the secretary, Harold W. Rosenthal, 136 Third avenue, New York City. This card will entitle the holder to all privileges during the exposition and convention.

Among the many subjects already scheduled for discussion and action thereon are:

The effect of the multiple reel on the five- and ten-cent show; the desirability and possibility of controlling the length of programs at various prices of admission; censorship in all its phases; uniform charges for regular and special services and features; the exploitation of fake features by irresponsible exchanges and individuals; the manufacturer and the exhibitor; the exchange and the exhibitor; the poster question in all its phases; motion picture supplies; the entrance of manufacturers and exchange men into the exhibiting business; advertising the motion picture theatre; adverse legislation and the best means of combating it; souvenirs, country stores, etc.; the church and the picture theatre; the school and the picture theatre; the establishment of a central national information bureau for exhibitors in all parts of the country; technical questions pertaining to the operation of a picture theatre; the press and motion pictures.

These matters will be discussed not only by the assembled exhibitors, but also by the leading film manufacturers, exchange men, feature men, supply dealers, clergymen, educators, officials, and newspaper men from all parts of the country, who will be in attendance at the various sessions of the convention.

That the exposition is going to be replete with many novel features is already shown by the large number of novelties which will be introduced by the many manufacturers and producers who have already contracted for space.

Memorial Hall Will Be Scene of League Gathering and Exposition in July—What the Exhibits Will Be

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' League Convention will commence on Monday, July 6, and continue in session throughout the week at the Memorial Hall, First and St. Clair streets and Madison avenue. The Convention Hall will be situated on the first floor, committee-rooms, press-rooms and officers' quarters being adjacent, in fact all conveniences necessary for comfort and luxury will be provided in this commodious and up-to-date fire-proof auditorium.

The Second International Exposition of the Motion Picture Art will be held during the convention week, the exhibits being arranged on the main floor of the Memorial Hall, the area of which exceeds thirty thousand square feet with a permanent balcony which seats 2,000. The exhibition will include the following main sections:

- Representations of Cinematograph Subjects, Theatres, Theatre Equipment and Electric Lighting Novelties
- International Cinematograph Congress
- Development of the Cinematograph Industry from its commencement to the present day
- Exhibits of American and Foreign Cameras, Printers, Projecting Machines and House Projectors, Miscellaneous Allied Industries, Mechanical Orchestral Organ, Piano and other musical attractions in the motion picture theatre, Scientific Tests and Apparatus.

Among the interesting features of the exhibition will be different collections of early Cinematograph apparatus and accessories. There will be sub-sections for films, demonstrations, tests, the equipment of film manufacturers, arc lamps and other forms of illumination, etc., etc.

Arrangements to produce a duplicate of many things pertaining to Cinematography from the starting of the picture to its projection on the screen, while several prominent European manufacturers of projectors, cameras, and accessory outfits will have exhibits.

Daily Cinematograph performances will take place in the mammoth theatre erected in the hall, where the choice of the world's films will be projected, while the most popular American and European actors and actresses, who are engaged in the production of the plays will appear at different performances.
The Operating Booth

The operating-booth of a picture theatre is the very heart of the whole organization. The architect, the owner and the lessee must deal liberally with the space that is to be allowed for it and with its equipment.

From there radiates the entertainment and instruction of the patrons, and the best results can only be obtained by providing most efficiently in all matters. As the student needs a healthy body to provide a healthy mind, so it is with a picture house, for there it needs a most complete booth to develop a highly acceptable show.

The compartment should be spacious. There must be enough room for all the equipment that is to be placed therein, properly spaced and plenty of room for the operators to work and move about without the danger of knocking against and jarring any of the equipment.

There must be provided space for at least two picture machines and one spotlight machine. If the entertainment is to be a combination of picture and vaudeville, two spotlight machines might be provided for.

If the current at hand is alternating, and if it is to be transformed to direct current, the apparatus shall likewise be located in the booth, for there it will have the constant surveillance, and care of the operators, whereas if such apparatus is located in out-of-the-way places it is sure to be neglected, only to fail when most needed.

The booth must be fireproof, substantial and rigid, and it is essential that each opening to the booth walls be equipped with fireproof doors. Those to be in front of the machines must have the slides controlled by a system of cords with a series of underwriters' fuseable links so that should a fire occur at any place in the booth, and particularly about the various machines, all slides will drop instantly over the enclosures.

Too much study cannot be given to this arrangement, as the audience gets the first flash of fire on the screen and at once falls into a panic. If they additionally look back and see a fire in the booth, and perhaps see flames and smoke coming out, the results may be far more serious.

There shall be provided a large opening in the ceiling of the booth which shall lead to a fireproof duct to above the roof, there to have dampers controlled from the booth by fusible linked cords.

If the opening in the roof is directly above the booth a spotlight will give daylight to the compartment, but if such is not the case an additional window is advisable. Where windows or spotlight are provided, a method should be employed to darken the booth at will. This might be done by drawing a black shade, or providing secondary metal shutters that may be closed, barring out light, yet permitting ventilation.

In some cities a separate rewinding room is required by ordinance, but the writer rather believes that where it is not so demanded a rewinding shell at one end of the booth as far distant from the projection openings as possible, and providing extra precaution against the known dangers, will generally suffice, and additionally does away with one excuse of operators absenting themselves from the booth.

It is very desirable that the operators be on duty at all times, and their work should be concentrated in the booth.

Film producers have ever been alert to reduce the amount of vibration in pictures, and they have spent large sums of money to deliver films almost perfect in that respect. Likewise have the machine builders made their work well-nigh perfect.

It therefore behoves the exhibitor to do his share in this regard. First, he must have a solidly built booth, and he must then mount his machine in a way that no vibration outside of the working of the machine shall affect his picture.

This has been done in many ways, among which might be mentioned bolting the legs of the machine to the floor, by cross-bracing, by extra weighting the frame and by setting the legs in solid concrete.

Where the metal legs are bolted to other solid material, and where metal forms part of the construction, there is the objection that the noise in the booth is intensified and there is danger of electrical conductivity.

The writer recommends that heavy solid blocks of cork be bolted to the floor construction, and that the machine legs in turn bebolted to the cork blocks.

In this way the noise is reduced to a minimum, the vibration of the machine and exterior vibration is almost entirely done away with so far as affects the picture. The cork blocks also provide a perfect electrical insulation.

It is not the purpose of this article to comment upon the relative values of different makes of machines, but the writer wishes to impress the fact that the best is none too good.

Next to two approximately the same quality machines, buy those that have their main works or service station nearest your theatre, that repairs and replacement may be made in the shortest time and with the least inconvenience.

Quality must also rule in the personnel of the operators.

No machines are made fool-proof, and there is much in the management of the booth besides the apparatus that needs the careful and thoughtful attention of the men.

The location of the booth relative to the other parts of the theatre, and the projection of the pictures, and the current and light of the booth, will be treated in later articles.

Nathan Myers.

District of Columbia

The new $10,000 motion picture theatre now being built at 2114 Fourteenth street, Washington, is to be opened within a month, according to announcements issued by the Belmont Amusement Company. The house will seat 300. The incorporators of the company are A. P. Rey-

Nebraska Women Protested at First, but After They Witnessed "A Militant Suffragette" They Agreed It Could Not Hurt "The Cause"

Omaha, Neb., May 5.

EBRASKA, a 1914 campaign state for equal suffrage, did not rise up and tear asunder Pathé's five-reeler "The Militant Suffragette," as was feared last week.

A committee of local suffragists witnessed the reel at the General Film Company's office and approved it. Manager E. R. Pearson immediately booked it throughout the state and it is making a highly favorable impression with "antis" and "pros" as well.

Mrs. Draper Smith, president of two Omaha suffrage societies; Mrs. James Richardson, chairman; Mrs. Z. T. Lindsay, county chairman; Mrs. W. C. Sunderland, chairman of the city central committee; John Rine of the men's league for equal suffrage, and Mrs. W. E. Barkley, chairman of the state publicity work committee, viewed the career of "Nellie," the militant suffragette. They enjoyed the film apparently.

They saw her go through the stages of window smashing, getting put in prison, being forcibly fed and then the lionizing after her arrest. They saw her put a bomb in the home of the leader of the "antis" in parliament, the explosion, the fire, and last of all saw her lose her heart to the man whose home she destroyed, and at the close, they saw her cuddling two little babies.

They enjoyed the film, they said, and pronounced it entirely harmless as far "as the cause" in Nebraska is concerned.

Life-Photo Begins New Feature

THE Life-Photo Film Corporation has purchased the rights to produce "The Greyhound," which had such a long run at the Astor Theatre in New York and at the Studebaker Theatre in Chicago. The drama was written by Paul Armstrong and Wilson Mizner, and is thoroughly melodramatic with touches of comedy and realism that relieve the tense situation.

David Wall, who played the lead in "The Banker's Daughter," in the role of McSherry, the reformed card sharp, William A. Tubber, Harry Spangler, Philip Robson, Harry Cowley and Victor Beloit.

In addition to Miss Otis, the feminine roles are taken by Catherine Carter, formerly leading woman with the Famous Players; Anna Laughlin, who has played leads with the largest motion picture concerns in the country, and Miss Corbin, who has played in Broadway successes, and Lillian Langdon. Work on the new production is already well along.

Bring Test Case in English Courts on Licensing of Trade Projection-Rooms—American "Westerns" Have New Rival in Australian Bush Pictures—Taxes in France—Big European Productions

American manufacturers who have agencies in London cannot fail to be interested in the attitude of the London County Council toward trade projection-rooms. The council's disposition is to require these rooms to be licensed, on the ground that they come within the limits of the Cinematograph Act of 1909. Needless to say, the manufacturers have protested and persuaded the council to leave the matter to the courts.

Accordingly a test case will be instituted, under a fiat of the Attorney-General, against the Vitagraph Company Limited, charging them with using a projection room without such a license at their premises, 31-33 Charing Cross Road. First hearings in the case are predicted early in May, and the manufacturers will make a vigorous fight against the license measure.

Famous Books Filmed in England

A trade showing of "The Heart of Midlothian," the Hayworth picture based on Scott's famous novel, was given at the Electric Pavilion on April 21. Highest praise was accorded the feature on all sides.

The Kineto Company's version of "Treasure of the Antelope," from Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's story, is meeting with the most gratifying reception in England. Mrs. Burnett's story is as popular in America as in Great Britain, and the picture should meet with marked success on this side of the water.

The Sixth Annual Cinematograph Trades' dinner was held at London, April 8, at the Connaught Rooms. Great Queen street, Kingsway. Siegmund Lubin, the American manufacturer, now abroad, was a guest at the dinner.

Australian Bush Pictures Coming

American "Westerns," with their cowboys and Indians, are to have a new and powerful rival, in England, at least. This comes in the shape of the Australian "bush" picture, a "Western" in all respects, save that it depicts the life of the settlers and the bushrangers of the Antipodal Commonwealth of the British Empire, instead of the life of the American plains. A series of these are being issued by the Lincoln-Cass Company, whose British agency is 58 Dean street, London, under the title of the X. L. Film Company. The first number of the series, "The Two Bushmen," will be ready May 25.

Bar Inflammable Films

The mayor of Nantes, France, has issued an order forbidding the use of inflammable films in the motion picture theatres of the municipality after July 1, 1915.

Fight Seat Tax in France

The question of a municipal tax, which applies to motion picture theatres as well as playhouses, music-halls, sporting clubs and so forth, is before the French Senate. The city of Bordeaux now charges cinemas, as well as other amusement resorts, a tax of ten centimes, or about two cents, a seat.

A committee headed by Robert Flers, president of the Society of Dramatic Authors; Albert Carre, and the heads of the motion picture manufacturers and exhibitors' associations have waited upon the Senate committee to protest against any further taxation along these lines, particularly in the form of a tax such as the one mentioned. Theatrical men and cinematographic leaders have united for this cause, though they are elsewhere at swords' points.

To Film "The Huguenots"

"The Huguenots," founded on the libretto of Meyerbeer's opera and dealing with the St. Bartholomew massacre at Paris in 1563, will be produced in motion pictures by "Grands Films Populaire," of the French capital.

Spanish Producers Open "Bourse"

An exchange, or Bourse, where pictures of every kind of business in the country can be shown, has just been opened in Barcelona, Spain, corresponding to the famous "Tivoli" of Paris. Pathé, Gaumont and Cines have elected to continue the use of their individual projection-rooms, but the other houses have agreed to use the new Bourse.

Royal Family to See Film

What will amount to a "command performance" of "Adrienne Lecouvreur," the Hecta-Films' picture, will be given before the royal family in the coming future.

Mammoth Productions in Italy

"Quo Vadis" and "The Last Days of Pompeii" already have rivals and successors in three mammoth productions that have been made by three of the Italian companies, all of Turin.

Ambrosio has issued "The Destruction of Carthage," founded on the Punic wars between Rome and the Carthaginians, during the second and third centuries before Christ. "Nero and Agrippina," a huge multiple narrating the career of the notorious Emperor, his murder of his mother, the burning of Rome and the persecution of the Christians, has come from the Gloria Company, and is now being seen in England, France and Germany.

The third was written by no less a celebrity than Gabriel d'Annunzio, the famous Italian dramatist and poet, and produced by the Italia Company. It is entitled "Cabiria," and deals with the career of Hannibal, the Carthaginian general, the siege and capture of Syracuse in Sicily, and the final downfall of Carthage. It requires three hours to show this picture, which is said to be about 16,000 feet long.

"Nero" had its première at Turin, March 23, at the Victor Emmanuel Theatre. The cost of production is said to have been $140,000. Celio has just issued two historical pictures of unusual length, "Othello" and "The Masked Amazon." Another multiple, based on the official archives of the city of Venice, and dealing with the history of the "Bride of the Adriatic," has come from the house of Leonardo.

New Italian Company

Under the name of "Corona Film," a new producing company has recently been formed in Turin, Italy. The capital behind the firm is estimated at $250,000, and the head of the concern is Cav. Ottolenghi, one of the pioneer motion picture men of that city. Rumors are rife in Italy that Pathé is about to open a producing and distributing branch in Turin.

Great Flaubert Novel for Screen

"Salammbo," the world-famed novel of Carthage in the time of Hannibal, by Gustav Flaubert, will be dramatized for the screen and produced by the Pasqualli Company.

New Napoleon Film

In addition to all the other "Napoleon" films now on the market, Savoia has just put out a new one entitled, "Germania." This picture deals with the struggle of the German states against the Emperor, and reproduces in great detail the battles of Austerlitz and Jena. Kaiser Wilhelm is said to have expressed a desire to see the picture as soon as possible. Granaroli, the great Italian exhibitor, it is reported, are considering the formation of an association which shall purchase films direct from the manufacturers and rent them to the exhibitors.
"Bill, you've got a big proposition ahead of you at the Allendale!

"Maybe so. Maybe not. Anyhow, I'll tell you what I'll do.

"I'll bet you $25 that I will increase the receipts at that theatre twenty-five per cent in thirty days."

"I'll take you up on that, Bill. I'm looking for some easy money."

And so it started.

The above conversation took place between Manager E. Meadows, of the local special feature department of the General Film Company, and the new manager of the Allendale, William G. Kaliska.

Now the cry is, "Let Bill do it!"
And Bill has set out to do it.

Such a wager is more than interesting. It is positively exciting. To win it looks difficult at first blush. And the longer you consider it, the more difficult it appears.

How would you go to work to win it?

Read what William G. Kaliska has done and is doing, and consider whether you, as an exhibitor, could improve upon his methods.

First of all, Mr. Kaliska will inaugurate a publicity campaign, for he is a firm believer in the power of advertising.

Every week he will insert a large ad in the Buffalo Sunday newspapers and throughout the week use smaller ads.

The Allendale books only the highest class of attractions, but up to the time Mr. Kaliska assumed the management many Buffalonians, except those in the immediate vicinity of this theatre, knew nothing of the splendid programs which they could see at the Allendale.

All the products of the Famous Players and the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company get their first showing in Buffalo at the Allendale.

Manager Kaliska believes that motion picture enthusiasts will come a long distance to see some of these features.

He has engaged a publicity director to handle all his press matter and announces that while only a week old, his advertising plan has already increased his receipts.

The Allendale, while one of the most beautiful theatres in western New York, has until recently been "littered up" in front, if we may use that expression, with cheap paper posters and other signs.

Now Manager Kaliska has done away with all this and has engaged a prominent artist to paint several permanent posters in oil for the front of the theatre.

Upon the arrival of big features he will also have them advertised by this system, thus doing away with the unsightly display. The front of the theatre has been vastly improved by this system.

The stage has been reset with new scenery and a beautiful red velvet curtain hung from the top of the stage, gracefully sweeping the footlights, which have been banked with artificial flowers. New electric fixtures will be installed at the Allendale this week.

Before the new management there were two matinees only at the Allendale. Mr. Kaliska has now opened the theatre for matinees on Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday.

Special music will be a feature of the Sunday programs in the future. At intermission solos will be rendered by Messrs. Senno and Robinson, which will doubt be greatly appreciated by the audience.

From present conditions it looks as though Manager Meadows is going to lose some money.

Universal Construction Plans in Hand

Plans for a number of buildings and stages to be built by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, in Calumet Pass, California, are now well under way, it is reported. Architects S. Tilden Norton and Frederick H. Wallis are preparing the working drawings. The construction of the principal buildings will be reinforced concrete.

The structures will include a two-story administration building, 50x94 feet, mill 50x158, two stages 200x600 and 200x330, film plant, revolving stages, restaurant, laboratory, stores and shops, costume factory, emergency hospital, dressing-rooms, animal enclosures and several artificial lakes.

Vol. IX May 16, 1914 No. 19

Relief that is no Relief

THE Illinois State Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America put itself on record as endorsing state censorship of motion pictures. The convention, it is true, favored national or state censorship, as opposed to local censorship.

But it approved state censorship.

And the vast majority of exhibitors will be profoundly disappointed at the action of the Illinois convention.

* * *

THAT resolution is not an endorsement of state censorship.

IT IS A FORMAL INVITATION TO THE POLITICIANS OF ILLINOIS TO EMULATE
THE EXAMPLE OF THEIR BRETHREN IN OHIO, AND BEGIN PLUNDERING THE MOTION-PICTURE INDUSTRY FOR ALL IT IS WORTH.

"Resolved, that the members of this convention prefer to be held up and put out of business by the poitical grafters of the state rather than be at the mercy of the police and the narrow-gauge reformers of every city and town in Illinois."

* * *

THAT is the real meaning of the resolution the Illinois exhibitors have adopted. And if they do not know it, it is high time they did.

STATE CENSORSHIP OF FILMS MEANS
CENSORSHIP BY POLITICIANS. AND CEN-SORSHIP BY POLITICIANS MEANS LEGAL-IZED ROBBERY.

To be sure, local censorship in Illinois has reached a highly inflated state.

But to exchange state censorship for local cens-sorship is like choosing to be devoured by tigers (apoglogies to Tammany) rather than by wolves.

It is the drowning man who feels himself going down for the last time and appeals for help to a maneating shark.* * *

THE disasters of state censorship will inevitably recoil on the head of every exhibitor who espouses it.

Imagine, for a moment, a state censor board in every state in the Union that was free from political control, composed of sincere and honest men and women. No two of these censor boards, it is likely, would agree on the question of what should or should not be in a film. * * *

SUPPOSE a sick man was diagnosed by forty-eight different doctors; each doctor made a different diagnosis and each insisted upon operating on the patient for a different ailment.

The chance that man would have for his life is the chance the motion-picture industry has to survive if the "film surgeons" are let loose upon it.

And that is state censorship in its least obnoxious form. Its most obnoxious can be found—in Ohio.

An All-Year Convention

THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS desires to call the attention of every exhibitor to the department headed "THE EXHIBITORS' FORUM," on another page of this issue.

Questions and problems daily throng the mind of the wide-awake exhibitor, and the answers to these he seeks until he finds them. Often they come only through painful experience, for lack of any other accessible source of information.

* * *

THE EXHIBITORS' FORUM is designed to meet the needs of just such seekers for knowledge and enlightenment. The exhibitor meets his fellow showmen in convention at most once a year, if as often.

THE EXHIBITORS' FORUM offers the exhibitor the advantages of an open convention all the year round, in the columns of which he can present his problems and read the suggestions and solutions of men who have met the same problems successfully in the past.

* * *

EVERY exhibitor who has an opinion to express upon any phase of the motion-picture industry, on any of the film questions of the day, is invited to make use of the columns of THE EXHIBITORS' FORUM.

If your mind is working on this, or any other topic, give your fellow showmen a chance to know what you think and where you stand.
You Can Pick Feature Films That Are Real Features

Let us give you a tip—it will be worth real money to you and will save you many mistakes.

The leading moving picture stars will not play a part in a poor production. They will not risk their reputations. They are just as particular in that way as the stars on the "legitimate" stage. So when we offer played by the greatest, best-known stars in the motion picture business you can rest assured that the production is a pippin. It would have been impossible to have persuaded, ordered or bullied Pearl White, Crane Wilbur, Paul Panzer, Francis Carlyle or the others to play in the Perils of Pauline unless they were assured that it would be a real feature. When they saw what scope it allowed for their talent they threw themselves into it with an enthusiasm that is carrying everything before it.

The Perils of Pauline

You Know

what these names mean. You know what they have done before. They are doing better work in "The Perils of Pauline" than ever. "The Perils of Pauline" is a real live, red-blood feature that is pleasing the public and making a name for the theatres running it.

THE ADVENT OF THE SOUTHERN FEATURE FILM CORPORATION INTO NEW HEADQUARTERS WAS MARKED BY EXTENSIVE CEREMONIES. INVITATIONS WERE EXTENDED TO EXHIBITORS, EXCHANGE MEN AND JOURNALISTS AND A CROWD OF MORE THAN 150 ATTENDED.

THE COMPANY IS NOW LOCATED AT 1902 COMMERCE STREET, WITH TWO FLOORS ACCOMMODATING 27X110 FEET. MORE THAN $3,000 WORTH OF OFFICE FURNITURE HAS BEEN INSTALLED AND THE BUILDING IS ONE OF THE BEST-APPOINTED EXCHANGE IN THE CITY.

W. T. TERRY, OF NEW YORK, PRESIDENT OF THE CONCERN, ATTENDED THE OPENING ALONG WITH C. W. SLATER, DISTRICT MANAGER. AFTER THE DANCING, REFRESHMENTS WERE SERVED IN PROLIFERATION, AND "BREWSTER'S MILLIONS" WAS EXHIBITED.

UNIVERSAL FILMS ARE NOW BEING SHOWN AT THE HIPPODROME THEATRE INSTEAD OF THE CRYSTAL. THIS IS THE THIRD CHANGE THE UNIVERSAL HAS MADE RECENTLY.

THE HIPPODROME OPENED WITH THE "LUCETTE LOVE" SERIAL BY INSERTING FREE AdMISSION TICKETS IN A LOCAL PAPER. THE UNIVERSAL SERVICE WILL NOT BE USED EXCLUSIVELY, AS MANAGER TOM P. FINNEGAN INTENDS TO CONTINUE THE USE OF LASKY AND LONDON FEATURES.

THE CRYSTAL WILL BOOK GENERAL FILM RELEASES IN CONJUNCTION WITH THE QUEEN. FAMOUS PLAYER FEATURES WILL BE SHOWN EXCLUSIVELY AT THE CRYSTAL.

TO FILM "THE SPITFIRE"

CARLYLE BLACKWELL, WHO RECENTLY LEFT THE KALEM ORGANIZATION TO GO WITH THE FAMOUS PLAYERS, IS TO BE SEEN SHORTLY IN "THE SPITFIRE" WHICH IS NOW BEING PRODUCED BY THE LATTER COMPANY IN FOUR REELS. THE COMEDY DRAMA WAS WRITTEN BY EDWARD PEPE, AND HAS BEEN SEEN BY THOUSANDS IN THE MANY YEARS IT HAS PLAYED ON THE STAGE. MR. PEPE IS ALSO AUTHOR OF "A PAIR OF SIXES," WHICH IS NOW PLAYING IN NEW YORK.

"THE SPITFIRE" IS SAID TO HAVE MANY VERY HUMOROUS PASSAGES, YET WITFUL IS DRAMATIC ALSO. THE LAUGHS AND THRILLS WILL BE CAREFULLY BALANCED IN THE FILM VERSION. MR. BLACKWELL SHOULD DO VERY WELL IN THE PART OF MORSON, THE YOUNG AMERICAN. HIS TYPE AND FIGURE FIT HIM FOR SUCH A PART.

ANOTHER THEATRE YIELDS

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, MAY 3.

THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE HERE, WHICH HAS BEEN BOOKING LEGITIMATE PRODUCTIONS THE PAST SEASON, HAS BEEN CONVERTED INTO A PHOTO-PLAYHOUSE.

THE GENERAL FILM PROGRAM AND WARNER'S FEATURES ARE BEING BOOKED.

WEBB ELECTRICAL PICTURES SHOWN

ON MONDAY, MAY 4, AT THE FULTON THEATRE, NEW YORK CITY, GEORGE R. WEBB PRESENTED FOR THE FIRST TIME IN AN OFFICIAL WAY THE INVENTION OF THE TALKING MOTION PICTURE ON WHICH HE HAS BEEN WORKING FOR SEVERAL YEARS.

CONTRARY TO OTHER METHODS NOW IN USE, MR. WEBB DOES NOT EMPLOY A PHONOGRAPH BACK OF THE SCREEN, BUT INSTEAD CONDUCTS HIS SOUND WAVES OVER A WIRE FROM THE OPERATING BOOTH, WHERE THE PHONOGRAPHS ARE INSTALLED. BACK OF THE SCREEN AND AROUND IT ARE MANY HORNS WHICH ARE REGULATED FROM THE BOOTH, SO THAT THE VOICE FOLLOWS THE PERSON SPEAKING ABOUT THE SCREEN, YIELDING A FAIRLY REALISTIC EFFECT TO ANYTHING CONSIDERED TO DATE.

At the present time, the longest record used is of five minutes' duration, but it will not be long before a twelve-minute record will be put in use. This will enable an entire opera to be put on the screen without delay in changing the records.

The program opened with a banjo selection, which was remarkable for its realistic effect and was received by the audience with a round of applause. "ROCKED IN THE CRADLE OF THE DEEP," "U.S. PATROL" ON THE XYLOPHONE, AND "THE OLD OAKEN BUCKET" BY THE WELL-KNOWN COMEDIAN, NAT WILLS, FOLLOWED. THESE SELECTIONS WERE ALL SHORT AND WELL RECEIVED.

The second part of the program showed CARROLL JOHNSON AND HIS COMPANY OF "OLD-TIME MINSTRELS," WHICH, ALTHOUGH RATHER LONG, WAS WELL STAGED AND SHOVED THE POSSIBILITIES WHICH THESE NEW ELECTRICAL PICTURES HAVE.

The third and last part were selections from "FAUST," ONE OF THE BEST KNOWN OF THE GRAND OPERAS. THE STAGING AND GENERAL EFFECT OF THIS PART WAS A FITTING CLIMAX, FOR THE SUPERB VOICES OF CARUSO, FARRAR, MELBA, JOURNET AND AMATI WERE TO BE HEARD. THIS PART OF THE PROGRAM ESPECIALLY SHOVED THE EFFECT OF THE NUMEROUS PHONOGRAPH HORN BEHIND THE SCREEN AND BROUGHT OUT THE REALISM OF THE VARIOUS SCENES TO A WONDERFUL DEGREE.

This reproduction of the opera should prove to be one of the most universally popular of all the branches of the talking picture, as it will enable those who are lovers of music throughout the country to enjoy their favorite voices and visualize the scenes and action in a way which has never been possible in the past.

The length of the present engagement is for four weeks, during which time the various parts will be changed slightly in order that an ideal program may be worked out.

"A CRY IN THE NIGHT"
(20th Century Feature Film Co.)
REVIEWED BY A. DASNON MICHELL

A FOUR-REEL melodrama, with an unusually interesting and novel story. There is little of the conventional in the plot and the action is sufficiently fast to sustain the interest. There are a number of strong dramatic scenes, the principal one of which is the attacking of the girl in the darkened room at the end. The villain, groping in the dark, catches the throat of the wrong person, whom he kills. The audience can see nothing but the hands, and this causes a weird sensation.

Self-sacrifice forms the basis of the plot. Rather than betray his worthless brother, a man takes the blame for his theft and is sent to prison. His escape is well planned and executed, with the exception of his swimming "under" water. This is worked by double exposure and too much of it is shown. It can plainly be seen that the "swimmer" is making much movement, but is not progressing at all. A flash of it would be better than the fifty or sixty feet shown.

Having been sent to prison for his brother's theft, Henry plans and executes his escape. His daughter has been taken care of by Alfred during his absence, and Henry now wishes to locate her. The girl and her uncle have become gypsies. She is rescued from their cruel relation and marries a journalist.

Alfred, reading an advertisement asking for her, substitutes another girl and collects the reward. The cupidity of Alfred is discovered by the journalist's wife and she tells her father who she is and reconciliation follows. The uncle, Alfred, in an attempt to kill her, murders the girl he had substituted.

Viola Whitten, the emotional actress, is featured in the part of Jennie, the daughter. Edwin Newman plays the "heavy" role. Halfang Neff is the lead.

"GIVE ME THAT MONEY!!"

"PROTECT US"
(Ruby)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

This film is, without exception, the worst picture, white slave or otherwise, that I have seen this year. Even if the acting were passable—and it comes as near to being so as day does to being night—the production would be worthless, and not only worthless, but immoral and degrading.

It is this type of picture that casts a bad light on the whole world of pictures. This is just the piece that the censorship advocates are looking for, it is just the kind that they can pick to pieces, and those who are prejudiced against pictures in general will hold this one up as an example of what they term "the motion picture menace."

If these films, "Protect Us" and its kind, were eliminated, or better yet, had they never appeared, the censor agitators would never have raised such a hue-and-cry as they have raised, and will keep on raising, if more such pieces are produced.

Going over each and every scene of the six reels, it is impossible to find one, in regard to acting, production and effect given, that would not come under the title of "per- torial prudery."

And if any exhibitor thinks that by exhibiting this play at his house he can fill it, he is greatly mistaken. He may fill it the first night (if the police are not forewarned), but the public will be absolutely disgusted with it, and none will return, unless for morbid curiosity. No normal, healthy-minded person would want to see it.

The acting amounts to nothing from start to finish. It could be worse, but not much worse. The gentleman who impersonates the "cadet," doubtless did his best, but he makes one think of a "Desperate Desmond" or the overdone villain in a comedy.

The four girls who, one after the other are seduced, are barely passable, though this is making many allowances. The play gets monotonous, except for the raving parents, who are actually amusing in a burlesque fashion, all of them going through the same movements when they find their daughters have left them. Each father pounds the table or the first thing handy, and each wife becomes maudlin exactly as the one before her had done.

The picture was handled by no less than four producers, and it shows it, for different ideas of production are brought out in each reel. When the fifth reel arrives, which is intended to be comic, to relieve the awful strain of the preceding four, one doesn't know whether to laugh, sleep, or go up and kill the operator.

The scenes are poorly laid. Stone walls shake noticeably in one. The lighting is markedly poor; only one scene is worthy of notice, the fire scene, which is perhaps the single passable feature of the picture.

At present the picture is being shown at the Republic Theatre, New York, and signs invite the passersby to see "The blot On Modern Civilization." If he is a misguided wretch he goes in and sees it.

But it can be safely said that when he comes out, he will agree with me in wondering why the sign doesn't read, "The Blot on the Motion Picture Industry."

"THE MARRIAGE OF CUPID"
(Pathé)
REVIEWED BY A. DASNON MICHELL

LOOKING at this picture purely from an artistic standpoint, it would be difficult to imagine anything more perfect. Considering its plot, it is absolutely clean and worthy of being shown in the best houses. Photographically, if it were an American picture, it would mark a new era. To be more brief and right to the point, the story is a two-reel masterpiece. It is released May 9.

The story is taken from the ancient Grecian mythology, those fascinating stories regarding the lives of the inhabitants of Mount Olympus, where none but immortals might live.

The characters of the jealous Venus, the beautiful Psyche, and the amorous Cupid are well drawn. They are assisted by numerous gods and little gods, all dressed in flowing white, who move through the background of the picture, amid exquisite gardens. The result, as may be imagined, is beautiful beyond expression.

FILMS IN ORCHESTRA HALL

Orchestra Hall in Chicago, which was built especially for classical music, is to be a motion picture house for the summer months. The lease calls for a monthly rental of $3,000. The building has a seating capacity of 2,577. Harry M. Lublimer and Joseph Trinz are the lessees.
"THE PERILS OF PAULINE"
(Eclectic)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THRILLS abound in this episode of "The Perils of Pauline," making the fourth of those now released.

Crane Wilbur as Harry, Pauline's lover, assumes a clever disguise, so clever that the audience is completely taken by surprise when his true identity is revealed.

These two reels take place in the water and on the water; the pirate makes a beautiful high dive from the deck of a large liner near the close of the last reel, and then a hard question is put, "How Does the Pirate Escape?"

He is seen struggling in the water after his dive and then he presumably sinks. His fate is left to be followed in the next edition. But the crowning scene in this "Peril" is, undoubtedly, the blowing up of a large yacht. The passengers of an ocean liner see it serenely floating on the water; they lean over the rail watching its aimless course and then the explosion occurs and it is seen no more.

Besides the numerous thrills, there is plenty of humor present in this number, and it is real humor. Harry fails to make an excellent cook; the pirate is so displeased when he breaks a precious tooth on one of Harry's biscuits that he throws it through the side of the yacht. The droll action and the comic make-up of Donald Mackenzie, who impersonates the pirate, will bring a laugh from all.

No new characters of any importance are introduced to the already capable cast. The water scenes are extremely beautiful, not moving up and down, as usually the case; the film continues in all the clearness of preceding installments.

Harry assumes the guise of a colored cook and offers his services to Owen, when the cook that he had procured failed to turn up. Owen and Hicks discover who their cook is and plan to blow up Harry and Pauline together with the yacht. They place a bomb under one of the seats in the cabin and then disembark, but Harry discovers the dishonest plot and he and Pauline jump overboard and are picked up by a passing steamer.

The two villains and the pirate are also picked up by the same steamer, and the two parties meet. Owen places all the blame on the pirate, but he refuses to be the guilty one, and when they start to force him to confess the outrage, he jumps overboard.

"IN THE COW COUNTRY"
(Kay-Bee)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A MUTUAL Western release in two reels, one that "could happen" and therefore more fascinating than most. The picture is remarkable for the fact that every gesture and every movement, no matter how small, plays an important part or has an important bearing on the plot, and no doubt this is the reason for its charm.

Not once while the piece is being shown does the spectator look away from the screen, because by so doing he might miss something good. There are plenty of thrillers, but not an excess of such scenes. The last of these is a real live one.

A runaway stage-coach rolls down a steep hill, carrying the three robbers to a horrible death. There is plenty of good riding, and the distant scenes are unusually clear and well photographed; the same may be said of the rest of the picture.

There is a love story, but it is only prominent first and last. Marsden objects to his clerk's attentions to his daughter and discharges him. Three thieves plan to rob Marsden's store, but through the energies of the faithful clerk, aided by the daughter, they are captured. Needless to say, the clerk is restored to his former position and Marsden no longer objects to his affections toward his daughter.

"A STRUGGLE FOR LIFE"
(Pathé)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

CHARLES PATHE, himself, head of Pathé Frères, is the author of the scenario from which this picture is made. His incidental aim was to show some of the beautiful scenes of France both in the city and in the country in this production, and he has put as many in the five reels as possible.

The photography is virtually perfect; there is not one bad spot in the whole production. The picture's predominant feature is detail.

For example, when Jean meets the wealthy factory owner to whom he is returning his purse, an entertainment is being given for his daughter, Claire. Strictly, it is unnecessary to produce the entertainment, but the fête is depicted with lavish but appropriate elegance. An elaborate stage with orchestra, and fifty or more people attending is shown, while a succession of dancers appear. Considerable time and space is devoted to this scene.

The final scene, that of a burning house from which Jean rescues Claire, is done with excellent effect.

"JEAN IS WELL REWARDED"

The story in itself is extremely simple, but it is decidedly fascinating. Rene Alexandre, of the Comedy Français, takes the part of Jean Morvin. There is really no other prominent character.

Jean, a factory worker, is discharged owing to the prejudice of his employer, and goes to the country, where he obtains work on a farm, but by the same prejudice is forced to leave there also. He wanders to Paris and there, after doing a number of odd things, he finds a purse of money and returns it to its owner.

He will have no reward but accepts a position in the factory and there rises till he becomes his employer's secretary. In the final scene he rescues Claire from the fire and is rewarded with her hand.

The picture is released through the General Film's Photoplay Masterpiece department.

in the matter, and is prepared to give to Burleson the ultimatum that either Smith gets the job or the Republican postmaster stays in office."

Don't you think that Durbin had something to do with the appointment of Mr. Vestal, of his home county, who runs a Democratic newspaper in connection with several other occupations?

And in the meantime the Supreme Court of Ohio (Democratic) will pass on the constitutionality of the new State civil service law. What the decision will be no one knows.

But we all know that a State Censorship Board as such is un-American primarily; that the first board ever created in the United States is tainted with politics; and that a strong effort is being made to perpetuate its membership in office when the present membership has not proven to exhibitors or to others that they are conversant with their duties.

No politics connected with the Ohio Board of Censors of Motion Pictures?

Again: It is to laugh!

"LUCILLE LOVE; THE GIRL OF MYSTERY"
(Gold Seal)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSO MICHIE
THE fourth of the series of "Lucille Love" stories, told in two reels, and released May 5. The story is as exciting and mysterious as hitherto. Grace Cunard and Francis Ford deserve great credit for their excellent work in this series. The chances they have taken, and are taking, are sufficient to merit them a well-earned vacation when they are through. Nothing seems too large for them to undERTAKE, nothing so small, and in this regard the picture is nearly perfect in detail.

The finale is probably the strongest point in the picture.
Lucille is trapped by her enemy and takes a great chance when she rides over a deep pit and falls, together with the horse, to the bottom. Miss Cunard drops with her mount, and there we leave her.

Fire is played with in a reckless manner. One of the native straw huts in the center of the village is set afire.
How the other buildings are prevented from catching is one of the other mysteries. A large cast of natives take part, as in previous installments.

Lucille is unable to escape with the papers in her possession. Hugo, her enemy, plans to get these while the girl is in his power. The house in which she lives is burned and she is left without a home. A call to her for aid for a sick native carries her into the trap, and there until the next installment she remains.

"WHAT DID HE DO TO YOU?"

"THE GAMBLERS"
(Luba)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE
FROM the title one is led to believe that cards, chips, the roulette wheel, and other similar devices for losing money play important parts in the drama. But, in this drama, gambling is defined from a different angle; the gamblers that appear here are those who gamble more with the greater things—life and love and business. In fact, this five-reel masterpiece confirms the oft-repeated saying that "Life is but a gamble."

The story was written by Charles Klein, author of "The Lion and the Mouse" and "The Third Degree," two well-known Broadway successes. It contains nothing startling or sensational, but runs on in a most natural way; nevertheless, the interest is held throughout. No vivid climax appears, but the climax is there and it comes when a man, much admired by all, sacrifices his freedom for the love of his father and the honor of the woman he loves, and gives himself up to the police.

The photography is pleasing and quite out of the ordinary; none of the usual glaring white scenes appeared at all. The day scenes are a beautiful shade of brown, the night scenes are shown in pleasing subdued colors.
But the film has its faults, for it is somewhat too long and too many sub-titles appear.

The plot of the story is given away in the first reel. This may be considered by some a redeeming feature and by others a fault, but one who has missed the first reel hardly knows what the story is, even by seeing the other four; no refer-ce to former happenings being alluded to in the latter parts.

The cast embraces George Spencer, William Turner, Gaston Bell, Earl Metcalfe, Ethel Clayton and Lillie Leslie. The characters are well introduced preceding the commencing of the play. Miss Clayton is the leading lady. Only praise can be accorded to her work. The rest of the cast performs in a highly commendable manner.

The story: Catherine accepts Darwin, a prominent lawyer, rejecting Wilbur Emerson, whom she loves better but who is devoted to his work. Young Emerson's father hands the management of his bank to his more progressive son. His progressiveness causes the directors to borrow on their own funds beyond their notes, a criminal offense, and Darwin is called upon to prosecute them. Secretly hating Wilbur, Darwin gladly undertakes the task, and finally brings down the law on Wilbur's head. Catherine, embarrassed by her husband's actions, divorces him and promises Wilbur to wait until his term is over.

The picture is released through the General Film Photoplay Masterpiece department.
THE PORT OF MISSING MEN

(Famous Players)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

The Famous Players have never produced a picture of any kind that has failed to come up to the very best in the world of pictures, and "The Port of Missing Men" admirably lives up to the high standard set by its many predecessors. Much can be said of its merits, nothing of its demerits, for of the latter there are none in the entire five reels.

Only the highest praise can be accredited to the work of Arnold Daly, famed as the main exponent of the "intellectual drama." He makes his first appearance on the screen in this master production, and all the praise he earned on the legitimate stage will follow him into motion pictures, if this, his first attempt, may be taken as a criterion.

He is admirably suited to the part of John Armitage, as those who remember him as Napoleon in Bernard Shaw's "Man of Destiny" can testify. "The Port of Missing Men," written by Meredith Nicholson, was fascinating as a novel, and, filmed, its charm is doubled.

Actions and scenes can be described in such a way that the reader almost sees what he reads, but seeing a well-known novel, acted and produced as it is in this instance, puts the book in the background.

Highest praise is due Mr. Daly, but he is not alone in deserving it; he is supported by a cast worthy an equal amount of praise, for what is a star surrounded by a poor cast? Marguerite Skirvin as Shirley Calborne, plays opposite Mr. Daly. She is a delightful, genuine American girl, plays an important part, and plays it well. Edward Machay, as Frederick Augustus, is a characteristic prince. Frederick Bock, as Emperor Charles Louis; Augustus Balfour, as the Arch-Duke Karl; Minna Haines, as his wife, are excellent. Mortimer Martini, Arthur Dale, Dave Wall, Wallace Scott and Fred Weber complete the cast.

A word pertaining to the settings. The interiors were taken in the New York studio, the exteriors on the beautiful Gould estate. Elegance and grandeur predominate in both, especially in the latter; the spacious grounds resemble those of a palace to perfection, and no small details have escaped the eye of Francis Powers, the producer.

The story is one that will keep everyone on the edge of their seats from the moment John Armitage, who is really the son of the Prime Minister of a mythical Empire, comes to America with Frederick, the heir to the throne, and thereafter through their many and varied experiences, until Frederick is proven the rightful heir, through the efforts of Armitage, who baffled countless plots on the life of Frederick as well as his own. No person, no matter how disinterested, or prejudiced against a motion picture, can fail to enjoy this wonderful story of romance, adventure, and intrigue.

And the five reels, entirely void of all padding and superficial scenes, are not a bit too long. The picture is one of those that cannot help but bring an appreciative round of applause from its audience when the last scene disappears.

THE MASTER MIND

(Lasky)

REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

A powerful, absorbing drama featuring Edmund Breese and told in five parts. Breese played the same part in the original drama, in which he scored a tremendous hit. He has also played in "The Third Degree" and "The Lion and the Mouse." But it is in the film version that he has scored his greatest success. The unlimited chances offered him before the camera enabled him to give his undoubted powers greater scope. He is deserving of much credit for his interpretation of "The Master Mind."

This film version was produced by Cecil B. DeMille and Oscar Apfel at the studios in Hollywood, Cal. A strong and capable cast supports Mr. Breese. Mabel Van Buren, who plays the opposite part, is very pretty and does clever work. Fred Montague, Jane Darwell, Dick La Reno, Harry Fisher, Richard La Strange, Monroe Salisbury and Billy Elmer complete the list of important players.

Probably the most powerful part is the denouement when Richard Allen, "The Master Mind," exposes his hand to the District Attorney whom he hates so much. It is of such power as to make the audience literally hold their breaths.

A large number of very clever disguises figure in the film. This, together with countless trap doors, windows, etc., make the film of unusual interest. Mr. Breese is a master of make-up, and an added interest is created by showing the actual affixing of wigs, beards, mustaches on the screen.

Richard, while yet a youngster, is kidnapped and forced to steal for a living. Years later the two brothers, Henry, a wealthy young man, and Richard, "The Master Mind," meet again and recognize each other. Henry shortly after meets and falls in love with a girl who is really a flirt. Seeing her in another's arms he shoots the man, and is convicted, and sent to the chair.

Richard pledges vengeance on the District Attorney. He disguises himself as a valet, and with his gang of crooks as a family, he sets Lucine, alias "Three-Armed Fanny," to catch the lawyer. The girl is successful and marries the official, really loving him. Just when revenge is at hand, when he can crush the man he hates, he refuses to do so, and everything ends as it should.

In writing to advertisers please mention "THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS"
“A Pack of Cards.” (Lubin. Two reels. April 30.)—A beautiful drama of the far Northwest. The winter scenes are extremely pretty. The photography is of a high class and wonderfully clear. The cast is remarkably small; there are only four characters of any importance, but, contrary to the rule in such pictures, the action holds the observer throughout. The drama is void of the sensational and for this reason refreshing to see. The main point is a novel one, seldom used, at least not overworked like most. Fionette, the wife of Pierre, is badly treated by her husband, a gambler and a confirmed drunkard. He quarrels with Jean, another trapper, over a game of cards and is killed. Jean escapes with all his cards except one. By this clue he is brought to justice by the police and Paul, one of the Northwest mounted police, is freed from suspicion. Paul and Fionette are engaged before Paul goes away on a long trip.

“In Royal Bondage.” (Pathé. Two reels. April 30.)—A fascinating drama of royal life, which undoubtedly has happened many times in the olden days and may even happen in the present time. The photography is practically perfect. The coloring and light effects are beautiful, as in most Pathé foreign pictures. There are no thrilling scenes in this production, but even so one can’t help enjoying it, it is so pathetic and pretty. Prince George, of Bavaria, marries the gamekeeper’s daughter, unknown to his parents. Three years later his brother dies, thus making him Crown Prince. Although his father learns of the marriage, he insists that George leave his wife and marry a woman of royal birth. He finally is forced to consent, and his wife is given a title and a good home, but these do not make up for the loss of her husband, nor does his second wife take the place of the first in George’s mind.

“The Dawn of Romance.” (Imp. May 4.)—The first of the experiences of Doris, released through the Universal company, featuring Ethel Grandin. This reel is high-class comedy with here and there touches of drama. The comedy is all to be found in the actions and experiences of Doris (Miss Grandin) who furnishes all the laughs by her queer ways. The photography is better than the ordinary; the scenes are nothing usual, but appropriately laid. Miss Grandin is well assisted by the rest of the cast.

Doris is unmanageable, flirtatious, gay and very much of a tomboy, and so she is sent to boarding school. She and the singing teacher, Signor Ricardo, plan to elope, but as they are seated in the latter’s car he is accosted by a woman with a child who claims that the Signor is her husband. Needless to say, Doris returns to school and creeps into bed and no one but herself is the wiser for her experience.

“A Meddler with Fate.” (Pathé Two reels. May 7.)—A Berlin picture. The photography is exceptionally beautiful. The settings are also most artistic. The wife of an army officer carries on a violent flirtation with her husband’s friend. The husband sees a photograph of them together and manages to take a similar one himself. He asks her to develop it. On seeing that he knows of her disgrace, and being told he does not care, she attempts suicide, but is saved just in time by the husband.

“Regeneration.” (Kalem. Two reels. May 11.)—A gripping drama, one that will hold all with its tense situations. The scenes are well laid, especially those portraying the darker side of the characters’ lives. The last scene is pathetic, though pleasant, and will appeal to everyone’s heart. The photography and lighting are good, though the actors seem to have a little too much make-up on in some scenes.

The story is that of two of the city’s submerged who have risen and have lived good lives for many years. These two, George and Katherine, meet and after a while they become engaged. Burt, the old companion of Katherine, tells George of her past and he breaks the engagement, but that night his own past rises before him, and the next day he seeks forgiveness.

“His Sob Story.” (Edison. Two reels. May 15.)—There are no startling, thrilling or desperate scenes in this drama, and probably for this very reason it is refreshing for the spectator. The piece contains two morals, both of them of equal importance and well worth remembering.

Dains, the editor of a city paper, was divorced from his wife in former years, and seeing it was all a mistake, he longs to find her again. Crandall, a young would-be reporter, goes to Dains for a job, who tells him to get any story and write it up for a sample of his work. Crandall gets the pathetic story of Mary Dains, who is ill in a hospital.

Needless to say Crandall gets a position, while Dains is happily reunited to his wife.
"THE WAIF"

(Eclectic)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

SIX reels of a smoothly running story, an entertaining story, containing nothing sensational and nothing suggestive, and at the same time a story that will please all kinds and classes. It is remarkable for the fact that the plot contains no love story, no trials of an unhappily married couple, in fact none of the usual events which mark many a photodrama. The spectator’s sympathy is aroused for little Remi at the very start, and continues till the end.

The scenes are all well laid and beautiful, most all of them pretty rural scenes, and they are fortified by excellent photography and coloring, no uncommon thing with this brand of pictures.

The star is no other than La Petit Fromet, the juvenile actress made famous by her personation of Cosette in “Les Misérables.” Here she assumes the rôle of a boy.

The cast, of course, contains some full-grown actors and actresses who play important parts, but without a doubt Mlle. Fromet is the shining light.

While dwelling on the cast, the remarkably well-trained dogs should not be forgotten. The three dogs, together with a little monkey, play prominent parts and will surely amuse.

Some of the experiences that befall little Remi make our hearts go out to him. Remi’s parting with Mother Barberin is a pathetic scene, and with the death of his great friend and master, Vitali, is impressive.

Robert Daubrias hears that his brother has died, and expects to inherit the bulk of his fortune; the only one in his way is a weak child of Madame Daubrias, but fortunately another child is born to her, a strong and robust boy. Robert determines to do away with him and pays a gangman to kidnap him.

The story then follows Remi through all his many experiences while struggling to make a living. He meets his mother once, but neither of them recognizes the other. Finally after many years of wandering Remi is restored to his parents, who had given up all hope of his return.

"THE DISHONORED MEDAL"

(R. & M.)

REVIEWED BY A. DASSON MICHELL

A FOUR-REEL drama directed by W. Christy Cabanne, under the supervision of D. W. Griffith, and enacted by the Reliance and Majestic players. In many ways this film, similar to others Mr. Griffith has had to do with, is remarkable. It may be said without fear of contradiction that it is one of the finest the season has produced.

The plot of the story is laid in the north of Africa and deals with the struggles of the Arabs with their masters, the French. Whether or not there is any historical foundation for the facts is of minor importance compared with the actual story itself. It can hardly be called melodramatic in character, although rudimentarily so. It is a very difficult subject to deal with intelligently and plainly. Mr. Cabanne and his players have been able to express their actions in a very clear manner, yet without danger of offense.

There are a number of very wonderful battle scenes between the Arabs and the French. Real cannon are used and the camera registers the effect of the shells as they hit the mountain-side. The scenes showing the soldiers fighting, just visible through the haze of the smoke, supply atmosphere.

The first two reels contain practically no action, merely a sequence of events. Commencing with the third, however, there is sufficient to satisfy anyone’s craving for the fight in the films. The make-up of the characters is also very well done. With the exception of the French army officer, who plays the lead, all the principal characters are Arabs. The girls, Miriam Cooper, as Zora, and Mabel Van Buren, as Anitra, were most attractive. The others in the cast, George Gehard as the heavy, R. A. Walsh as the lead, and Frank Bennett as the juvenile did splendid work.

A very dramatic climax is registered. The adopted son of Achmet, who is really the illegitimate son of DuBois, the French officer, meets his father. Neither knows the other and the boy kills him. As the older man dies the relationship is discovered.

With musical effects that will synchronize with the action, this picture will receive applause in any theatre. There is much chance for splendid work on the piano and trap-drums, during the battles, with weird oriental music through the other scenes.

Dissolves are used plenteously. Some of them, made probably by use of mats, are very effective.

FAMOUS THEATRE A PICTURE HOUSE

Sadler’s Wells Theatre is the oldest of all London theatres, not excepting the Drury Lane. It was built more than two hundred years ago, and has been the birthplace of some very famous dramas. Finding variety unprofitable, it has now become a motion-picture theatre. The house has been remodeled and refitted and should be popular.
GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

"The Warrior Maid." (Schig. Two reels. April 20.)—A pathetic drama in which Tony sacrifices his life to save his girl-loves, but who had rejected him. Beautiful settings add greatly to the plot.

"Pie for Sophie." (Essanay. April 30.)—A short comedy of two reels. Tony can fool Sophie; they are partially successful at first, but justice is meted out to them in a canonical manner.

"The Soul of the Desert." (Biograph. April 20.)—A dramatic story, but one possessing an excellent moral. Bert and Blechs, who have run away, get lost in the desert. Their friends, who are dedicated to saving the youth of the world, come to their rescue.

"Hairst-Seig News Pictorial, No. 18." (Essanay. April 26.)—The opening of the Federal League Baseball Park in Chicago is a good starter for this number. There are a few minor events, Mexico occupies the rest of the reels.

"Andy Plays Cupid." (Edison. May 12.)—A novel comedy in which Andy, an A. D. T., puts an Englishman to rest and fixes up a happy marriage.

"An Alaskan Interlude." (Edison. May 12.)—A fine northern drama. A good husband is trying to find happiness for the happiness of his wife. He is prevented from doing this by her and later they both become happy.

"The Fox and the Man." (Edison. May 12.)—A couple of gold-diggers are not considered the fondest of relatives when they see the misfortunes that he brings upon some of his victims.

"The Man Higher Up." (Pathé. Split reel. May 4.)—On the same reel with "Manila, Capital of the Philippines." The "man" is the man upstairs brother, but finally his story is told by the man downstairs, who has escaped from Ummahal and is about to be hanged. The whole scene is shown and the film ends at an extremely critical moment. It is a clever comedy and will be appreciated by those who watch it carefully.

"Manila, Capital of the Philippines." (Pathé. May 4.)—On the same reel with "The Man Higher Up." Showing how picturesque city has advanced in late years.

"Cupid versus Money." (Vitagraph. May 4.)—A very pretty comedy-drama of how a marriage for money finally resulted in real love.

"Hairst-Seig News Pictorial, No. 19." (Essanay. May 4.)—A very interesting film showing how society women are saved from nosey people who are embarrassed by the presence of a woman from their own class.

"The Wedding Present." (Kleine-Cinet. Two reels. April 28.)—An entertaining and beautifully staged drama. At the same time Madame Tarte is engaged, married, and engaged again. The whole scene is written in poetry.

"The Deadliest of Nature's Celebrities." (Pathé. Split reel. April 25.)—The poisonous cobra is the subject of this film. Many close views are shown. On the same reel with "Open Season." The snakes are captured in the air.

"St. John De Luiz on Biscay Bay." (Pathé. Split reel. April 28.)—On the same reel with "The Deadliest of Nature's Celebrities." and "A Few Minutes in Calcutta." A wonderful view of the sea as the beach is seen, the view of the deep sea breakwater is shown here, the fish jumping in the air.

"Tony, the Greaser." (Vitagraph. April 29.)—A pathetic drama in which Tony sacrifices his life to save his girl-loves, but who had rejected him. Beautiful settings add greatly to the plot.

"The Imitation of Life." (Essanay. April 23.)—A drama entirely different from most, but not confusing, revolving on a foolish agreement of three men. The attention is held to the end, as the mystery is not cleared until then.

"Chicago Mounted Police Review." (Essanay. Split reel. April 29.)—On the same reel with "Caring a Husband." The inspectors of this review are Second-Deputy Inspector and police officer.

"Caring a Husband." (Essanay. Split reel. April 29.)—On the same reel with "Chicago Mounted Police Review." A comedy in which a dissipated husband is pursued by a friend of the wife's brother.

"The Inventor's Wife." (Lubin. Two reels. April 29.)—A slow and tiresome drama containing little live action. Ward, the inventor, takes Ellen, an agent of the rival's, into his employ. She arouses the jealousy of his wife, who spiers on her. One night Ellen tamps the electrical invention and is killed. Mrs. Ward is accused of her death, but finally the truth is learned.

"The Pirates of Peacock Alley." (Selig. April 29.)—A confusing drama in which the worthless man who makes a business of marries but just has a tobacco and smoke.

"The Great Love." (Essanay. May 5.)—Except for the photography, this is a worthy picture, telling of a stirring way the heroic self-sacrifice made by a girl for the man she loves.

"A Blind Business." (Lubin. Split reel. May 5.)—On the same reel with "The Warden's Birthday." A ridiculous comedy, laughable in places, but not up to the usual Lubin mark. A blind man out of a scarecrow, and proceeds to dance the popular, but later they are found out.

"Casey's Birthday." (Lubin. Split reel. May 5.)—On the same reel with "A Blind Business." Casey celebrates by getting gloriously drunk, and getting into various scrapes, most of which are too silly to be comical.

"The Old Fire Horse and the New Fire Chief." (Vitagraph. Two reels. May 5.)—John Bunny, Kate Price and Flora Finch play the leads in this comedy-drama. It is both sentimental and humorous in the extreme. The New fire chief thinks she can take time to polish before a fire breaks out. If she is ready the new auto fire-engine goes wrong, with the result that the old fire chief and his horse are reinstated.

"A Knight of Trouble." (Selig. Split reel. May 1.)—On the same reel with "The Plot that Failed." An old plot handled in a novel way makes this a comic production. The photography is noticeably clear and bright.

"The Plot that Failed." (Selig. Split reel. May 1.)—On the same reel with "A Knight of Trouble." The usual comic results follow when the new cook is mistaken for mother-in-law.

"The Get-Away." (Lubin. May 1.)—Hill is a director of a bootlegging company, and is in the escape of a dishonest hodie; later he marries his daughter. The story becomes of mystery and sensuality, and ends until the film is over. The plot is different from the usual run.

"Bunco Bill's Visit." (Vitagraph. May 1.)—A slow comedy rather devoid of laughs. Bunco Bill captures a notorious bandido in a peculiar way.

"Broncho Billy's Close Call." (Essanay. May 2.)—Far better than the average of Billy's experiences. A reel of true comedy. Billy mistakes his wife's brother for a rival, and it ends happily.

"He Never Found Out." (Lubin. May 2.)—A servant problem rather weakly handled.
THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS
slow toward the end. Carl is a grouch, and has fired five servants. Bess gets her mother to come as a servant, and she soon fixes Carl.

"Her Big Scoop." (Biograph. May 21.)—A comedy with a good one, but impossible, but it will surely please. A young reporter leaves, a cord, to restore the wife of the candidate for governor, gets a big scoop for her paper, and wins a handsome besides.

"Vasco, the Vampire." (Imp. May 7.)—The first of a series of juvenile detective com- edies. All is well for nine years of age. These are stories that will please the children, but not the adults. The film deals with a notorious villain, who is a master- is. He is finally brought to justice.

"On the Chess-Board of Fate." (Imp. Two reels. May 14.)—A drama with a good plot but wooden actors. The scenes are interpreted as comical in some instances. An unpardonable sin in the film is the family of their rightful inheritance, but the hand of fate intercedes and the blood death before his wicked plans are accomplished.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

"Ashes of the Past." (Reliance. Two reels. May 8.)—Although slow in parts, this drama is pleasing as a whole and terminates in a pretty finale. The scene of action is on a Western desert. An orphan child is the means of reconcili- ation between a discontented gambler and a wife.

"The Navy Aviator." (American. May 13.)—Full of thrilling scenes combined with good Mexican atmosphere. An aviator proves the value of his courage by dropping a bomb on Valdez, a traitor.

"Our Mutual Girl, No. 16." (Reliance. May 4.)—Margaret meets F. P. Adams and Briggs of the New York Evening Post, who later she encounters a burglar. Then follows a touch- ing story of the man's hard life.

"Eugenics Versus Love." (Beauty. May 5.)—A clever and droll burlesque on eugenics. Rapid action, good photography and well-staged scenes add to it greatly.

"The Forest Vampire." (Domino. Two reels. May 14.)—A drama containing some pretty scenes. The story has a young hunter and is secretly a highway robber. His daughter falls in love with a musician, who proves to be a villain, and later captures the robbers and kills the keeper. She is heartbroken and leaves them.

"A Suspended Ordeal." (Keystone. May 9.)—Trouble arises, due to a mix-up between two policemen and their wives. A continual laugh; the last scene is a side-splitter.

"Forced to Be Stylish." (Princess. May 1.)—Aunt Jane does not like girls to dress as the modern fashions decrees, but she is brought around by some rather pretty scenes.

"The Different Man." (Majestic. May 4.)—Francesca Billington and Donald Craig are the principals. The title is good. The hero does exactly the reverse to what is expected and so wins the girl.

"Fickle Mary Jane." (Royal. Split reel. May 2.)—Cullen, of the police, finds the man of her love, but his wife does exactly the reverse to what is expected and so wins the girl.

"Sneekam's Birthday." (Royal. Split reel. May 2.)—Old comedy. A piano-tuner is taken for a doctor by Sneekam's parents.

"Cheese of Police." (Majestic. May 3.)—A Fred Mace comedy that is rather better than average. Mr. Mace does some excellent slap- stick work.

"Lost; A Union Suit." (Thanhouser. May 10.)—The plot in this comedy is a physical im- possible; what will become of the hero? The plot of his handsome. A thread of a girl's shoulder, when pulled, unwinds the yarn of her union suit.

"The Broken Bottle." (Reliance. May 6.)—Telling how a boy saved two crooks who were desirous of getting her father's wealth. The story has strong dramatic possibilities.

"The Return of Cal Clason." (Reliance. Two reels. April 25.)—Irene Hunt, Arthur Fancy, and Ben Lyon in "The Sheriff" take the leading roles. The story is distinctly a drama, possessing some originality, although the plot is in the main conventional. An outlaw, pursued, falls in love with a girl. The sheriffs capture the girl, and he, in answer, comes to the hut where she lives. A fight between the two men follows and the criminal escapes. He is later caught on the desert, but saves the sheriff, who in turn gives him his freedom.

WARNER'S FEATURES

"False Evidence." (Gene Gauntier. Three reels.)—A drama interesting to the extreme, but containing a large amount of unnecessary scenes. Ainsley, in love with his employer's daughter, Florence Cobb, is accused of robbing the man. Ainsley and Florence are rivals. Through Florence's efforts Ainsley is freed and Hunt justly imprisoned.

"Love Is Watching." (Milano. Three reels.)—A drama in two reels and two pictures. The present sub-titles lend a ludicrous effect. Too much time is consumed in reference to the main plot. Some of the scenes are widely different in latitude. Curt Burt is on the point of rain and his Alaskan mine is declared worthless. Hesperia, his wife, goes to Alaska and finds the mine which is discovered to be of great value. A happy reunion follows.

EXCLUSIVE SUPPLY CORP'

"The Red Club." (Film Releases of America. Four reels.)—A melodramatic story whose plot is similar to that of "Flying Aces," yet is the basis of many new ideas for revenge. The director and scenario writer must be given credit for an original plot. A newspaper woman, who would kill an army, the "macaroni pistol" and his right arm automatically escape. The will of few of the devisors "The Red Club" are put their enemies out of the way. Aside from these, the story is of little interest.

"The Tiger Countess." (Film Releases of America. Three reels.)—Countess Mary loves John, the staid man. She loves the rich heir, who swears vengeance. Her opportunity ar- rives when a man is shot by accident. She blames John, who is thrown into prison. Mary is badly scratched by a cat and confesses, and John is freed.

"The Opium Smugglers." (Gaumont. Three reels.)—The blowing up of a large tug boat with two barrels of contraband and the cannibalism of a stone building are the features of this melodrama. The story con- tains many thrills, and is Americanized, as far as names are concerned. A detective is assigned to arrest a number of smugglers. Disguised as a Chimian, he becomes one of the gang. He is discovered and follows the men to their cave after a clever escape. Thrown into a number of cities, he is finally found, and the scene of the building ending the film.

"A Little Widow Is a Dangerous Thing." (Hepworth. Split reel. April 29.)—A girl, unable to get a lover, dons a widow's weeds and gets many.

"Pass It On." (Hepworth. Split reel. April 29.)—Holding a baby for a stranger proves dangerous, as often before. The poor kid is passed from one stranger to another, finally arriving at the starting place. Good comedy, considering the age of the plot.

"The Staircase of Death." (Gaumont. Three parts. April 29.)—The French love for the unusual in crime is brought strongly into this picture. A stairway, the scene of a murder, revolves when a cord is pulled. An ad- venturer takes a rich man this way, and the detective, who is put on the case, is also caught. Finally the man and his accomplices are arrested in another country, and sentenced to the guillotine. Of course, a girl plays a large part.

ELEPHANT TACKLES "UNIVERSAL IRE"

August 16.—Al Elkin, Universal's elephant, has arrived in Hollywood, and took a whip over and grabbed Carney with his trunk and deposited him in a muddy hole away. Since then the portrayal of Universal's roles has kept his distance from Charlie.
"THE HILLS OF SILENCE"
(161 Bison)
REVIEWED BY F. E. MILNE

As the title implies, this is a drama, and a drama of the finest sort, featuring Cleo Madison. It differs from most Western features in which redskins and the old pioneers play important parts in that it is altogether possible and probable. The scenes are exceptionally well laid and so arranged as to keep one's interest always keyed up to the highest point. A scene seldom shown in dramas is vividly portrayed in this, that of the rush of the homesteaders when a gold streak is reported.

The mad fight for first places is extremely interesting to witness and such episodes were not uncommon in the days when the wild West was being developed. The roughness and the brawls that occurred in towns where no law of man applied years ago is another feature of the picture that will surely impress all who see it.

The characters all ably assist Miss Madison; they act like the old-timers and none of their actions leads one to detect modernism in them.

The photography leaves nothing to be desired, the distant scenes are very clear, and the close-ups are equally as good. There is an excellent fire scene in which a log cabin is totally demolished before the camera.

The story is as follows: The Reeds, penniless, decide to go farther West. They are joined by another family, the Blakes, they fall in with a large immigrant train. The train is attacked by Indians; Mrs. Reed is killed and Reed and his two children, Mary and a little son, escape. Jack Blake, Mary's little sweetheart, is supposedly killed.

After many hard experiences in the wild West, Mary and Jack are happily reunited at the end of some twelve years of separation. Reed becomes rich through the discovery of gold on his land and the story ends peacefully.

"THE GREAT PYTHON ROBBERY"
(I. S. P. Co.)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

The thing that impresses the audience in seeing this picture is the continuity of action throughout. There is not a moment that something of importance connected with the plot is not happening. One thrill after another makes the whole a picture of much worth. The story is melodramatic, but not of the variety that thrills but fails to impress, nor of the kind that contains nothing else but excitement, without any plot or reason.

The action takes place in Paris, London and the English Channel. Flashes of street scenes in both capitals are shown, proving where they were actually taken. Views through the open porthole of one of the channel steamers en route from Dover to Calais, with the profile of one of the characters appearing hazily against a background of water, are unique and effective.

The title is derived from a python snake, used by the robbers when engaged in their precarious trade. This snake is made to climb through windows or doorways, and so scare the woman occupants that they faint and thus give the thieves a chance to enter. By means of a mirror on a long pole they watch the women from the apartment above.

The most thrilling piece of work in the picture is the landing on a train, while in motion, from a balloon. This sensation was featured in many of the local Sunday papers. The detective, having to catch the steamer train, hires a dirigible balloon, and by means of a long rope extended from the side of the basket, leaps on the top of the moving train and thus enters the compartment.

There is some excellent detective work of the usual character. There is the boy hero in the form of the newsboy whom the great detective has helped, but aside from these there is an entire absence of all conventionality.

"THE ZINGARA"
(A. E. Film Co.)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

Although this is the same picture that received an unfavorable review in this paper some time ago one would never recognize it in its present form. The story has been changed, the subtitles altered and everything rearranged, and the result is a practically new picture which is far above the average.

The greatest change has been made in the tinting. This was done by the Harvard Film Company, to whom great credit must be given. Blue, green and a light "night" color are used with much effectiveness. There are also several shades of yellow, which add to the sunlight effects. In its present form, the picture makes a most desirable release.

The story in the main has not been altered. Several scenes have been eliminated, others have been placed in other positions, but aside from this the plot is the same.

The picture was made in Florida and contains much good photography. Christine Mayo plays the part of the gypsy queen with much grace. George Cowl plays her lover. They are supported by Fred Radcliffe, George Lanning, Caryl Fleming, Myrtle Van Zandt, Marjorie Nelson, John Arthur, Mae Prestell, Laura Sanborne and James Kilgannon.

The film might be said to be in three acts, a reel representing each of these. The time of the first is 1900, the place Italy. A year elapsed and the place changes to England, the third scene being a month later in the same place.

The World's Greatest Motion Picture Orchestra

The Wurlitzer Unit Orchestra

For days the Vitagraph Company of America pondered and discussed pro and con the proposition of music for their colossal new venture—the Vitagraph Theatre; such music as would not only fulfill their requirements, but fit in with their big and lavish ideas of decoration and policy. They had money to engage the largest and finest orchestra in America—expense was not a consideration, their sole idea being to get the best music, and the music that they unanimously decided upon to be the best was produced by the magnificent Wurlitzer Unit Orchestra, which is admitted to be an equal attraction with their splendid pictures.

Wm. A. Brady writes: “I feel certain that your new instrument will shortly be used in all theatres in place of the usual orchestra.”

Such a prophecy is rapidly becoming a reality; other Wurlitzer Orchestras having already been installed in Proctor's and Cort's, New York; the wonderful Baptist Temple in Philadelphia; Cort's in Chicago; the Paris in Denver, Colo.; the Imperial in Montreal; the million-dollar Elks' Temple in New York, and many others.

Wurlitzer Motion Picture Automatic Musical Instruments sell for as low as $900, and every one is a positive boomer of business.

"Garden" Opens in Des Moines
New Iowa Theatre Will Be Home of High-Class Films, Says A. H.
Blank, Manager—Ten-Cent Admission Fixed

Special to The Motion Picture News
Des Moines, Ia., May 5.

The Garden Theatre, occupying the newly remodelled Odd Fellows Building on Locust street, opened Saturday afternoon, May 2, under the management of A. H. Blank, with "Goodness Gracious" heading the bill. The admission price has been fixed at ten cents and a continuous show will be given at the Garden from eleven in the morning to eleven at night.

Nothing but high-class, censored films will be shown. The bill will be changed four times a week. Some of the films to be included during the first few weeks will be plays that are well known to theatre-goers and the principals will be the original stars in these same productions. Mr. Blank has contracted for some of the best Frohman and Belasco productions that will be shown in movies.

A feature of the theatre is the new $10,000 tubular pneumatic action pipe organ that has been installed by the William Schuelke Organ Company, of Milwaukee, Wis.

The new organ cost $10,000. The instrument is especially voiced to the acoustic properties of the Garden Theatre. The distance from the keyboard to the organ is 35 feet and 4,000 feet of tubing was used.

The pictures shown at the Garden Theatre will be thrown on an Atsco gold radium screen. This screen is so designed as to eliminate all flicker.

The Garden Theatre will seat 750 people. The chairs are upholstered in leather and of the most sanitary type. There are no radiators located near the seats, heat being provided to each chair individually by the Acme heating and ventilating system.

The Garden orchestra will open every performance with an overture and will alternate during the performances with the pipe organ. The personnel of the Garden orchestra, which includes some of the prominent musicians of the city, is as follows: Frank Lorenz, violin; George A. Johnson, flute; A. F. Hayes, oboe; C. C. Burjo, cello; Lou Johnson, cornet; Mrs. Katherine Baxter, piano; Earl Krell, tympani and effects, and Arthur Hays, director and organist.

FIRST DANIA BIOFILM HERE
The new Dania Biofilm Company are presenting "The Hostage" as their first release. The company has been organized to produce dramatic pictures, relying solely on the story rather than on thrills. The works of Henrik Ibsen, Hans Christian Andersen, and others of equal note, will be produced. Bodil Ibsen, Adam Poulson, Bjorn Bjornson and Martinus Nielson have been engaged to play the leading parts.

"THE CURSE OF GREED"
(General Film Masterpiece)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHEL

This picture is five reels in length and is released under the trademark of the Melies Company. The story is essentially melodramatic, and for the first two reels is inclined to be conventional. But the last three parts are excellent, and the plot is developed in a novel manner.

Unlike many films the story is of minor importance, acting more as a means to introduce large scenes and photographic effects. One is inclined when watching the screen to forget the fine points of the story, intent only on the deep settings and the engrossing action.

The picture was made in France. The town of St. Malo is shown by the camera, as are also the Eiffel Tower and other Parisian sights, merely as background and not as a feature.

Undoubtedly the most wonderful scene is the storm at sea. Real lightning plays over the waves as they roll mountain high. It is one of the best of its kind and will create a sensation for its beauty. Many night scenes are introduced, some of them most artistic. In several scenes in the first reel the lighting effects are poor but these are remedied later.

The interiors are exceedingly deep and luxuriously fitted. The court-room set is especially fine, in fact, it is probably the best interior in the picture.

The Marquis De Luscky having dissipated his entire fortune, desires to marry the widowed Countess Webb, a money-lender, and he enter into an agreement whereby he shall receive the money at the death of the widow and her young son. The boy is shanghaied to sea, but escapes being killed. They attempt to poison the Countess but fail, and De Luscky drinks the liquid himself. He dies and the Countess is blamed. The return of the son clears her name.

There are a number of very dramatic scenes.

GENERAL FEATURE FILM IN NEW QUARTERS

The General Feature Film Company, of Chicago, are getting settled in their spacious new offices in the Mallers Building. This concern since its organization, something less than a year ago, has had a speedy growth. This is the third time they have been compelled to seek larger quarters. Their new offices will be equipped with the most modern things known to the motion picture exchange business. Their offices are ideally located and permit of an up-to-date layout. Besides a fireproof inspecting-room, which is outfitted entirely in steel, and a poster-room which is second to none, roomy private offices are supplied for both Mr. Spencer and Mr. Hirschberg.

When settled the General Feature Film Company will have one of the swellest feature offices in the city.

A Message from

P. A. POWERS

Good News! Great News! Wonderful News!

We have it—another spectacular six-part Warner's Feature to release shortly—and I think so well of it that I want to personally recommend it to you.

Beyond the shadow of a doubt, it is the most magnificent film production I have ever seen, and that's stating it broadly. But mere words will never be able to describe its impressive battle scenes, its perfect photography, its superior presentation by a cast of World renowned stars; it must be seen by you to be rightfully appreciated.

We are going to release it in two parts of three reels each, but it can be shown in its entirety in one day.

Need I tell you that our lobby display for this supreme Warner's Feature is going to be a revelation?

Let me urge upon you the necessity of becoming a service customer now; only by doing so can you hope to reap the benefit of these extra good features that we are continually buying.

Next week our advertisement will give you complete information about this record breaking, six-reel attraction.

Watch for it.

Sincerely yours,

(Signed) P. A. POWERS,

"THE DIVINE LAW"

(Highgrade Feature Film Co.)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON, MICHELL

The first of the new pictures to be released by the Highgrade Company since inaugurating their new policy. The four-part picture was purchased from a Hollywood company and is an excellent one in many ways. The Germans, unlike their neighbors, the French, possess a style of acting so very similar to the American and English, as to make it difficult to differentiate.

The plot of the story is very slight, so slight, in fact, that it might well be told in a very few feet of film, minus the padding and incidentals that accompany it. This must not be taken, however, to mean that the picture is not interesting, for it is engrossing and possesses that quality in its makeup which will sustain the attention.

Elsie, the governess of a wealthy family, is ruined by Wilfred, the son, who later deserts her. His theft of his mother's jewels is blamed on Elsie and she is discharged. In a fit of despondency she shoots herself, ruining her eyesight. A lamp exploding blinds Wilfred. Elsie recovers her sight and forgives her traitor lover, and marries the butler.

Ida Neilsen, sister of the celebrated Asta Neilsen, portrays the leading part. She possesses more grace and beauty than her better-known sister, and, though lacking the emotional skill, makes up for it with her grace and elegance.

"THE WHITE GHOST"

(Milano)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A COMBINATION ghost and detective story in a prologue and two reels released through Warner's Features. If one considers the piece from a standpoint of possibility, there is not one possible point in the drama. But despite, or perhaps because, of this fact, the piece holds one's attention throughout from the beautiful scenes on Lake St. Moritz to the detective who carries bombs and pistols in the soles of his shoes.

Taken in the heart of the Swiss Alps the scenes, of which there are many, are clear and beautifully shown. The wonderful tints and coloring, so common among all films of foreign make, are even better than the average in this production. The action is quick and there is "something doing" all the time and perhaps it does one good to see a wholly impossible picture just as it does one good to read a fairy story once in a while. The plot is the adventures of a detective who runs down a blackmailing ghost. His adventures and hairbreadth escapes are marvelous, to say the least.

RIGHT OF THE REEL

The Colorado Motion Picture Company has executed a contract with the Pan-American Film Manufacturing Company whereby they will release this week a four reel feature for the American and foreign field. These occasional releases will not in any way interfere with their contract with Warners' Features.

C. O. Thompson, manager of the Victor Film Company, of Cleveland, O., returned from Buffalo, where he went to attend a special showing of the Universal's production of "Soomon." Mr. Thompson is very enthusiastic over this picture and is arranging for the presentation of it in California.

Milton H. Fahreyn has just completed a series of Western features for the Frontier Company, which were shown to a private audience recently. Mr. Fahreyn brings his long legitimate stage experience to his aid in photo plays and he was one of the very earliest actors to make that field.

Wilfred Lucas has a star company under his direction now, with Cee Madson, George Larin, Francis Dugan. Cee Madson still suffers from his injured shoulder, but refuses to rest up.

Edna Maison is featured in a comedy-drama called "The Transformation of Prudence," and in Miss Maison takes the part of a Quaker girl who enters society and effects a cure on her erratic husband. The picture is directed by George Stanley. Roy Gallagher is acting opposite Miss Maison.

Percy Standing has just completed a four-reel feature for the English market, entitled "The Red Flame of Passion," the New York rights of which are being handled by the De Luxe Feature Film Company.

Carlyle Blackburn recently entertained hundreds of guests at his beautiful home in Los Angeles, and it was a notable affair, being attended by all the stars from the studios, the stage and the variety platforms.

Francis Ford is still hard at work on the "Monsieur Laveau" series and is getting some startling results. Both Ford and Grace Cunard are doing fine work historically.

A. H. Sawyer, Inc., whose office has just been opened on the eighth floor at 1600 Broadway, New York City, have produced a picture reaching the latest ballroom dances, entitled "Raiden Slugo and Grace Cunard as the teachers."

"The Transformation of Prudence" is the title of a comedy-drama which George Stanley's Powers brand company has just started. Mr. Stanley is the Universal Company's latest acquisition.
THE FOTOPLAYER—a pleasing harmony of piano, reed organ and pipes for every orchestral effect.

THE FOTOPLAYER—"the all but human orchestra"—the only instrument that renders appropriate music for every detail of the picture.

Uses ordinary player music and is always under the perfect control of the player.

Changes instantly from one selection of music to another.

Drums, cymbals, bells, crash, wind, siren, thunder, locomotive bell, steamboat whistle, horses' hoofs, chimes, orchestra bells, etc.

Film Quality
Quality in the film—quality from a technical photographic standpoint is as important to the Exhibitor as is interest in the story that the film tells.

There's one film that's recognized the world over as the standard of quality—that is always used by those whose effort it is to give the Exhibitors the very best goods and the very best service—Eastman film.

And it is identifiable. Look for "Eastman" on the perforated margin.

EASTMAN KODAK COMPANY, ROCHESTER, N.Y.

Success for Your Show is assured if your films are perfectly projected—and perfect projection is assured if your lens equipment is selected from.

Bausch and Lomb Projection Lenses
There's nothing lost to your audience, out to the very edges of the picture, when the artistically acted film is told upon the screen by Bausch & Lomb objectives and condensers. Their flatness of field and brilliancy of image make them the perfect lens equipment for every purpose—from the shortest to the longest throw.

Our interesting free booklet is well worth writing for. It is of real value to owners and operators.

HEARD IN THE LOBBIES

R. V. Hitch, well known to Omaha moving picture people as the manager of the famous Lyric theatre in Minneapolis, has established a similar place in the Fourth Street, South Omaha, on May 2.

Frank L. Barnes will open a new airdown at 243 Wright street, South Omaha, on May 2.

M. Burman, district manager of Warner’s Famous Features circuit of the West, has taken over the North Omaha theatre, 1320 Douglas street, Omaha, and will conduct it hereafter. The PALM controls Warner’s service in Omaha, South Omaha and Council Bluffs.

The Westonian Airdown in Louisville, Ky., will be managed this summer by Johnston Musselman.”

The Palace, manager, is conducting the Arcadia, a popular high-class dance-hall, owned by Louis Tatum of the Majestic, who also owns the Westonian.

G. W. Steele, of Louisville, Ky., has opened the Jefferson theatre, of Jeffersonville, Ind., across the river from Louisville. The house was formerly known as the Majestic, but has been closed for some time.

Henry P. Vogel has become the owner and manager of the Novelty theatre at Henderson, Ky., purchasing it from J. E. Hinton and Roy Motron. Mr. Vogel has improved the theatre considerably, lowering the floor, increasing the capacity and installing new seating and machine.

Tom Corby, manager of the Star and Lyceum theatres in Cincinnati, O., has been named the manager of the Gayety theatre, which will be devoted to motion pictures during the summer months. The Gayety is Cincinnati’s newest theatre just having opened in the fall. It was devoted to burlesque.

Nicholas Lehrberg, of Ebensburg, Pa., has started work on the erection of his new picture theatre. The work is going forward rapidly and when completed will be one of the most up-to-date theatres in that part of the State. John L. Pafl has opened a picture theatre in Beaver Falls, Pa. The new theatre seats 1,000.

Charles F. Miller was given the glad hand in Film Row, Pittsburgh, Pa., when he appeared there after an absence of six weeks with scarlet fever. Charley is the distributor of films for the Pittsburgh Photoplay Company and he has a host of friends among the exhibitors.

Samuel Gensburg has leased the theatre in Beechview avenue, Pittsburgh, built by E. H. Johnson. It is a one-story affair, 30x85 feet, and cost $8,000.

Richard’s features are the latest in Pittsburgh. George A. Jones, a former South Side exhibitor, is manager of the new company and its office is in the Cameperes building in Fifth avenue.

T. P. Miller is now holding down the job of manager of the Independent Display Company and seems to be contented. He succeeds Paul Qultrough, who is now manager of the Fox department of the General Film Company in New York.

The Lyric Theatre Company, of Lawrenceburg, Ky., has opened a new house at that place. It has been operating with considerable success. One of the features is a large Wurzler automatic piano.

W. V. Shaw and O. W. Ingels, owners of a house at Paris, Ky., have purchased a new projecting outfit which they are preparing to install.

J. Ray Hobson, of Campbellsville, Ky., has opened his new house, the “Arena.” An electrical piano has been installed.

Two new theatres were opened at Hickman, in the western part of Kentucky. George W. Bouck has leased a part of a building in course of erection, and J. T. Dillen will start on the work of remodeling a building shortly.

The Broadway theatre, Louisville, Ky., is in process of remodeling. An addition is being built, but this will not interfere with the present theatre. In a few weeks it will probably have to close down for awhile in order to join the two buildings.

Charles A. Dussey of Lynn, Mass., has recently purchased the Lyric theatre, the largest and newest theatre in Fitchburg, which will go to make up the circuit of seven theatres that he is now operating as head of a Boston syndicate with offices in the Colonial Theatre, Boston.

The Rex theatre, Broadway, Denver, Colo., is now running features exclusively. Manager McInnes is doing the same thing.

The New Plaza, a house seating from 600 to 650, was opened in Lansing, Mich., April 18, with W. J. Hall as manager.

"THE WORLD’S FOREMOST PHOTO-PLAYER"

Seven prominent players, selected from representative film manufacturers by officials of the McClure Publications, were nominated as candidates for the role of John Delancy Curtis, in Louis Tracy’s novel "ONE WONDERFUL NIGHT" the winner to portray this character on the screen in the photo-play of that title. The story which has run serially in the Ladies’ World Magazine, has gained world-wide interest. The campaigns conducted by the seven manufacturers has brought about a world of advertising which all concentrates in

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN

You are the one, Mr. Exhibitor, who will profit by this expenditure of money and publicity. The modern studios owned by the

in which this story will be produced, and the excellent corps of skilled producers and photo-players, who will inject their knowledge of filmdom into this production, assures you of an attraction guaranteed to be photographically and dramatically perfect.

Mr. Bushman wishes to express his sincerest thanks and appreciation to those who made his election possible.

The Greatest of

A BORN WARRIOR

Warner's Features, Inc., begs to announce the purchase of a magnificent six-reel production (based upon the most stirring period in French History) and its early release to its SERVICE customers. We have divided this spectacular film into two parts of three reels each so that it can be exhibited in sections, as a serial story or shown in its entirety under the title of "A BORN WARRIOR." We want every exhibitor to have the opportunity to run this feature film that the critics have pronounced a "masterpiece" and therefore we give the tip to all non-users of Warner's Features to enroll under our banner immediately. More than twenty-five branch offices of Warner's Features, Inc., will be ready shortly to deliver this record-breaking attraction into your hands for one, two or more days' showing. Wire today if you want it first in your neighborhood.

As usual, this week’s release of Our Mutual Girl is full of the interesting intimacies of the moment.

She meets Katherine B. Davis—famous Commissioner of Correction of New York—the woman directly in charge of the City Prison on Blackwell’s Island.

You go with Our Mutual Girl and Miss Davis to help the burglar’s sister out of prison, see with her things of vital interest that it would be next to impossible for you to see yourself.

This reel like those it follows is full of intensely dramatic, but very real things.

Somehow when you see Our Mutual Girl it is like being yourself a part of the life she lives.

It is this quality of intimate reality that has given to Our Mutual Girl series something no other moving picture ever had, something that gets hold of people the first time they see the picture and strengthens its hold with every successive release.

When you spend your money advertising Our Mutual Girl picture you are not spending it for a single release.

Every effort you make on one reel helps to build a permanent clientele for your theatre.

Our Mutual Girl series is only one part of the Mutual service which helps to make a moving picture “fan” out of the most random patron.

This series is included in the Regular Service for which there is no extra charge.

It is just one indication of the fact that the Mutual Film Corporation considers the exhibitor’s interest as its interest.

That its every effort is not only toward bringing money to the box office once, but sending customers away from the theatre feeling that they want to come again.

Read what the critics say:

"I have seen pretty near all the feature movies that have been showing around town but this in its particular line has no peer. The scene of the fight is particularly thrilling and exciting. It works you up to the highest pitch."—Victor Watson, N. Y. American.

"Aside from the beautiful examples of photography the production is highly artistic throughout. The acting is restrained, dignified, vivid and vigorous, and there is an absence of exaggeration of action such as has never before graced a moving picture production. It is truly a remarkable production, and one that all lovers of the silent art should not fail to see. It is such plays as 'THE HOUSE OF TEMPERLEY,' which will have a tendency to destroy any conclusion that the moving picture is simply a fad."—James Henry Smith, New York Globe.

"If there are any flaws in the construction of this play, I for one have been unable to discover them. It is camera perfect. The photography is superb throughout, disposing forever of the foolish belief that no good photography can come from England. The settings both interior and exterior could not possibly be improved upon. In the selection of the outdoor scenes every choice was an inspiration."—W. Stephen Bush, Moving Picture World.

PHOTOPLAY PRODUCTIONS COMPANY
Candler Building, 220 West 42nd Street
New York, May 12th, 1914.
Mr. William A. Johnston, Publisher,
The Motion Picture News,
220 West 42nd Street, New York City.
Dear Sir:
The returns from the advertising of "The Littlest Rebel" in The Motion Picture News have been so very gratifying that we feel it is only fair to tell you of them.
Up to the present writing 259 requests have been received, and of this number 161 have been traced to The Motion Picture News.
Although "The Littlest Rebel" has not yet been shown or reviewed, $11,000 worth of territorial rights have already been sold, a record which we believe to be unparalleled in the history of the so-called feature film.
Yours very truly,
(Signed) Chester Beecroft,
Advertising Manager.

AND here's the lesson:
The remarkable success of "The Littlest Rebel" is due very largely to the manner in which it was announced to the trade.
Its advertising was quality advertising.
Hence an impression was created of a quality picture.
Very simple and yet—in effect—very wonderful.
Here is a photoplay only just finished and not as yet seen or reviewed. Yet in the minds of the exhibitors of this country and in the estimation of the trade generally "The Littlest Rebel" ranks with the leading film masterpieces.

OF course it is known that Edward Peple's stage production of "The Littlest Rebel" was a popular hit and widely known; that the film production was being made by a cast of well-known and successful motion picture actors and actresses; that neither pains nor expense were being spared to perfect this picture in every way.
The advertising and incidental publicity helped establish these facts.
But stronger still than what the advertising told—much stronger—was the way in which it told it.
Colors were largely and artistically used. At least one color insert in this series is without doubt the most attractive advertisement ever published in picture journals.

ALL of which brings us briefly to the advertising lesson involved: that the strongest force in advertising is the subtle force of suggestion.
In other words the way in which an advertisement is presented counts more than what it says.
This advertising, through its own fine quality, suggested fine quality in the product it advertised.
Its effect on the reader was subconscious.
And in the subconscious appeal lies the true genius of advertising.
Which simply illustrates the old adage that it's easier to lead a man than to push him.

SUGGESTION does more than much heated argument, wild, extravagant claims and screaming type.
The reader is inclined to combat argument and to be suspicious of boastful statements. But suggestion reaches him unawares and convinces him without his own realization that he is convinced.
Dignified, honest, pointed facts are necessary to the text matter; but neat, artistic, unusual typography, lots of white space and attractive borders and art effects—these are the suggestive forces of advertising that hit home.
Often they cost money; but generally they are matters of thought, study and knowledge.
The high-grade advertising man is the most essential factor in this field to-day—both in the exhibiting and manufacturing ends of the business.

Producers Attack Federal Censorship

T HE Mutual Film Corporation and the Universal Film Manufacturing Company have formally declared war on the bills now in Congress to establish a Federal Film Censorship Board. Walter N. Seligsohn, of 55 Liberty street, New York, attorney for the Mutual, and Jacob Schechter, representing the Universal, recently appeared in Washington before the House Committee on Education and argued at length against the bill the committee has under consideration.

The attorneys return for a second hearing before the committee on Saturday, May 16.

Rumors are that the committee intends to present a favorable report on the bill to the House, in spite of all the protests manufacturers have made against it.

Canon William Sheafe Chase, of Brooklyn, N. Y., on May 12 delivered a serious blow against the present National Board of Censorship, which has the support of most of the exhibitors of the country, by declaring to the committee that the board is merely a tool of the manufacturers.

Dr. Chase, by the way, wrote the present bill for the House, which establishes a strict censorship and charges a dollar a film for Federal inspection.

Dallas Exhibitors May Treat with Operators

Strikebreakers Do Damage and Theatre Owners Face Prosecutions on Complaints to City Electrician—Arbitration Now Likely ARBITRATION between the striking operators, who have been out for almost two weeks, and the exhibitors is imminent. The boys who have been imported as strike-breakers have caused much dissatisfaction, and the exhibitors are disgusted. They have been forced to buy damaged reels, repair machines and withstand prosecution.

L. Griffon, a non-union operator employed by the Candy Theatre, was fined $5 in the Corporation Court for violating the electrical code. A fire started in the Candy while Griffon was operating a machine. A panic was narrowly averted. The fire started when a film broke and came in contact with the rector. Griffon paid the fine.

Eight complaints against managers of theatres have been filed by the city electrician.

These affidavits aver and allege that the booths are not of fireproof construction and that the ventilation is defective. The shows named in the complaints are: Hippodrome, Best, Palace, Princess, Bioscope, Dixic, and two suburban theatres. The cases will be heard in the City Court.

The strike was called when the exhibitors refused to treat with the operators, who demanded shorter working hours and contracts. More than twenty men are without jobs as a result of the conflict.
PUBLIC CLAMOR BALKS BOSSES’ WELL- LAID PLAN TO PERPETUATE OHIO CENSORS

By William Lord Wright

Democratic Attorney-General Decides It Can’t Be Done by Way of the Civil Service (at Present) but it May Be Safe to Try It Later—How M. A. Neff Had His Way and His Say on the Board—

The Humbling of State Boss Finley

Have the Democratic bosses of Ohio seen the handwriting on the wall?

Are they beginning to have a suspicion that perhaps they are not monarchs of all they survey?

So it would seem, for Attorney-General “Tim” Hogan has handed down an ex cathedra opinion to the effect that the Ohio Board of Film Censors cannot be classified under the civil service.

This decision comes as a surprise and a shock to good Ohioans who have been used to seeing the “tried and true Democracy” have what it wanted when it wanted it, as far as matters of state government are concerned.

So out of keeping with ordinary Democratic procedure is this decision of the Honorable Tim, that disrespectful persons have whispered that the fight already waged against the Censor Board has made the administration fearful of going too far. They thought the “dogs” were asleep until they woke up and began to growl, and now the politicians, it is said, prefer to wait until they have begun to doze again before the machine tries any more of its railroad tactics.

State Boss Finley at Last Humbled

The exhibitors of Ohio are breathing easier on this point for the moment, but the “gang” is ready to make another attempt to “civil-service” the censors at the earliest opportunity. The following “dispatch” appeared Monday exclusively in the Dayton “Daily News,” the newspaper owned by Governor Cox:

CENSOR LAW CRITICISM EXISTS IN IMAGINATION

Columbus, O., May 11.—“All this criticism of the Ohio censor law and action of the censor board is pure bunkum,” said M. A. Neff, of Cincinnati, president of the Motion Exhibitors’ League of America, when he called on Governor Cox to-day. He said motion picture exhibitors and film-makers favor the law and criticism comes from persons in Cleveland disgruntled because they did not secure appointments on the censor board.

It is said that Neff had been called in by the Governor and his advisers, who are alarmed over the storm of protest caused by the revelations printed in the Motion Picture News, and the decisive opposition instituted by most of the Ohio exhibitors of motion pictures.

The statement of Mr. Neff is characteristic and was made for circulation in Ohio Democratic newspapers.

It will be noticed that he does not deny that Finley, Durbin, Cox and himself dictated the appointments; that all would-be censors took a pledge that they would devote their entire time and attention to censoring and that—

Mrs. Maude Murray Miller writes for the “Columbus Dispatch,” does “welfare” work, and censors motion pictures, and—

Mr. Harry Vestal conducts a newspaper, a theatre, and censors motion pictures.

They do say that the Governor and his advisers are somewhat disgruntled with Mr. Neff, but we will have more to say on this subject later.

A Columbus conference was held during which Neff was requested to “do something” to offset the criticism.

Another source of consolation for the harassed exhibitors of Ohio, however, is the humiliation of the machine in the fine imposed upon Democratic Grand Mogul William L. Finley for his self-confessed violation of the civil service laws. A pro-Cox newspaper—the Cincinnati “Enquirer”—thus reports the humiliating of the mighty chieftain:

“Columbus, Ohio, May 5—Acting under the advice of his counsel and through agreement with Prosecuting Attorney Edward C. Turner, William L. Finley, chairman of the Democratic State Executive Committee, to-day entered a plea of guilty to a technical violation of the state civil service law and was fined $50 and costs. Other persons indicted with him for the offense were dismissed.

“This result flows from the interpretation of the new law by Judge E. B. Dillon, who held that a press bureau is a political party agency. The grand jury refused to act upon the testimony until it received this interpretation. Attorney-General Timothy S. Hogan taking opposite ground.

“The contention of the defense was that a press bureau is the agency of a state administration and not of a political party. While this may seem a fine distinction, it is to be remembered that the claim is made that 100,000 Democrats in Ohio are opposed to the state administration as now conducted.

POLITICS AS PLAYED BY A CENSOR

Harry Vestal, of Ada, second city of Hardin County, Ohio, political preserve of Boss Bill Durbin, purchased the Ada “Record” after a few months’ service as Ohio Censor of Motion Pictures. At the head of his editorial column he printed that “no one else on earth had any interest in the paper aside from himself and the members of his immediate family.”

He is a SELF-PROFESSED REPUBLICAN, but politicians state that the “Record” is to oppose the “Herald” which is also published in Ada, Ohio. The “Herald” is a strong supporter of Frank B. Willis, of Ada, leading Republican candidate for Governor.

Durbin is bitterly opposed to Willis, who has a strong following in Hardin County, and he never will forget nor forgive Willis for defeating him (Durbin) for Congress.

Mr. Vestal was very active in the support of Mr. Hazlitt, the Bill Durbin candidate for Postmaster of Ada. He WORKED HARD FOR THE DEMOCRATIC MACHINE CANDIDATE according to Ada people.
"Finley and the others concerned were indicted for "being concerned" in receiving money from persons in the classified service for partisan purposes. A light penalty, eh? Perhaps this occurrence has nothing to do with exhibitors or film censorship. Stop a moment.

Reflect that William L. Finley is "master of ceremonies" in Ohio and supreme ruler of the state, and then read this edition from one of Ohio's state newspapers that has the independence to oppose the machine:

TRAVESTIES ON JUSTICE

"There is no doubt that cases similar to that of William Finley, who pleaded guilty to corrupt practices and was fined $90 and costs, serve to encourage men to violate the law.

"In the eyes of every man, the law is supreme and ordinarily every man attempts to observe the law; tries to live up to the letter of it, because he realizes that the law is just as good as he makes it. But when men like William Finley face the bar of justice and admit guilt, plead ignorance—then do other men learn to look lightly upon the law. And when men shall all look lightly upon it a state and possibly a nation will be disgraced and become as outlaws.

"William Finley told a Franklin county judge that he had received money from Democratic officeholders to be used in promoting the interests of the party. He did not go into details. He did not recite the fact that practically every man who holds a public job under the administration of James M. Cox has been assessed. It is not a new custom, but under the present law it is an illegal one, and the men who practise it, stands liable to sentence.

"William Finley and those indicted with him for collecting campaign funds—they call it collecting but it is simply telling a man in public office he has to pay tribute or lose his job—went before a judge and pleaded guilty to what is nothing more than pure and simple blackmail. Then he paid a fine of $90 and costs. That was almost as much as any one of the men assessed paid into the campaign fund which Finley has planned, controlled and will still go on controlling. Even an oil inspector at a salary of $25 a week is forced to pay $50 a year—that much at least—to help maintain the 'press bureau.' There is said not to be a Department of Administration of Gov. James M. Cox to-day but upon whose salary tribute is levied by Mr. Finley. The moment that tribute is not forthcoming there may be a new man in the job.

"Recently enacted Ohio laws sought to correct this. They were so framed as to make the ordinary man fearful of prison bars and it was believed generally that no man would dare violate them.

"William Finley has told a Franklin county judge that he dared to violate them. And the judge never mentioned such a thing as penal servitude. He made the fine about what it would have been if William Finley had pleaded guilty to taking one man's umbrella instead of many men's money. The judge assessed a fine about in keeping with a petit larceny case.

"It is such travesties upon justice that cause men to look lightly upon the law. And when many men grow to look lightly upon the law it is a dangerous thing for any state or any nation. It is also another case of 'the man higher up' being told to go sin no more, while the man lower down is sentenced to penal servitude in the state penitentiary."

He Laughs Best Who Laughs Last

To show the attitude of the Cox-Neff-Finley coterie that is now running the affairs of Ohio, we shall reproduce a recent dispatch that appeared in all the newspapers friendly to the triumvirate.

The Cincinnati "Enquirer," which formerly employed Governor Jimmie Cox, and which is published in Neff's home city, printed this inspired Columbus "dispatch" which we reproduce, here and all:

MERRY HA ELICITED
From State Officials by Talk of Censor Law Referendum.
Special Dispatch to "The Enquirer"

"Columbus, Ohio, May 7.—Dispatches from Cleveland saying that the Cleveland Photoplay Exhibitors' Board of Trade have appealed to 1,000 exhibitors of moving pictures to help secure a referendum on the censor law created considerable amusement here.

"The act has been in effect for many months, having been enacted a year ago. It is now too late to secure a referendum, although initiative petitions for the repeal of the law might be got up. They could not be voted on until November, 1915.

"Referendum petitions must be filed within 90 days after a legislative enactment is filed with the Secretary of State."

The Ohio exhibitors of motion pictures have indeed received the "merry ha ha." They were first given it when the present board was saddled upon them and prices for films boosted, and they have been given the "merry ha ha" ever since by Messrs. Neff, Cox and Finley, responsible for the board, and who now derive great amusement from the efforts of the exhibitors of boss-ridden Ohio to free themselves of "The Little-Old-Man-of-the-Sea-like political burden.

"Considerable amusement" is created by the well-meaned efforts of the exhibitors to secure a fair deal.

It may be discovered after the next national convention of exhibitors that "who laughs last laughs best."

How Mr. Neff Had His Say on the Board

The mention of Mr. Neff's name reminds me that this is as appropriate a place as any to relate a few of the facts regarding the activities of Mr. Neff in keeping the writer off the Ohio Board of Censors.

It was in July when the writer approached Mr. Neff in New York City, at the request of substantial exhibitors and others and asked if there would be an opportunity to serve as secretary or member on the newly-created board for a time.

While the writer is Republican in politics, yet the statement of "no politics" was so insistent that some credence was placed in it by those not acquainted with Democratic manipulations in Ohio. Mr. Neff was rather non-committal during that interview. He excused himself early. I recalled to his mind that I had supported him editorially in the past and would be in a position to look after the exhibitors' interests fairly.

Late in July I again wrote to Mr. Neff stating that I had been urged to apply for membership on the Board of Censors and asking him for his support. Just a line or so in reply and the real subject evaded.

Early in August, after my endorsements had gone in I received a 'phone message from John R. Cassidy, clerk of the House of Representatives, who lives in Bellefontaine, Ohio, asking that I come to Columbus to call on the Governor at his request. I called on the Governor in company with Mr. Cassidy.

As we entered the outer office we were accosted by George Burba, who formerly was editor of the Springfield "Daily Sun," who then went to Dayton, became editor of Gov. Cox's newspaper, the Dayton "Daily News," and who was appointed by Cox as his private secretary when he was elected governor.

"Can't Serve? She'll Serve, All Right!"

"Mrs. Miller has been appointed a censor; fine!" asserted Mr. Burba.

"But she cannot serve," said Mr. Cassidy.

"Why can't she serve?" demanded Burba.

Do Exhibitors Want Censorship?
Producers and Exhibitors Should Be Their Own Censors, Says Kansas City Exhibitor—Local and State Censorship Actuated by Graft, Buffalo Exchange Man Declares—Significant Opinions from Milwaukee and Chattanooga Exhibitors

CONTINUING the exhibitors' symposium, begun in The Motion Picture News of May 16, on the question of censorship, another group of opinions from prominent exhibitors of the country is submitted as indicating "which way the wind blows."

One of the most significant is that of Joseph L. Stiebel, manager of the Apollo Theatre, Kansas City, Mo. The Motion Picture News does not agree with Mr. Stiebel that censorship of some kind is necessary, but the News earnestly commends to the attention of all producers of the country Mr. Stiebel's criticism, as expressed in his words:

"If more care were given to the producing end with the idea of elevating rather than lowering the motion picture drama, then there would be no talk of censorship."

The Motion Picture News wants the opinions of the exhibitors on this subject. It does not matter whether they agree with those of the News or not. They will be welcomed and published.

CENSORSHIP as we have it has been a joke," began Joseph L. Stiebel, as he waited in the local office of a film exchange in Kansas City for one of his daily releases. The question of censorship—national, state and local—had been mentioned, and he was asked to tell how it had worked out in his theatre, the Apollo, probably the best-known picture house in the residence district of Kansas City. Certainly, none in that city has made greater profits or plays to better audiences than does his.

"One thing must be understood," he went on. "There can be a proper censorship, fair to manufacturer, exhibitor, and patron, but that can only be through and by one who appreciates art—a man who can judge as to the merit of a picture and who knows whether or not a picture teaches or points a moral.

"Then censorship will be fair—but is fair censorship possible when local, state and national conditions are governed by factional political games? The censor must be above politics."

"But there must be a censorship of some kind over the 'movies.' The average picture exhibitor of to-day knows that and recognizes that.

"He knows that his average audience doesn't want to see harrowing death-bed scenes, long-drawn-out murders, and what I call the 'traffic in souls.' But the producer continues to send out that class of picture and something must be done.

"I have found that the average theatre audience wants to see a picture that is thrilling and gripping and even if it doesn't possess those qualities, it must be a picture that tells a good story and the theme must be palatable although at times it touches the risque."

"But it must only touch and not continue on that subject sufficiently long that the unclean idea may be impressed forcibly upon the minds of the watchers.

"Producing companies to-day are reaching a high level of perfection. Some of them send out pictures that can be accepted without a question by any exhibitor. And I never question their flows."

"But other companies, desirous of pandering to a certain depraved taste, must be continually watched. Those companies—and they are becoming fewer every year—are causing this demand for censorship. WITHOUT THEM IT WOULD NEVER BE HEARD OF."

"But those companies confront us. And the exhibitor must be careful—I know how easy it is for the reputation of cleanliness built up through many years to be thrown away by the exhibition of one or two salacious pictures."

"The picture show of to-day is forging ahead, not backward; it is approaching the legitimate stage in its solidity and its hold upon the American people.

"The individual exhibitor must be the one to keep it on its present high plane. He should prevent the showing of pictures that are objectionable to the public and bring up improper thoughts in the audience.

"That can be done easily. In a city of this size, there are a few 'first run' houses. The exhibitor may view all the pictures he will show there before they come to him. He may read the scenario synopses and the reviews of the motion picture journals. With those three sources of information there should be no reason why he should ever show any picture the least bit objectionable.

"That is my solution of the censorship problem. EVERY EXHIBITOR HIS OWN CENSOR. EVERY MANUFACTURER HIS OWN CENSOR."

"The producer should take more care in the picture he produces. I have seen films that have been absolutely ruined by the introduction of a single degrading scene or even action.

"Those scenes could have been left out or hinted at. The story would have been as well told without danger to youthful or immature minds.

"If more care and attention were given to the producing end with the idea of elevating rather than lowering the motion picture drama, then I believe there would be no censorship agitation."

Joseph Donegan, manager of the Lyric Theatre, Kansas City, Mo.:

"I favor state censorship because it means that I will have full protection for both my house and my patrons.

"I cannot be sure to-day that any picture sent me may be absolutely clean—may be such that it won't offend the women and children who make up a large part of my audiences."
"I do not believe in local censorship as a general proposition: factional politics might enter too strongly to make such a censorship effective. That phase would not be nearly so apparent or possible with state censorship.

"The national board as it now operates is not successful. Many of their pictures, I find, should never have been shown. They have passed religious pictures which have offended certain groups, and I do not believe that should be allowed. But worse than that, many pictures bearing their O. K. touch too broadly and directly upon the most delicate of sex subjects."

P. A. Engler, manager local branch, Mutual Movies, Kansas City, Mo.

"Film censorship as it is handled in Kansas City is satisfactory to me. It is operated there through the board of public welfare, a non-political branch of the city government, which works in conjunction with the national board.

"The local board has no direct powers, but only carries out the wishes of the national censors. It gets their periodic lists of cut-outs and recommendations and sees that they are carried out.

"The censorship problem must be worked out, if at all, through a national board. Censorship in that way would be more inclusive, less expensive, and more satisfactory. I believe the board should be elective in some manner, either by the exchange men or the exhibitors. Then there would be no danger of politics.

Lawrence H. Smith, manager of the new Lyric Motion Picture Theatre in Chattanooga, Tenn.

"I am not in favor of any kind of censorship because I think the film manufacturers realize too well that their ultimate success depends absolutely on the quality of the films they produce, and that they will not be foolish enough to make pictures that are objectionable. In fact, what would mean that the people would not patronize them and their sales would fall off.

"I do not believe that any person or set of persons should have the right to decide arbitrarily and finally whether a picture is good or bad. I do think the National Board of Censorship is a good thing and if it came to the point of absolute necessity of censors, I would prefer the National Board, where the decisions will be final, and finally recognized in each state and city.

"We have no censorship board here, although the question was considered a short time ago. It died through what seemed to be a lack of general interest and a realization of the difficulties of adequate censorship.

"I believe that the solution of the problem depends absolutely upon the exhibitor, and by this I mean that when the exhibitors absolutely refuse to show objectionable or suggestive pictures that that class of pictures will be forced from the market."

E. Meadows, manager of the Special Feature department of the General Film Company in Buffalo:

"The observations of an exchange man made over a territory covering several Middle Western states absolutely checks the consensus of opinion recently expressed in The Motion Picture News and was nearly condensed in a recent issue.

"It is the unanimous opinion among picture men that such interference on the part of local authorities is absolutely pure and entirely by motives of graft.

"To begin with, no well-known manufacturer cares to stake the reputation of his goods on doubtful material, and he will be the last man in the world to imperil his own investment by offering pictures that are detrimental to public morals. It has proven a source of conflict and irritation in every case with an unappreciable result so far as benefits are concerned.

"Censorship, so far as the trade is concerned, can only be a benefit when it is exercised in a constructive manner, that is to say, when real intelligent criticism is offered for the benefit of manufacturers.

"It is obvious that such criticism and suggestions can only come from a body that includes very unusual intelligence, taste and deep concern for the public good.

"These observations represent the boiled-down experience of a man who has talked the subject over with a large number of people who are really on the firing-line of the industry."

Daniel J. Savage, new general manager of the Buffalo, N. Y., branch of the General Film Company:

"I am absolutely against local censorship. A local censor or board of censors would not be advisable, because each man has his own ideas as to what is what in a motion picture film.

"On the journey which the film takes from city to city, each censor would find something objectionable in the picture with the result that before it has gone the entire circuit there is no film left.

"I am strongly in favor of a National Board of Censorship and local censors and officials should abide by the decision of this board.

"What is good enough for New York and other Eastern cities is good enough for Buffalo. So far, Buffalo has been fortunate in not having any censor troubles, but we must be on the lookout for what I consider 'Buffalo's greatest evil,' for such it would be, if a censor were appointed.

"From what I understand, the whole movement is nothing but political, and I do not think a picture should be one of the 'faithful' for whom a job must be found by the local board. 'Censorship locally would be a great hindrance to the film exchange.'

"Exhibitors and exchange men of Milwaukee, Wis., are as a whole almost unanimously opposed to censorship, though all appear well satisfied with the National Board. Although no one would allow himself to be quoted, many expressed an opinion that the irresponsible exhibitor had much to do with the present agitation for censorship. This opinion was not only prevalent among exchange men, but exhibitors both large and small as well.

"Many looked upon censorship of any sort as an unwarranted infringement on a man's constitutional rights and seemed to regard the National Board as a rather necessary evil caused by the fly-by-night exhibitor.

J. P. Frueker, of the Mutual Film Company, when asked whether he was in favor of state censorship, said that he was not, and was against censorship of any kind. In reply to the question as to whether or not he thought that the National Board of Censorship was adequate to cope with the situation of eliminating objectionable features in all the releases booked and whether their work conformed with his idea as to what censorship should be, he stated, "that censorship is unnecessary and un-American."

"He said that he thought politics were mixed in the state and city censorship problem and that there was no demand for state and city censorship, that is a demand of a sincere nature though an artificial one had been created by self-appointed agitators and reformers.

"He said that the only solution of the censorship problem was in his opinion to fight the case through the courts, and show that censorship is unconstitutional.

Charles H. Phillips, secretary of the Citizens' Commission on Motion Pictures, Milwaukee, replied as follows:

"I consider censorship unconstitutional and subjected to political influence. I consider the present mode of censorship now existing in Milwaukee sufficient. I consider the National Board of Censorship adequate to cope with the situation of eliminating objectionable features in all releases and the local Milwaukee commission has adopted its standard. Politics is not mixed in the censorship problem here, nor is there any public demand for state or city censorship. My personal opinion is to abide as nearly as possible to the National Board of Censorship and hence all features not censored to submit to the Milwaukee commission."

CENSORSHIP IN CANADA

BY CHANDOS ST. JOHN-BRENON

National Board Is Desired by the Majority of Exhibitors, but the Possibility of Maintaining One Is Doubtful; Local Censorship Would Still Go on—Best Solution Is That Producers Should Be Their Own Censors

THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Opinion in Winnipeg as to film censorship seems a little divided, with the majority in favor of a national board of censorship in preference to local censorship. There can be no question that by a national board many disadvantages to both exhibitors and exchanges would be eliminated. The reasons for a national board as it would affect Manitoba are obvious to the people interested.

Taking Winnipeg as a fair example, the Winnipeg exhibitors are subjected to a dual censorship—the one from the officials appointed by the city government, the other from the official recently appointed by the provincial government.

While the provincial official, who is similar to the state official in the United States, does not devote his whole energies to the censoring of pictures, he does certainly do some censoring. This double censorship must, of necessity, work a hardship on the exhibitors and the exchanges, who are subject to further scissor application after they have satisfied the city officials.

As a matter of fact, Winnipeg is fortunate in possessing two very level-headed, clean-minded, fair-thinking censors who have, in a great measure, governed themselves by a set of hard-and-fast rules.

Possibly to some their ideas may seem, to a certain extent, narrow and the final result not all to be wished, since, while much of what they consider not nice may not be actually seen on the screen, the knowledge that such has taken place is there all the same.

But neither of the Winnipeg officials have set themselves up to be governors of the morals of the community, rather they endeavor to be guiders.

All killings, suicides and desperately brutal assaults are cut out of a film. Nor is a scene which actually shows a person committing any theft, or a stage coach being actually held up, permitted to be thrown on the screen. Nude women or suggestively indecent pictures are, of course, banned.

Yet, while the censorship is strict, the two local censors do not carry it to idiotic lengths. The result is that the exhibitors and the exchanges are on the most friendly terms with the eliminators and themselves, by eliminating much that might be considered objectionable, materially assist the officials.

To such an extent is this cooperation carried that the censors themselves know that certain managers never will, under any circumstances, permit objectionable features, or even features which the censors might consider risky, to appear on their screens. In this respect their work is saved them, since secure in this knowledge they do not have to continually watch the films.

But the exhibitors of Winnipeg themselves know full well exactly what can or cannot be shown on the screen, having learned, by the rules laid down by the censors.

In spite of this fact, however, it must be admitted that sometimes seemingly very useless cuts are made. But over and above these city officials is the provincial censor, and he, too, can come along at any moment and find objectionable features in films which have passed the city officials.

This, to say the least, is very unpleasant to exhibitors and raucous to films. Again, in various points of the province many films which have been strictly censored here, are again slashed in the smaller towns where other censors have been appointed. So that the provincial censor will pass a picture here, yet the outside points may cut it all to pieces.

A national board would stop all this, but is it a national board feasible? It is doubtful. It cannot be understood by local exhibitors why the seal of approval of the Ontario board of censors on a picture is not accepted here in Winnipeg and in the rest of Manitoba.

And it certainly is not, for many cuts are made in pictures which have been passed by the Ontario board.

Surely the moral ideas of one province should not differ from another. Human nature is the same the whole world over. Susceptibility is the same the whole world over, save that it differs according to the person.

But it would be too much to assume that the susceptibilities of an Ontario person are greater than a Manitoba child, or that a child of New York should have finer susceptibilities than a Canadian child.

Under these circumstances it is not surprising that at many points in the province there is a strong feeling that some uniform censorship should be arranged rather than the higgledy-piggledy system now found throughout the Dominion.

With the majority in favor of a national board of censorship and the opposing minority a very small minority, it has to be admitted that a national board would be a solution of the present serious difficulty, for serious difficulty it is. But could a national board of censorship be formed? Again the answer is doubtful.

Opposition is bound to be met with from many sources. The provinces in the great West are proud of their independence, and it is very doubtful if the authorities would permit outsiders to settle upon a standard of morals, using the word 'morals' in its broadest terms, when it affected their own particular province.

The same applies to cities in the West. Those who govern the cities are jealous of all that appertains to the general welfare, and especially so when it comes to "morals," and it is pretty certain they would not give up the government of those morals without a bitter fight.

City officials in growing cities like to have a finger in the pie of "public welfare," and upon so vital a question they are not likely to stand by and see the matter settled without their taking a very-important part.

Those who know western Canadian cities will appreciate this point.

So that it is safe to assume, and with no very great effort of imagination, that even were the National Board an established fact, there would still be the local censor.

As far as the provinces themselves are concerned, the matter could doubtless be arranged satisfactorily by proper representation of every province on the board. But again, where would the cities come in?

Again, in the matter of the provinces—it could not be otherwise where party lines and petty spirit is so tightly drawn in the provincial and dominion governments—it would not be the best man who would get the position, but the most useful man to the party.
THE censoring of all pictures which come into the Dominion of Canada would be a big undertaking and, delightful as are pictures, it is doubtful if "big" enough men would devote their whole time to looking upon them, even though it was to uplift the morals of the great country.

By "big" men is meant men capable of being big enough, broad-minded enough, refined enough, and clever enough to decide where the line must be drawn without crippling the industry.

Big men want big salaries and to have proper representation with assistants and headquarters, etc., an enormous sum would have to be expended annually. There would be but very little financial support derived from the pictures.

It would hardly be fair to tax every picture with more than a nominal fee for censorship, as is done now even though such pictures have been passed in Ontario. The fact that exhibitors pay high licenses should protect them from being again taxed heavily, so that there would be but little revenue to assist in the upkeep of an expensive administration.

THE whole question could be, and can be, solved by the manufacturers themselves. The matter is in their hands. They themselves could be the censors for the entire country.

If their object is not to transgress the laws of morality and decency in their anxiety to amass much wealth, if their object is to educate with clean and wholesome amusement for the youngest and most untutored mind, then they have the settlement of the matter in their own power, which could be brought to a successful conclusion in less than a year.

The producers and manufacturers could band themselves into one mighty association, augmented by government representation of the highest possible standard, and by holding meetings, having discussions, and planning carefully, could lay down a system of rules for pictures which would earn the endorsement of the continental community as well as the endorsement of the federal government.

In this manner could the output of moral-building pictures be governed.

It would surely be a very simple matter for the clever heads of the great film concerns who keep their fingers on the pulse of the public, by just such an amalgamation to eventually eradicate such evils as may now be found in pictures which, justly or unjustly, necessitate censorship and thus, by standing by a set of hard-and-fast rules, and by virtue of the unanimous decision of men to produce pictures which could in no way offend, a result would be achieved which no national board of censorship could achieve.

The question of government censorship would die of itself. Censors would have nothing to do, and so eventually, with their reason for being gone, there would not be any more. Surely such a solution is "a consummation devoutly to be wished," nor is it without the bounds of possibility.

through Herbert M. Horkheimer, president of the Balboa company.

The Box-Office Attraction Company will be agents for these pictures in New York City and state, Northern New Jersey and New England, and will dispose of the remaining territories. Abraham Carlos will manage the state-rights department of the Box-Office Attraction Company.

The first state rights to be sold will be "St. Elmo" in six reels and "Will o'the Wisp," made in Southern California at the time of the last flood. Public exhibitions will be given buyers at the little theatres of the company at the Forty-sixth street offices.

GETTING AN ANGLE ON THE NEW LAW

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., May 13.—Owners and managers of motion picture houses in Northeastern Pennsylvania have been "burning the midnight oil" during the last few days in an effort to become thoroughly informed on the rules and regulations just issued by the State Board of Censors.

Exhibitors in this vicinity are pleased with the rules, and, in expressing their opinion of The Motion Picture News representative, say the new code will do much to uplift the standard of the houses.
Sunday Battle Lines Drawn in Birmingham

Ministers' Protest Forces Exhibitors to Drop Plan for Sabbath Opening, but They Are in the Fight to Stay and Declare the Business Men of the City Are with Them

Special to The Motion Picture News

DEVELOPMENTS of extreme interest are expected in Birmingham within the next thirty days in the controversy between the Birmingham motion picture exhibitors on the one side and the city commission and the Pastors Union on the other side over Sunday pictures.

For over three years the Sunday motion picture idea has been agitated in Birmingham at different intervals and the scheme has always met with live opposition headed by the pastors of the city, who claim that the open shows on Sunday are a violation of the Sabbath law, both religious and secular, and would result in much harm.

The preachers claim that the competition of the picture show would be felt by the churches.

A few days ago President A. A. Wall, of the Birmingham Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, and one of the most prominent exhibitors in the South, gave out a public announcement that all the shows in Birmingham would be open the following Sunday, stating that he had appeared before the Pastors' Union and had secured their consent.

President Wall, who operates the Alcazar Theatre in Birmingham, planned to charge no admission to the shows, but open them on Sunday afternoons from 2 to 10:30 o'clock, and have a lady seated in the lobby entrance with a collection plate so that all who desired could contribute whatever they wished.

Mr. Wall states that this scheme is being carried out now in Dallas, Tex.; New Orleans; Jacksonville, Fla.; and many other Southern cities, and that practically everyone who enters the show will throw into the collection plate his regular admission, just as if he had purchased a ticket at the box-office.

THE day after Mr. Wall's announcement was published in the morning papers, however, a strong committee from the Pastors' Union, headed by Dr. Henry Atkins, president, appeared before the city commissioners with a strenuous protest, stating that, evidently through misunderstanding, Mr. Wall was wrong in claiming they had indorsed his plan and that if he was determined to proceed, they were prepared to organize the forces against him and fight him to the finish.

The commissioners held that the subject was not worth throwing the city into such a controversy, one side against another, and requested Mr. Wall to drop his scheme, which he has done for the present.

Local exhibitors, however, state that they would resort to every legal means to believe that a compromise may be reached within the next week or two. They say further that they are going to keep agitating the question until Birmingham gets Sunday moving pictures.

It is now one of the few cities of its size in the country which closes motion picture shows on Sunday.

BUSINESS men, merchants, corporation officials, and industrial unions in general, it is said, will support the motion picture show men for Sunday pictures, believing that there are many people who will thus get to see a show who find it impossible through the week to attend.

Further, it will afford some place for visitors in Birmingham and the traveling public to spend a few hours on Sunday, for at the present time Birmingham is as "dead" on Sunday as a country hamlet. There is no place to go but to church or to the parks.

The exhibitors had promised to run films on Sunday of only the highest class, such as educational, religious, moral plays of a high standard with no Western or slapstick comedy stuff.

They told the pastors and the commissioners that they had the interest of the public as much at heart as anyone else and they believed that they could do as much good, if not more, toward the uplift and improvement of the moral and intellectual standards of the community by Sunday shows than any other agency in the city.

The amusement parks, with all their frills and amusement devices, are allowed to operate here on Sundays; drug stores, cigar stores, soft drink and ice-cream parlors, cafes, and so forth, are all allowed to operate.

There is no doubt that if the issue comes down to a last stand, the local exhibitors will enforce the blue laws and compel the commissioners to close up everything on Sunday.

The exhibitors decline to discuss this phase of the question, but they admit that they are in the fight to stay and that, after what they will witness to this if compelled to do so by the city officials and the opposing factions to Sunday pictures.

A unique and clever advertisement was used last week by Mr. Wall, owner and manager of the Alcazar theatre, while running the film entitled "The Secret of the Well."

A full-sized, old-fashioned well with a fully rigged "well sweep" was fixed up in front of the theatre with a bucket hanging to a rope on one end of the pole. A touch of realism was added by moss and flowers around the well and from out between the bottom boards of the old well peeped a little rubber snake who looked like the real thing.

Mr. Wall states that there is no doubt the little display made him hundreds of dollars, for the crowds just poured past the box-office.

By persistent newspaper advertising H. M. Newsome, owner, and operator of the Trianon motion picture theatre in Birmingham, has impressed the public with the fact that the theatre contains a pipe organ as large as those in most of the churches of the city.

Many people have been heard to say: "Let's drop in here and hear the pipe organ a moment."

Mr. Newsome employs an expert musician to play the instrument. Business men state that anything quiets their nerves as much.

At this theatre Mr. Newsome says he tries to keep good drama and high-class comedy films on the program, and there is no doubt but what it has become one of the most popular theatres in the city, drawing especially from the business and professional men and society women, but of course from all classes, too.

At this theatre Mr. Newsome runs the "Adventures of Kathy." pictures every two weeks and they have developed a strong following. The story is published every Sunday morning in the Birmingham Age-Herald and on "Kathy" days at the "Trianon" it is always difficult to get a seat. RALPH R. SILVER.

NEW HOUSE FOR WILMINGTON, N. C.

George C. Warner, of Jacksonville, Fla., of the Montgomery Amusement Company, which owns a chain of high-class motion picture theatres throughout the South, is planning the establishment of a theatre in Wilmington, N. C.

The company has three theatres in Jacksonville, two in Savannah, one in Atlanta, one in Columbus and in other cities in the South.

Appeal Sunday Opening Cases in Kentucky

Reformers Throughout State Watch for Outcome of Fight Between Frankfort Exhibitors and Prosecutor—Spirited Contest Is On

Special to The Motion Picture News

The motion picture men are having their troubles at Frankfort, the state capital. They have an idea at that town, which is the capital of the state, that it is "wrong" to have motion picture houses in operation on Sunday. Consequently, the public prosecutor, who is serving his first term, began to have all owners arrested and attempts made to fine them.

Sometimes they were fined, and sometimes they were not, but all the time they kept their houses open and they were filled to the brim at every performance.

The cases in which the operators were found guilty were at once appealed to the higher courts, where the entire matter will be fought out.

These cases are being watched carefully by the reform element in cities all over the state, and if the operators lose, an effort will be made to stop the showing of motion pictures on Sunday in every town where there is an element which desires to stop such amusement.

The motion picture men use as an argument that in every city of any size there are a lot of people who work too late or are too tired at night to go to a motion picture show, and that their only chance of recreation is on Sunday.

They point to figures showing this is correct in comparing the Sunday attendance with that on other days.

Rochester Ministers Shut Out by Mistake

Had No Formal Invitation to Attend State Convention, Say Clergy—Letter Asking Them to Attend Never Reached Association

Special to The Motion Picture News

Rochester, N. Y., May 14.

An aftermath of the state convention of exhibitors came out here in the papers after the meeting had dispersed. It was a statement from the Rochester Ministerial Association that no formal invitation had ever reached that body to attend the convention, and take part in the discussion concerning the opening of picture houses on Sunday.

The association had discontinued its meetings for the season, it seems, by the time a letter was written to one of the members, notifying him of the convention, and of the desire of the exhibitors to have the ministers present to hear what was said concerning Sunday opening. A day or so after the convention a member of the association wrote a letter to a local newspaper explaining the situation and telling why no representatives of the ministers had been present.

They would have liked to attend, they said, and wished the public to know why they did not.

It was an unfortunate incident, as much good might have been done the exhibitors' cause if the ministers had heard the proceedings, and what the motion picture people had to say concerning opening their houses on Sunday.

One of the topics discussed in the corridors, but not in the open convention of the exhibitors, was the fact that the Monroe Avenue Methodist Church has a motion picture outfit and frequently displays films on Sunday evenings.

NEW WARNER STAR

Among the latest notable additions to the artistic staff of Warner's Features, Inc., is Miss Valentine Grant, who is now being featured in "A Mother of Men," a story of the Civil War, which will shortly be released by this company.

Miss Grant, who has a fine coloratura soprano voice, once believed that her mission was to be the operatic stage. Sid Olcott, however, the well-known Warner director, seeing in her unusual screen possibilities, decreed otherwise and Miss Grant will be seen in many future Warner productions.

With other Warner players, she recently returned from Jacksonville, Fla., where she had taken leading feminine roles in eight three-reel subjects, which will be released during the coming summer and in which she has registered some unusually good work.

In "When Men Would Kill" and "The Brute," Miss Grant has already shown an unusual talent for the silent art. Incidentally, Miss Grant is a Seattle girl and a suffragist.

KLEINE THEATRE OPENS IN NEW YORK

The Candler, New York's newest motion picture theatre, opened its doors on May 7 to a large number of invited guests. "Antony and Cleopatra," the tremendous production by George Kleine, was the opening attraction. The theatre will be used as a motion picture house during the summer, but in the fall will go in for the "legitimate" drama.

The theatre represents an investment of $750,000, it is said, the lessens being George Kleine, Cohan & Harris, and Sol Bloom. It is one of the prettiest theatres in New York. There are 625 seats on the ground floor and 350 in the upper balcony. An organ valued at $40,000 will be installed later.

The Methods That Established Victor and Hubert as "Motion Picture Kings" of Indianapolis's "Frog Hollow"
Are those of Sound Normal Business Success—Others Failed; They Lasted—Read the Reasons

Victor & Hubert do not talk much of that first venture. They are proud, however, of what they did after they bought the ground on which "The Two Johns Theatre" now stands—an up-to-date motion picture theatre.

They purchased fifty-one feet of ground on the avenue, facing two streets and an alley. The ground cost them $8,200. On this property eventually they borrowed money to erect a $4,300 building—the predecessor of the new building they now plan to operate there.

The little new building was of brick and would seat 350 people. They declare—and none so far has come forward to discredit them—that it was the first building erected in Indianapolis to be used solely as a motion picture house.

They opened up to a full house. The first two years the business paid phenomenally.

It paid because Victor & Hubert had picked out the right sort of a community in which to try their idea, and because the idea was right. This idea was that if the picture business was fundamentally to succeed it should be made to appeal directly to the working classes and to the classes that could afford to pay but five cents for an evening's entertainment. It was the class with little but a nickel in its pocket to which "The Two Johns" planned to appeal. And so they worked out their idea.

The greatest battle they had was in handling tactfully the very class to which they knew they must appeal if they were to succeed.

Frog Hollow's rowdism in the old days in Indianapoilis was no gentle series of college pranks. It was real—and sometimes deadly in its earnestness. The newcomer often was forced to seek the solace of the tenderfoot on expedientious manner.

The Two Johns' were tenderfeet on the avenue and they knew real power. They governed themselves accordingly. They determined that "the gang" should not "clean them out." But they tell about it, as it happened, themselves.

We wondered if we'd ever fill up that room with 350 people," Hubert said. "Bad weather overtook us and we didn't get to open up till the twenty-fourth of January, 1909. Our opening night was a real success, although the weather was very bad—cold, snow and sleet.

We more than justified our belief in the possibilities of the house. We turned 'em away that first night.

"Still a lot of the business men up there told us we couldn't succeed. They said it was not a community which could stand such a show and that the rougher element would eventually take the place. We proceeded with our old policy in the new building.

"The Two Johns' were always there on the job. We maintained the strictest order. We allowed no loud talking. We kept the place clean, disinfected and 'up to snuff' in a sanitary way all the time. Our show was different from a great many that were afterward operated here. They didn't have many of the things to contend with that we did in the particular community we selected.

"We had to cut down noise first. We didn't allow any loud talking in the audience, any whistling, any stamping of feet.

"And right from the start we required both men and women to remove their hats. To that one little rule of ours we owe much of our eventual success, we believe.
"No show in town had required women to remove their hats up to that time. It was very hard to make the women believe that anyone behind them could be inconvenienced by their hats.

We made enemies right and left for the first few nights with these rules, particularly the hat rule as it applied to women. The nature of the community in which we were operating made it absolutely necessary for us to watch our audiences like hawks to be sure that they did not violate the social usages which in other communities would have been established beyond doubt before such a show started.

In maintaining this order we had a great deal of opposition. The younger people and the women resented it, but the majority of fair-minded people eventually were much pleased, and we began to hear rumors that "The Two Johns" was a place where one always could see the pictures without having to sit behind a big hat.

We had to devise various ways to find out just where the trouble would start in the house when it was dark. The house was a large one to watch. When the manager wasn't there, and by giving a clean, conscientious show with no misrepresentation of pictures that we didn't know anything about, we believe we proved to the entire neighborhood and the business men therein, that the picture business could be handled successfully even in that section.

We advertised one 'Western' every night. That was the big thing in that neighborhood. Everybody wanted at least one 'Western.' We also advertised a comedy every night. The fun had to be intermixed with the serious, we found, to hold the class of audience we were drawing.

We operated with two reels until competition became so strong in other parts of the city that we had to add another, making a total night's program of a 'Western,' a comedy, and a drama.

The question of the proper music for our shows was a big one, we felt," Viorst said. "We started with the installation of a piano and drums. Later we added a saxophone or a cornet, making a three-piece orchestra, of the type that seemed to appeal to the class of audience we were handling.

A NOTHER little point that we watched was the careful protection of the "dime duds" of our class of patrons to as scrupulous an extent as do the finer vaudeville houses and the bigger theatres. We soon found that this paid us in attendance.

"We took the position that the woman who came to our five-cent theatre in a calico dress was just as proud of that calico dress as was the society woman who went to the larger vaudeville house gownéd in silks and satins.

"So we kept the seats and the remainder of the furniture in our house as scrupulously clean as did the vaudeville houses about-us—or maybe cleaner.

"The Two Johns' made particular efforts to keep in touch with their audience at all times and to build up a personal relibility for their house. Each night as the shows "let out" one or both of them stood at the entrance to the theatre and asked each person they could reach what he or she thought of the show, whether they had any changes to suggest, and above all, whether he or she were satisfied. In this way they establised personal relationship with the patrons.

"A NOTHER little trick that we believed won us favor was one we picked up before we got very far," said Viorst. "We began to examine the features that we were booking ahead and we got to picking out some little thing in each one that we could advertise truthfully.

"We tried to keep away from any misleading statements regarding any of our pictures.

"In fact, we applied simple business principles again—and did not 'fake' our advertising. We announced all special programs from our stage, instead of on our screen, and this brought us again into a little closer touch with those who came to witness our shows.

"We actually believed that one announcement to the audience from the manager of the house was worth more than ten slides that we could throw on the screen.

Another little trick of the trade that paid "The Two Johns' was their lack of enthusiasm concerning the nightly use of "features," they declared.

"We never believed in putting on more than one 'feature' a week," Viorst said. "We figured that our audiences were being pleased with our regular service and we were chary of using 'Sarah Bernhardt in La Tosca' or 'Mysterie's of Paris' when they came, except as a sort of stimulus to our audiences.

"We didn't want to 'burn up' our folks with too much of that stuff. We believe that this lack of ours in adding to our expense went a long ways towards bringing us the final ability to more than make both ends meet in the business."

THE question of the proper advertising methods was a big one for "The Two Johns' to settle, but they believe they solved it quickly and scientifically—at least so far as the class of audience was concerned that they were seeking to reach. They soon found that "too many handbills were worse than none at all.

"Our principal mode of advertising soon came to be announcements from the stage," Hubert said. "Very soon we found that our clientele was doing the advertising for us in a way that we couldn't better so very much—at least in that one house.

"So, when we met any of our patrons on the streets we took to greeting them cordially. We 'passed the time of day with them.' We gave them a cordial invitation to see the next show.

"That really became a real part of the outdoor advertising. It didn't make any difference how they were dressed. We were engaged in a campaign of educating that particular section of Indianapolis and we took every means we could to further that campaign personally. We didn't use souveniers, prizes or other inducements.

"We just gave 'em the show."

Many other tenets of the trade "The Two Johns' have used—and are using—but each of them is just a simple business method applied to a new business with an old basis—selling the public what it wants for a nickel.

There are but twenty nickels in a dollar.

UPLIFT CLUB USES FILMS

St. Louis, Mo., May 13.
Mrs. Luella M. Grimbley, of Maplewood, Mo., announces the organization of the Parent-Teacher Association. Mrs. Grimbley says the association is intended to bring about more intimate relations between the parents, the children and the teachers.

A motion picture program will be rendered once a week by the association, at which nothing but educational films or picture plays adapted from classical books will be used.

The Exhibitors’ Forum

These letters are as follows:

Gentlemen: I do not favor the present Ohio State Censor Law, but this matter concerns the manufacturer of films and personally I do not think the exhibitor should be compelled to stand for their loss caused by manufacture of films not suited for exhibition.

Fraternally yours,
STANLEY H. LAWILL
Majestic Theatre, London, O.

Gentlemen: I do not favor the present Ohio State Censor Law. I resigned from the league for this and other matters.

Yours fraternally,
J. C. FLACK
Star Theatre, Conneaut, O.

Gentlemen: Frankly speaking, my view regarding this censorship law is that it is no more than a political graft scheme of Mr. Cox and Mr. Neff, our league president, and unless Neff is kicked out, our league is ruined. I cannot see anything to Neff except graft, and the sooner the league rides itself of Neff, the better off it will be; otherwise I fear for its safety.

Very truly yours,
F. H. STAUF
Grand. Delphos, O.

ONE EXHIBITOR’S EXPERIENCE

Cleveland Photoplay Exhibitors’ Board of Trade, Cleveland, O.

Gentlemen: Shortly before the Cincinnati convention, a representative of the League called and asked my opinion concerning censorship.

Upon my informing him that I was opposed to same, HE INDUCED ME TO SIGN A CARD IN FAVOR OF THE BILL BY INFORMING ME THAT THE REAL OBJECT WAS TO HAVE THE BILL DECLARED ILLEGAL, AND THEREFORE DO AWAY WITH ALL CITY AS WELL AS STATE CENSORSHIP.

A. L. THOMAS
Grand Theatre, Newark, O.
The following exhibitors registered their votes against the Ohio State Censor Law and in favor of its repeal:

"A Woman's Triumph," adapted from the novel "The Heart of Midlothian" by Sir Walter Scott, is scheduled as the next release of the Famous Players Film Company. Laura Sawyer plays the role of Jeanie Deans, and is supported by a capable cast.

The history of the original story is said to be taken from a true story Scott had investigated. Helen Walker, who would not tell a lie even to save her sister, died and Scott was asked to write an epitaph. He investigated her case and not only wrote the inscription for her tomb, but paid for the stone as well. Remembering her case he wrote then his novel.

NEW PITTSBURGH THEATRE

Pittsburgh, Pa., May 13.

Pittsburgh's new playhouse, William Penn Theatre, on Federal street at the corner of Isabella street, North Side, opened its doors last week. The theatre, built for motion picture purposes, is under the management of Harry John P. Wells.

The theatre is a beautiful building, and is handsomely equipped.

Picture Players' Dance at the Lyric Theatre on Saturday, May 9. This dance was tendered the leading players of the motion picture fraternity by the exhibitors of Baltimore and the public was invited. It was an enthusiastic, jolly crowd that packed the big building to the doors; each one attending eager to see his or her motion picture idol. There were 4,000 present. This was all the hall would hold, and over 1,000 persons were turned away from the doors.

This affair marks the first dance, or first entertainment of any kind in fact, that has ever been tendered the motion picture stars by any city south of the Mason-Dixon line. It was a howling success, both from the players' standpoint, each one of whom said they had "the time of their life" and also from the standpoint of the exhibitors, who really didn't expect such a turnout. It has been determined to hold another affair of the same size next year when a much larger hall will be provided.

The dance began at eight o'clock and continued up to twelve. The players did not arrive at the hall until shortly after ten o'clock, and when they were introduced from the stage of the Lyric they were greeted with roars of applause, and cheer after cheer. A promenade was formed, led by Earle Williams and Clara Kimball Young, both of the Vitagraph Company. The promenade was short, for the throngs were more ended, and was followed by an elaborate banquet served in the banquet hall of the Lyric, at which all of the players were present, together with the wives and families of the Baltimore exhibitors, city officials and prominent men of Washington.

After the feast had been served President Marion Pearce, of the Baltimore exhibitors, introduced A. S. Goldsborough, commissioner for the Francis Key highway, who acted as toastmaster. Mrs. Young, Earle Williams, G. Smith, Rosemary Theby, Joseph W. Smiley, Anita Stewart, Dorothy Kelly, Billy Quirk, James Morrison, William Shay, Mary Charleston, Kate Price, Orni Hawley, Lila Leslie, Norma Talmadge, Florence Hackett, Mrs. Frank Halloway and Frankie Mann were among those who responded to calls for speeches. M. A. Noff, president of the League, was present.

Much of the success of the Baltimore dance was due to Mr. J. Howard Bennett, vice-president for Maryland of the national league. Mr. Bennett was chairman of the dance committee and at the banquet on Saturday night was presented with a beautiful loving cup by the members of his committee. Other members of the dance committee who contributed very materially to the success of the affair were Marion S. Pearce, Guy L. Wonders, Wm. Fait, Jr., Bernard Deepkin, Wm. A. Hovey, Joseph Brodie, and J. J. Hartlowe.
A NOVEL, unprecedented experience has been Beloit’s this season. The motion picture men have been advertising.

And more than that, every picture house, save one, has undergone alterations and improvements and emerged spick and span looking, with new fronts and improved interiors.

The reason is the Rex Theatre, a new house this winter. It is the handsomest, largest house in the city.

Its advent into the Beloit motion picture field has already resulted in a healthy rivalry among the city’s exhibitors—a rivalry which has brought better pictures to the patrons of the theatres and better buildings for improvement of the downtown district.

No sooner had the story of the splendid theatre which was to occupy the new McGavock block gone its rounds, than the picture men began to squint at their theatres with a view to improvements.

They were all on a par.

The absence of active competition had made the owners feel confident and negligent.

All four theatres were rather frowsy-looking. It took the threatened competition of a wide-awake manager to stir the men.

MANAGER OLSON, of the "Star," was unfortunate in that he could not persuade his landlord to make any improvements on the theatre. Nothing daunted, Mr. Olson took the money from his own pocket and put in an extremely attractive front.

Four swinging doors with large glass panels open directly from the street into the lobby. Here he installed an inclined tiled floor. The ticket-office was rebuilt and the theatre, inside and out, was redecorated.

Mirrors were installed in the lobby for the convenience of patrons. And to top the entire thing a new projector, a Powers 6-A, was purchased.

Thus equipped, Mr. Olson figured that he was ready to meet all comers. The results from his investment have not disappointed him.

"External appearances do not always indicate the quality of the pictures shown within, but an attractive house does a dene of a lot toward attracting the crowd," cannily observes Mr. Olson.

About the same time that Manager Olson was directing his attention to the Star, Manager Quinn, of the Lyric, was looking over the Grand. He finally purchased the house from Appleby and Johnson, who had not made a success of their vaudeville-picture venture, and after redescribing the metal front he installed an arc light in front of the house.

The Grand is now equipped with an inverted lighting system in the interior, a balcony which will seat 200, an inclined tiled floor in the lobby and an attractive detached ticket-office constructed of marble slabs.

It is now running as a strictly motion picture house and is doing well. Mr. Quinn still continues to operate the Lyric also.

AND then the new Rex opened with a whirlwind advertising campaign. A publicity campaign, started a month before the completion of the building, had kept the city well informed of the progress made on the structure. Interest in the place was already well established when the Rex opened with a four-reel feature, "The Merchant of Venice."

At each of the three shows that night the 650 seats in the theatre were filled and people were turned away. And the management has had the same experience every night since the opening. The daily matinee also attracts a good crowd.

As the Rex is a Universal house, Beloit has enjoyed many of the benefits which Chicago is deriving from the "Read it in the 'Record-Herald' in the morning and see it in the theatre at night" campaign.

"The Vagabond Soldier," the first picture to be presented in Chicago under the arrangement with the "Record-Herald," was run in the Rex on the third day that the theatre was open. "The Merchant of Venice" had also appeared in the "Record-Herald."

More than 2,000 copies of the Chicago paper, bearing the story of "The Vagabond Soldier," were distributed at the door of the Rex when the feature was shown at the house. The same thing happened when the Shakespearean production was shown.

And the picture patrons appreciate the novelty.

The stories which appear in the Chicago "Record-Herald" are not hastily prepared outlines, but real short stories, prepared in collaboration with the scenario-writers.

The readers of the paper will see the story in the morning, and if the tale is at all interesting, the chances are that they will plan to attend the theatre in the evening to see the film. Meaning new patrons for the theatre men and greater returns in the business.

Regular patrons will want to read the story of the play they saw last evening, or of the one which they are planning to see to-night. So, if they are not already subscribers of the "Record-Herald," the chances are they that at once subscribe.

Meaning a large circulation for the "Record-Herald" with the associated benefits which come from a growing list of readers.

It is an extremely neat plan. The pictures are shown simultaneously in the majority of the leading Chicago theatres in the afternoon and evening of the day on which the story appears in the paper.

WITH this powerful backing, the Rex Theatre entered as a part of the permanent establishments of Beloit. For it is a place of delights. It is housed in a building of rough-surfaced red brick. Its really spacious lobby has the inclined tiled floor which has been copied by the Star and Grand. Two arc lights hung before it attract the attention of the crowd at night.

The interior of the lobby is lined with nearly framed photographs of stars. The floor in the interior is of concrete.

The walls are decorated in a pleasing green; the beamed ceiling is of a cream tint.

The spacious aisles afford easy communication with the exits and fire-escapes.

The ventilating system is most complete and keeps the air surprisingly pure.

The indirect system of lighting is used.

Because of their commodious quarters, the Rex management has done what not another motion picture man in the city is able to do. They have installed two rest-rooms in the building: one for men, the other for women. The appreciation which has greeted the rooms has more than repaired the management for their installation and equipment.

But Manager Hogan shields himself from the notice which he supplies as much as any other feature of the new house. Francis Brisbane at the drums and traps is a wonder, and is well worth the extravagant salary which he commands. At the snare, xylophone and electric bells he is a wonder.

He was brought out from Chicago, and is one of the highest-paid men in his line of work. His outfit of accessories for use in connection with the drums is unusually complete.

It was planned to install a pipe organ immediately, but the organ has been postponed a number of months. About $3,000 will be expended.

And so that is how the Rex has exercised its influence upon the other motion picture houses in Beloit.

The regulation price in Beloit has been five cents for three and, occasionally, four reel programs. Special attractions at which the admission fee has been ten cents have sometimes been brought to the city.

The Rex shows four and five reels for five cents. This rate holds good on five days of the week. But on Saturday and Sunday five and six reels are shown, including a three or four reel feature, and the price on these days is ten cents for adults.

Manager Quinn, of the Lyric and the Grand, was the first manager to start newspaper advertising, or perhaps it should be said to re-open an advertising campaign. For, in the early days of their history, advertising was important to the Beloit picture men.

But with no active competition there was no necessity for spending the money, and advertising was discontinued. New advertising is again in favor. And an effort has been made to interest the public in the individual stars.

No longer is a play advertised here, as, for instance, "Absinthe." It is now, "See Leah Baird and King Baggot in "Absinthe."" Such honor has of course always been accorded the Divine Sarah, Charlotte Nilsson and other really talented actresses and actors who are well known to the public.

The managers have found, however, that the audience is interested in knowing the actors, or at least the principals, who entertain them each night. Manager Quinn has gone even further and has gathered short anecdotes and bits of interesting history concerning the stars who appear in his pictures.

These he runs in with the rest of his advertising and he has found that it pays him well.

A MONG other excellent productions Mr. Quinn has brought to Beloit "These Three," with Mrs. Fiske in the leading part. "The Third Degree," and the Famous Players Company in "A Shepherd of the Hills," have appeared at his theatre.

Mr. Quinn is strong for films of noted actors and actresses in well-known plays, for he finds that it attracts to his theatres a class of people who are otherwise difficult to reach.

Fortunately for the motion picture men in the city, Beloit has a large number of people who enjoy really good plays. But the city is so situated that but few of them ever get to see the noted stars. These few must go to Chicago to enjoy a first-class production.

So, when these stars are brought to Beloit by the motion picture route, a large crowd of worshipers gather at the shrine and make the venture pay splendidly.

A decided change for the better has taken place in the Beloit motion picture houses for the reasons outlined earlier in this article. The proprietors have brightened up their houses and the entire downtown section has been benefited.

The Rex Theatre set a pace which the other theatres must follow or be left hopelessly behind. They have elected to follow.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—It is the desire of "The Motion Picture News" to include under this heading novel advertising ideas, successful schemes in the management, decoration and equipment of the theatre—everything, in fact, done by the exhibitor to stimulate his trade. We invite every exhibitor to write us about any new enterprise he has; also to come to us for advice or information along any line.

Address: Editor, "The Motion Picture News," 220 West Forty-second Street, New York City.

KEEPING UP APPEARANCES

MILWAUKEE has one exhibitor who is a student of human nature. He also is greatly adverse to personal publicity, and refuses the privilege of revealing his identity; but his attitude for discerning the likes and dislikes of patrons saved him from the shoals of financial disaster about a year ago.

He had just opened the theatre. Adjoining it, in the same building, was a house-furnishing store. The windows of the latter were used to advertise one of the leaders—picture-framing at low cost. This was to induce patrons to enter the store for closer inspection of furniture. Everyone, the owner believed, had pictures to be framed, while not more than that small number would, unsolicited, order profit-permitting bills of furniture. Hence, the leader in beautifully framed photographs and paintings of all descriptions.

The exhibitor made provision for a lobby thirty-eight feet wide, allowing ample room for posters. These he mounted by pasting or tacking on pine-board frames, and leaned them against the walls. An easel frame, accommodating a three-sheet, occupied the space in the center of the lobby. He told the story:

"The front of the house didn't look at all bad, but I know that the inside was more artistically decorated. However, I was new to the business, and was content. I soon noticed that the better-dressed and more well-to-do class of people would pass the theatre. This was especially true of those who came from beyond the furniture store, which is to the north. Those from the south would pay more attention to the posters.

"I puzzled and studied over the thing. It got on my nerves at last, for I felt that I was losing a lot of good business, and particularly the kind that would be the best advertisement for the house.

"It took several weeks to discover the trouble. And then I was tempted to have someone kick me for my own folly and blindness.

"I determined to go out and pass and repass that lobby until I discovered the fault. I walked up and down the street, both on the side of the theatre and opposite. Finally I stumbled upon the trouble.

"The contrast between those beautifully decorated picture frames in the furniture store window and those ordinary wooden ones in the lobby was too great. It gave the impression that the theatre was cheap and tawdry.

"Without the contrast the poster frames might not have appeared at such a disadvantage. But passersby could not help but pause and admire those wonderful creations in the store display window.

"Then, when they saw the poster frames, the difference was too noticeable. In fact, just those few moments of admiring approval of the picture frames had created in their minds a certain standard of excellence.

"I had to bring my poster frames up to that standard or continue to lose their business. I got hold of the furniture dealer early the next morning, and within two days I had frames that were equal to his, and even better, because they were much larger.

"Even if I had not received the patronage they brought from the very class to whom I wanted to appeal, I would have felt well repaid for the expenditure because of the added dignity and air of refinement they gave to the lobby. Each of them was glass-covered.

"To-day I am getting my share of business from the people who come from the north end of the city.

"But I will cancel my good opinion of your publication if you use my name. I would be ashamed to let anyone know that I was so thick-headed that it took me almost three weeks to wake up."

A SCREEN BABY SHOW

MOTION picture baby show, with the babies of the neighborhood as candidates, and his patrons as judges of award, is the novel publicity idea that a certain London exhibitor has conceived to advertise his house.

The scheme is not yet consummated, but the readiness with which mothers have offered their children to pose for the camera gives promise of ultimate success when the last scene is enacted.

The exhibitor's method is to have each baby pose in the arms of its mother while the camera-man runs off a few feet of film, enough to form a record. These negatives are carefully preserved, and when a hundred or more have been taken, the pictures of the babies will be run off one after the other, on a certain night, and the audience itself will be the judge of the prize-winning baby.

The event is already being well advertised, and there is no doubt that the house will be crowded on the night of the award.

A WOMAN'S WAY

RS. Pearl G. Saunders, the prominent Buffalo dancing teacher, is a newcomer in the motion picture game. Mrs. Saunders has recently bought the Ideal Theatre on Genesee street, near Jefferson.

For the first week under her management Mrs. Saunders gave free tango lessons on the stage during intermission, and reports that her audiences are increasing nightly.

"The Ideal will be redecorated and equipped with new machines at once and brought into a new life," said Mrs. Saunders. The Ideal uses the Victor and Mutual service.

A MUSICAL "STEP AHEAD"

THE Majestic, one of the leading motion picture houses in Louisville, Ky., some time ago introduced a new departure in the matter of music and at the same time added an attractive feature. Realizing that the average patron of the motion picture theatre is a lover of good music, the management secured the services of a high-class orchestra that had been playing in one of the leading hotels and is now offering really artistic music with stringed instruments.

The regular orchestra was re-
HEARD IN THE LOBBIES

The first picture to run for two weeks straight at any Detroit theatre is "The Storm Country" (Famous Players). The Liberty was the house, and the crowds flocked to it to see the very last performance.

Theo. Williams opened a four-hundred seat house on South West Fort Street, Detroit, April 18.

Cord Goldsner is opening a 60-seat motion picture house in Toledo, Ohio, known as the Prinivila.

Chas. Bros. are opening a 400-seat house at West Fort street and Artillery avenue, Detroit, Mich.

The Plaza, Norwood's biggest motion picture theatre, has been purchased just recently for $50,000 by McMahon and Jackson from Tischerman and company and a company of stockholders. The Plaza has been successfully operated by the stockholders for several years. It has a seating capacity of 280.

The Olympic Theatre, Cincinnati, O., conducted by McMahon and Jackson, and during the winter devoted to progressive burlesque, has closed a week's engagement of Paul Rainey's African Hunt pictures. The house will be rented for motion pictures during the summer.

The Windsor Theatre, at Kenington, Pa., at Womrath street, has recently opened. This is one of the finest constructed photoplay houses in the country and is strictly fireproof and handsomely appointed throughout.

The State Theatre is situated at Sixty-third street and Haverford avenue, Philadelphia, is one of the newest theatres in the city. The theatre has a capacity of 1,200 seats. The theatre was constructed by William Sachsemeyer and is owned by E. Carrick, A. Brown and William Sachsemeyer. Mr. Brown is manager of the house.

Many of the Buffalo, N. Y., legitimate theatres are considering the showing of motion pictures during the summer months, especially the Teck. This theatre has been showing the life of Christ during the past week.

A. W. Blanke, formerly manager of the Detroit Universal Exchange, has taken over the Grand Circus Theatre, operated by the Michigan Amusement Company, at 403 Wood avenue, Detroit. It is said that Mr. Ashley, manager of the house, will retire.

Harry Alton is now managing a motion picture theatre at 1851 Central avenue, Kansas City.

The Wade Park Orpheum theatre, Wade Park avenue, Cleveland, O., has been sold to A. Colman. Colman formerly held the Business, who recently purchased it from J. L. Markoe.

Messrs. Beard and Dill have opened up a new show at Womble, Arkansas.

J. E. Buttle, of Russellville, Ark., who is a well-known stationer, has given the Business to put up a new show in Russellville with seating capacity of 600.

S. A. Allen has opened up a new picture show in Duval, Ark., and the reports are very favourable.

The Arkansas Amusement Company have purchased Mr. Garrett's theatre, at Charkke, Ark.

Teller's Broadway Theatre, Brooklyn, which proved a lucrative attraction for a full week, recently ran a "Famous Players Week" at a twenty-five-cent sale.

Poor Features Are Too Plentiful

So Says Harry Goldberg, of the Casino Feature Film Company, Detroit, Who Fears the Result if This Continues

HARRY GOLDBERG, the enterprising general representative of the Casino Feature Film Company, of Detroit, has been in New York for several days, during which time he examined a large number of features and made a number of important purchases for his company.

The Casino Feature Film Company is one of the strongest booking concerns in this country. It has Michigan rights to the Famous Players, All-Star and Jesse Lasky features, as well as exclusive rights for this state on Apex, Gaumont, Solax, Blaché, Itala and several other well-known brands.

Mr. Goldberg, who is a wide-awake and observant film man, has some interesting things to say about the feature market.

He criticises sharply the preponderance of quantity over quality in feature films at the present time. A year ago, he says, his purchases amounted to fully eighty per cent of the features he inspected. This year the percentage is reversed and is nearer twenty than eighty.

Throughout the theatres in Michigan the trend is decidedly toward feature programs, but this will be killed by poor quality. In Mr. Goldberg's estimation a number of good foreign films are being held back from this market evidently because the foreign producers are of the opinion that almost any kind of features will sell here.

Mr. Goldberg is only buying now on the screen examination. The Casino Feature Film Company has eight theatres of its own in Detroit and supplies a circuit of seventy-two houses throughout Michigan.

DETROIT, says Mr. Goldberg, is one of the best picture show towns in the country. In one section of the city there are fourteen theatres within three blocks.

At the Liberty Theatre, which is owned and managed by the Casino company, and which is one of the finest theatres in the country, "Test of the Storm Country" recently had a two-weeks' run at ten, fifteen and twenty cents. The prevailing sentiment among Michigan exhibitors is for higher admission prices for features. They object, as a rule, to features over five reels.

The standard rule in Michigan is three reels for five cents and five reels for ten cents.

The posters produced to-day are of a much more artistic character than in the past. The sensational type is fast dying away. The poster, in Mr. Goldberg's opinion, is of the utmost importance. You cannot attract people to the inside of the theatres, says he, unless you attract them through the paper on the outside.

He was compelled to turn down three features simply on account of the poor drawing power of their paper.

The following features were purchased by Mr. Goldberg and added to the present list of the Casino company:

Great Northern, Louis Fennants Film Releases of America, Yidgar, Chariot and selections from Greene's features.

Exhibitors Form Feature Booking League

Twelve in Upper Michigan Organize and Book Famous Players as a Starter—Lasky Productions Also Obtained

TWELVE motion picture theatres in the upper peninsula of Michigan have formed an exhibitors' league primarily for the purpose of booking features and have started off by contracting for the Famous Players.

The houses interested are the Bijou at Iron Mountain; the Sunny, Iron River; Ishpeming Theatre, Ishpeming; Menominee Theatre, Menominee; Marquette Opera House, Marquette; Royal Theatre, Grand Theatre, Escanaba; Star Theatre, Ne-guence; Temple Theatre, Sainte Marie; Temple Theatre, Ironwood; Calumet Theatre, Calumet.

The organization is known as the Copper Country Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. W. L. Foley, Houghton, is president; D. E. Rice, Laurium, secretary; Robert Nelsen, Houghton, treasurer; directors: W. L. Foley, Robert Nelsen, John C. Vogel, Houghton; Aurelius, Houghton; B. S. Vogel, Hancock; Arthur Woodward. The office will be in the Crown Theatre building, Calumet, Mich.

R. L. Goldberg, of the Casino Feature Film Company, of Detroit, booked the new organization for the Famous Players and all Lasky features.
Sight and Projection Lines of Theatres

THE lines of sight of the audience to the things to be seen and enjoyed is distinctly a different subject from the projection line of the picture machines, the stereopticons, the spot light and other projectors. Yet they are similar in the fundamental principle that light rays travel in a straight line. Simple—is it not? Yet only too often do we find this A-B-C of theatre construction ignored even in costly houses.

As you visit theatres you should endeavor to enjoy not only the performance, but go about and see for yourself how these important features have been carried out.

As the objects to be seen are of first importance, we will first consider the stage. In theatres other than purely picture houses, it is of importance that the eye line of the audience in the first orchestra seats is about on the level of the stage floor. If pictures are shown on such stages, the picture sheet must be so masked that the bottom of the picture be somewhat off the stage floor. If the house has a balcony the picture should be raised as high as the sight of the stands in the rear of the auditorium will permit.

In purely picture houses the stage or platform or proscenium frame may be built quite high to an advantage, but the bottom of the picture should not be much above the level of the eyes of the rear seats, as the tendency would be to make those of the front seats elevate their heads to an angle too uncomfortable to maintain for any length of time.

THE slope of the floor of the auditorium must be built with an incline designed that the view of any patron to the floor of the stage be not obstructed by any persons or other objects in front of them. A happy solution where a proper relationship between the floor slope and the picture elevation is what must be studied and carefully determined.

If a balcony is part of the structure and the cost will permit, the front of the balcony shall extend as far front and kept down as low as the lines of sight will permit. This line of sight must be clear for the patrons standing in the back of the last row of seats to a line of about eighteen feet above the stage floor at the proscenium arch.

It has been contended by a few that the balcony patrons shall have a clear view of the entire musicians' pit. This is absolutely wrong.

The orchestra is to the audience no more than the picture machine is to the performance, it is to be heard, the musicians need not be seen. Therefore the line of sight from the balcony must be clear only to the floor of the stage on a line with the proscenium arch.

On this point more than any other have inexperienced architects failed in their designing of theatres. The same principal governs the designing of the second balcony if such is built.

THE projection lines of the pictures are dependent upon the position of the booth. The question of the distance of the booth from the stage is comparatively unimportant. True, the farther away the greater will be the required amperage, but the difference is so small that it is of no moment.

The real factor is the height of the booth above the stage floor or picture screen. The ideal condition would be to have the light rays perpendicular to the screen—that is on a direct line in front of the screen. The higher the booth the greater will be distortion of the picture, which will assume the shape of an inverted keystone.

Proper masking will conceal the keystone effect, but nothing can change the distorted other parts of the picture, which in extreme cases are noticeable and give a displeasing effect. The inexperienced have at times placed the booth on the side walls of the theatre, or have projected the picture too close in the side walls from a booth outside. This is an inexcusable error and cannot but be conducive to distorted pictures.

Where the booth is located to the rear of the balcony another common and very serious mistake is the interference of the picture projection by persons walking about the balcony. It is essential that the light rays not only be above the heads and the high trimmings of the ladies' hats as they go to and from their seats, but also the high-reaching arms of mischievous boys.

The low line of the light rays should be seven feet six inches above any part of the balcony. The shadow at the bottom of the picture are the results of this defect.

Nathan Myers.

CONSTRUCTION NOTES

CONNECTICUT

Charles Keeler will remodel the Ivery barn on Locust street in Davenport, and will make it into a motion picture house. The Steute brothers, of Aurelia, have started work on a motion picture theatre in that city.

Arthur Gaille, formerly with the Casino Feature Co., is building a 1,000-seat house on Mack avenue near McClelland, Detroit.

Jack Matthews is erecting a house seating 250 at Grand River and Avenue avenues, Detroit.

The Holman Brothers, who are erecting a 1,500-seat house on Jefferson avenue, Detroit, are about to take over the property. It will be open for business in about 12 months.

Mr. Boller is also constructing a new house in Ann Arbor, Mich., which will be completed about $12,000. It is being built for R. J. Bailey, who operates the Ben-Ton house at that place. The new house will be hung with vaudeville pictures and one main stage. It will be devoted to motion pictures and "legit" drama being built at Chicago. It will be known as the People's Theatre and will have a seating capacity of 1,300.

Stokes Griffin is to erect a motion picture theatre on his property in Jefferson City, which lies next to the Gem Theatre.

Charles Tilton will erect on Main street, Tilton, N. H., a new six-storied building, of which it is to be used as a motion picture theatre. A new motion picture theatre is to be erected in the vicinity of the well-known depot on Elm and Central streets, Manchester.

Nani Kali, owner of a motion picture theatre on California street, New Brunswick, is to build another theatre there. The new playhouse will be on Church street and will cost $18,000. It is to be a 600-seat house on the block of Mt. Holly by Maynard and Osborne.

H. Shemely, of Mt. Holly, is to build his third theatre in this city. Harry Bowen has opened his motion picture show at Mt. Holly. He has coupled with every leading patron and has been the law and has been given a permit.

The building inspector of Carlstadt has been directed to see that the plans and specifications of the new picture theatre on Broadway street are presented before the council.

Manager J. H. Shriver of the Wave and Dalby building at Lexington avenue and Madison street, Passaic, has a new floor which he uses as a motion picture theatre.

The Public Service Commission has leased the property on the corner of Fillibush avenue and Forton street, Brooklyn, for motion picture purposes to Harry Traub, treasurer of the Grand Opera House.

The feature of the new constructions in Brooklyn receives the proffer of the new motion picture theatre. Three of them are to cost $10,000 and will be erected in different parts of the city.

The two-story building on the corner of Lever street, and Willow avenue, has been remodeled into a motion picture theatre and pool room. It will be erected by C. O. Green and Mr. Van Brink are the owners.

Plans have been filed for a two-story motion picture theatre, to be located on a building, 260 First avenue, west side of Third avenue, north side of Thirteenth street. The building is leased by the Photo Play Company is the lessee. The cost will be about $12,000.

The Film Amusement Company has leased the building at 2073 Third avenue for five years.

The new house of the Mark-Brook Theatrical Enterprise Company, now in the course of construction at Main and Utica streets, Buffalo, will be called the Regent Theatre and will be opened the first of September.

A new theatre will also be erected by this company at N. W. Main street, Buffalo, at the cost of $100,000 for the exclusive showing of multiple-reel features.

It is being built for W. Clarence Beatty, have broken ground in West North avenue, North Side, Pittsburgh, and will shortly begin the erection of a new motion picture theatre. The building will be 60 by 180 feet, and the seating capacity of the same to be 3,000. Glasco terra cotta will be used in the front of the theatre, and the auditorium of the theatre will have a seating capacity of 900.

The Palace motion picture theatre of Allentown has been erected and will open regularly hereafter. The Palace Theatre was badly damaged by fire a few months ago.

Plans for a theatre in Harrisburg to seat 1,200 have been made and work will start on the erection June 1st. It is to cost $75,000.

Sauer & Hahn are planning a motion picture theatre to seat 2,000 persons, to be built on Seventeenth street, and for the Togo Realty Company. The cost will be about $60,000.

J. A. Boder & Co. have started work on the Cross Keys Theatre Building to be erected at the northeast corner of Madison and Market streets. The building will cost about $100,000.

The New England Amusement Company is erecting a new motion picture theatre at 507 11th North fifth street, for Levick & Waldow.

The Joseph Levin Company is erecting on a motion picture theatre, 40 by 180 feet, to be built at 509 South street, for S. Feinman.

A contract has been awarded to John McKenna & Son for a one story motion picture theatre at 902 South street, for Henry E. Silk.

Sauer & Hahn have prepared plans for a one-story motion picture theatre to be built at Thirty-first and Will streets for the Montgomery Amusement Company. The theatre will have a capacity of 1,000.

A contract has been awarded to Howard C. Towen for a one-story motion picture theatre to be erected for the Ideal Amusement Company. The cost will be about $50,000.

Plains have been drawn by Mahan & Broad, for a new theatre to be built by Frank Hanlon on Lafayette street, between Trigg avenue and the Parkway, Memphis, at a cost of $5,000.

A motion picture theatre will be erected at 211 Houston street, and will be a 240,000, two-story fire-proof building, with a system of electric lights.

F. Farriari is erecting a motion picture house on Main street, Rockdale.

Wheeling's first motion picture theatre, "The Prince," in the Hawley Building, corner of Main street and Bridge place, has recently been opened. It is managed by Frank D. Bigger.

Work will soon be started on a motion picture theatre on Main between Fifth and Sixth streets, Wheeling.

Madison is to have a new motion picture theatre, to be erected at 215 State street. The theatre is to be built by Frank H. West. Alfa has already three motion picture theatres. An opera theatre is to be opened this month, and another motion picture house will be erected on National avenue near Forty-second avenue.

Cincinnati, O., May 13.

The Clifton Amusement Company has applied to the building commissioner of Cincinnati for a permit to construct a motion-picture theatre at a cost of $35,000, at Clifton and Telford avenues, Clifton, the most exclusive suburban district of the city.

The new photoplay house is to be constructed of concrete, brick and stone, and will have a seating capacity of 1,000. It is probable that the company will have built a picture house in this part of Clifton, and the proposed building of this house shows plainly to exhibitors that the residents are displaying an unusual interest in picture-plays.

R. EMOTTO SMITH and H. H. Biebprn, Jr., have completed plans for the erection of a new $75,000 motion picture and vaudeville house at Alliance, Ohio. The new theatre is to be fireproof and no expense will be spared to make it as elegant and safe as possible. The seating capacity of the orchestra will be one thousand.

A $200,000 summer garden on the Mississippi River, between St. Paul and this city, in which motion picture pictures will be one of the chief features, is the novel project which is to be constructed here this month and which will be financed by Eastern capital. David I. Meyers, of New York, is at the head of the enterprise.

The front of the garden will be a two-mile brick road with a 240-foot frontage, in which will be a large motion picture theatre and café combined. An stand for an orchestra and band will also make up part of the equipment of the theatre, and it is expected will be built at $400.
"Protect Us"—Protect Yourselves!

The motion picture industry is on trial before the world, charged with being guilty of productions that make the establishment of a legal censorship over it a necessity. The accusation is a false one. The penalty amounts to annihilation.

The situation holds life or death for the industry, and all concerned in it, in its outcome. Now, if ever, it would seem, all concerned in it should be inspired to strengthen the position of the motion picture, and forbear to commit any act that would lay it open to criticism.

Yet, from within the industry itself there now issues forth an ugly and utterly repulsive collection of pictures, conceived in filth, produced in salaciousness, and marketed with a greed for gain as hideous in its disregard of the crisis in the industry under which it claims protection as is the traffic it stoops to portray.

"Protect Us" is its misleading title. It purports to be an exposure, in the interests of sociology, of the traffic in women.

As a matter of fact, it is a soulless attempt to make capital out of the current agitation over "white slavery." As a motion picture production it is a wretched piece of work, an example of what a good motion picture ought not to be. As a lesson in sociology it is a failure. As a box-office attraction it is the sort of picture that would be more costly to the exhibitor if he packed his house with it, than if he had to close up for lack of attendance.

It is such pictures as this that have brought the motion picture industry face to face with censorship and all its attendant evils. It is such pictures as this that will ruin the industry by prostrating it beneath the yoke of censorship, unless the exhibitors of the country resolve that such pictures cannot, must not, shall not, find a market.

The man responsible for this picture should be regarded as a traitor and an enemy to the industry by every self-respecting and loyal exhibitor and manufacturer.

Censorship has nothing in common with the Biblical virtue of charity, except this: The only proper kind of censorship, like charity, should begin "at home." And, unlike charity, it should end there.

In other words, every motion picture manufacturer should be his own censor. Every motion picture exhibitor should be his own censor. Many manufacturers now regard themselves in this light. Many hundreds of exhibitors exercise this prerogative in their own defense and that of their patrons.

And when every exhibitor and every manufacturer decides to be his own censor, the demand for legal censorship will cease to be heard.

PURGE THE FIELD OF SUCH PICTURES AS "PROTECT US." PROTECT YOURSELVES!

The Motion Picture News does not deny that there are conditions, brought about by such productions, which ought to be remedied.

But censorship is not the remedy for them. Censorship is not the remedy to be applied to any condition in any quarter of our social and national organization.

Were the motion picture industry at its lowest possible point, The Motion Picture News would still affirm that censorship ought not to be introduced.

THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS IS FIGHTING CENSORSHIP ON PRINCIPLE BECAUSE CENSORSHIP IS FUNDAMENTALLY WRONG. THE HIGHEST COURT OF THE LAND MAY HOLD THAT CENSORSHIP IS CONSTITUTIONAL. IT CANNOT ALTER THE FACT THAT CENSORSHIP IS WRONG. THE UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT, HALF A CENTURY AGO, DECLARED SLAVERY CONSTITUTIONAL. BUT IT COULD NOT ALTER THE FACT THAT SLAVERY WAS WRONG.

Censorship is damned in the eyes of every American citizen before the courts have passed upon its constitutionality.
The exhibitors of Paris have formed a league to oppose the infliction upon them by a new law of the notorious "droit de pannes," or poor tax, which was abandoned in 1878 and brought up for revival two years ago. The charge is made that only thirty per cent of the tax goes to the poor; the rest is swallowed up by the Department of Charities officials. The tax varies from one to ten per cent, according to the nature of the shows in which it is imposed.

The "mixture of the moment" in Paris is a war spectacle, entitled "1870-1871," a drama of the Franco-Prussian war, as may be gleaned from the title. A notable feature of it is the special music that has been written, and this was rendered by an orchestra of thirty musicians at its presentation at Lutetia-Wagram, one of the principal cinemas of Paris.

Rivalling the native French productions in the interest they have aroused in the Parisian populace, are the four Ambrosio photodramas, "The Lion of Venice," "Othello," "Madame Du Barry," and "The Destruction of Carthage." All are cast in the spectacular mould for which this company has become known on both sides of the water.

"The House of Temperley" is fairly embarked upon its career in France and, from all newspaper accounts, is destined to be a success. Its premiere at Gaumont Palace, Paris, April 24, elicited cordial praise from the French critics. The picture comes from the London Film Company, whose first production it is.

Under the title of "Le Desastre" ("The Disaster") and "The Battle of Gettysburg" has appeared in France.

Taxes Close German Theatres

Taxation has already begun to lay a heavy hand upon the exhibitors in some parts of the German Empire. The Residenz Theatre, one of the largest motion picture theatres of Dresden, has been forced to close on account of the taxes. Several theatres in Breslau are on the point of closing for the same reason.

As an example of the taxation the German exhibitor must reckon with, the city of Charlottenburg imposes a daily tax on the motion picture theatre proprietors. Every theatre of 100 seats or under is taxed five marks, or about $1.25 a day; theatres seating between 100 and 150, seven marks; those seating between 150 and 200, ten marks; and all theatres seating more than 300 are taxed ten marks for every fifty seats in excess of that figure. On Sundays and holidays, the tax is half again as large.

The censorship tax in Germany is calculated by the time required to examine each picture. Formerly it was ten cents for fifteen minutes; this has been raised to two francs. The maximum is twenty-five francs for any picture, or $3.

A protective association has been formed under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce in Berlin, for the benefit of the motion picture industry and those associated in it, and manufacturers, exchange men, supply houses and exhibitors have joined in great numbers.

Lower Prices; Lengthen Programs

The recent crisis in the industry in Germany has brought about a deplorable policy on the part of some exhibitors of lowering prices and lengthening programs. This practice has been resorted to in some measure among the English exhibitors, but, fortunately, most of them understand the short-sightedness of such a policy, and are wisely avoiding it, even in dull seasons.

A German municipality has forbidden all children under sixteen years of age to attend performances of "William Tell." The head of the local censor board, however, passed the picture without an elimination. Doctors do, however, sometimes.

"Cabiria," the D'Annunzio-Itala film, seems to have taken the cinematographic world of Italy by storm. The newspapers, probably because of d'Annunzio's authorship, have paid unwonted attention to the picture, which is now being exhibited in all the principal cities of the kingdom. Exhibitors in many smaller towns are said to be offering unusual prices for the drama. $125,000 was the cost.

Italian Press Will Fight Tax

The trade journals of Italy, under the lead of "La Vita Cinematografica," have formed an offensive and defensive alliance to fight the battle of the industry against the taxing with which the cinemas are threatened. The last ministry, it is true, went out without putting the crushing burden into effect, but a lively apprehension exists that the new ministry may revive the project. That it would mean the closing of most of the Italian theatres and the strangulation of the industry in that country all are agreed.

The "Societa Commerciale Italiana Du Film" has been recently formed at Rome, with a capital of nearly $1,000,000. Attention has been attracted to the new firm because it has obtained the services of Enrico Guazzoni, the well-known Cines director, who produced "Quo Vadis?" "Antony and Cleopatra," "The School of Heroes" and "Julius-Cesar."

Cines has decided to produce a photodrama dealing with the life of Christ, and has dispatched a company to the Holy Land, where the scenes of the drama will be laid.

Pasquali has completed the production, in motion pictures, of Flaubert's novel of Carthage, "Salammbô." A Pasquali version of "Faust" is also ready for the market.

Tree Plays Svengali in "Trilby"

The London Film Company, producers of "The House of Temperley," are completing a production of "Trilby" with Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree as "Svengali."

An English producing company is busy at present preparing a series of pictures that will illustrate the inventions of Sir Hiram Maxim, the famous firearms expert. Maxim himself will appear in the picture.

A scientific and educational film company, the Ita Film Syndicate (Ltd.), has been set up in London, with Sir Ernest Shackleton, the explorer, as one of its members.

"Cabiria" made its appearance in London, April 22, at a trade showing. Its promoters announce that at public exhibitions performances will be accompanied by an orchestra of eighty pieces and a choir of fifty voices. Its reception was enthusiastic.

DAVENPORT, Ia., HAS NEW THEATRE

Davenport, Ia., May 12.

The West End Theatre, the latest addition to Davenport "movie" houses, has opened at Fourth and Cedar, under the management of Ernest and Catherine Kohlsaat. The building is fire-proof and modern as well as scientifically ventilated and very attractive. Saturday and Sunday programs will consist of five-reel releases. General Film pictures will be shown. There will be orchestra music Saturday and Sunday.
THE OPEN-AIR THEATRE

In the Spring the Exhibitor’s Fancy—and That of Many Who Are Thoughts of Airdromes—How to Build and Equip One Is Here Described

Editor’s Note—This article, which deals with the problems that confront the would-be exhibitor, and in particular those of the beginner in the airdrome field, is an old story to most of our subscribers, but so many inquiries concerning these questions have been addressed to The Motion Picture News that we have found it expedient to reply to them all in a single article. Queries which have not been covered in the ensuing paragraphs will be answered directly by mail or in our columns later.

The first problem that appears to the would-be airdrome operator, and that confronts any prospective theatre builder is the selection of a site. A busy section is always the most desirable for this purpose, that is, a section near a shopping district, or near an important street, or better yet,
on such a street.

But choosing a suitable site is becoming more difficult each year and each month, and, in fact, each day. In order to build on the chosen site, one must have the consent of all abutting property owners and, in many states, if an apartment house or a hotel lies next to the chosen property, only the consent of the property owner and the agent but the consent of every tenant in the structure has to be obtained before building.

In building the airdrome it is ab-solelty necessary to comply with all the laws regarding such buildings; the construction laws must be followed closely and equal notice must be given the fire and sanitary laws. Failure to comply with all these rules and regulations will result in additional expense.
Buildings inspectors are relentless and will insist upon rebuilding the whole theatre if it needs it.

In large cities, new additions and improvements must be added to the theatre at irregular intervals, no matter how perfect it is to start with, as the above-mentioned laws change from year to year, always becoming more exacting and stricter.

Not alone each state, but each city, town, and even the smallest hamlet has its own individual laws regarding the construction of amusement places, and the best road to follow is to go to the bureau of civic laws in your city and obtain a pamphlet on the subject. These pamphlets explain fully all the laws regarding the building proposition.

A few of the laws that are alike in all large cities are such well-known ones as those requiring the whole building to be of absolute fireproof material, and the booth to be fireproof. In New York the booth must be constructed entirely of asbestos, while in New Jersey any fireproof material will do. The requirements in most states differ widely.

The size of the booth is always determined by the number of machines contained. The sanitary laws usually require that two toilets be placed in each airdrome and, or course the proper sewage connections are necessary.

The fire and building laws vary in each city, as to the number of seats placed on a certain amount of floor space, and how they are to be fastened to the floor, the distance of the buildning from the street, the distance of the fence from the building, if there is to be a fence, the number of exits and fire escapes and countless other details.

In New Jersey the laws are even stricter than in other states, so that it is well-nigh impossible to start a theatre of any sort whatever there, without going to an enormous amount of expense and trouble. In other states the proposition is less difficult, but by no means easy.

The next important question is the sort of picture service that is desired. The small-town exhibitor can easily get in touch with any exchange in the nearest city. The Universal, General and Mutual are the three largest companies and have offices in all large cities.

Arrangements can be made to have them ship a certain number of reels each week, two or three times a week, or day, if desired. If a theatre in the new exhibitor’s neighborhood tr fidelity with the service, and if it is a hard proposition to get films that have not been shown before, because it is usually first come, first served, at all exchanges.
But each exchange has more films, by far, than one theatre can handle, so it should not be so difficult after all. If it proves so, there are always other exchanges to be tried. The price of rental varies, with the age of the film.
First-run pictures are, of course, much more expensive than films two or three months old, and special features demand a larger price than single reels.

All large exchanges, including the three mentioned above, furnish posters for all their pictures. These may be obtained in advance of the picture. An extra charge is made for these, but it is small and well worth the cost, especially if you are located where there is more than one motion picture house.

A very attractive lobby display is obtained by the use of several stills placed in frames, of the pictures you are showing. These are less glaring and offensive than startling posters.

The choosing of a suitable projecting machine can only be determined by giving all a fair trial. Any manufacturer will be only too glad to demonstrate his machine. The largest exchanges rent machines, but the rental is high and if one is going to keep open for any length of time, it will pay to buy the machine outright. An operator is easy to secure but it is not so easy to secure a good one. Apply at an exchange or the nearest union headquarters and through there one can be furnished, or advertise.

Most machines in fact all have a motor attachment, which does away with the old hand drive, unless it is found desirable. This is a debated point whether the pictures are steadier when motor-driven, although a uniform speed is maintained throughout each reel. The question of electricity is an important one. If a direct current is the only kind available, then one must have a direct-current motor; if the current is alter-ning, one must have a motor with an alternating current. This, of course, only applies if you desire your machine to be motor-driven.

Some power, nearly always electricity, although sometimes acetylene gas, is used to furnish the juice for the carbons in the lamp. The latter is only used, however, only when no electric power is available. The wires are connected up with the lamp through a rheostat or transformer.

But the competent operator knows all details concerning the machine, the power, the lamp, and countless other smaller but no less important items.

It might be interesting to know that the manager of one airdrome in New York City refuses to permit smoking in his theatre. This is nothing out of the ordinary, but it is worthy of attention. He says that he is more than compensated for the small amount of patronage he loses in not allowing smoking by the increase in a better class of patronage for the same reason.

Whether one is the loser or the winner by allowing it or not allowing it is a broad question. There is no doubt that the exhibitor gets a better class of people by prohibiting it. Not that the better classes do not smoke, but more women and children will attend if the use of tobacco is prohibited. If the exhibitor is situated in a district where the patronage of his theatre consists almost entirely of men, permit it, in part of the house, at least. This is, of course, a question to be decided by the individual exhibitor entirely upon the demands of the public to whom he caters.

Taking everything into consideration, it is no easy matter to construct and run an airdrome without a great expenditure of time, trouble and money. But when once it is built and ready for operation and the doors are open for the first time, the wise exhibitor's efforts will surely be rewarded by the public, for whom he has built your theatre.

CONVENTION INVITATION IS SENT BROADCAST

The annual convention of exhibitors which is to take place at the Grand Central Palace, New York, from June 8 to 13 inclusive, will be solely and purely a business meeting, and no politics will be introduced. The following invitation has been issued by the secretary:

To the exhibitors of the United States:

You are hereby invited to attend the Annual Convention of the International Motion Picture Association and Independent Exhibitors of America, at the Grand Central Palace, New York City, June 8th to 13th.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Directors it was decided that this shall be solely and purely a business convention without the injection of any politics whatsoever. If you will send me your name, address and the name of your theatre, you will receive an identification card. Upon presentation of this identification card in New York you will receive a badge entitling you to admission to the convention and a voice and vote in all matters that may come before it.

You will also receive guest badges and tickets for your family and friends entitling them to admission to the exposition to be held in conjunction with the convention, and to partake in all the entertainments, outings, banquets, balls, etc., that are now being arranged for all visiting exhibitors and their families.

Owing to the fact that the city of New York will celebrate the Tercennial of the purchase of Manhattan Island immediately following our convention, every railroad in the country will be offering very low excursion rates to New York. This convention and exposition will afford a real education to every live exhibitor in the country who is seeking to better the conditions of his own business and the motion picture business in general.

So don't forget to write at once asking for an identification card. Address H. W. Rosenthal, 136 Third avenue, New York City.

St. Paul Houses Swing To Pictures

The Metropolitan, City's Finest Theatre, Takes Plunge—Orpheum Deserts Two-a-Day for Film Programs

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

St. Paul, Minn., May 12.

EVERY other resident of the 236,000 people in this city go to a movie show once a week, in the opinion of E. C. Barroughs, manager of the Orpheum Vaudeville Theatre of this city who has announced that after June the Orpheum would put on motion picture dramas. With the same statement that the Orpheum has felt the sway of the public and was going over to motion pictures, comes the announcement from L. N. Scott, manager of the Metropolitan, St. Paul's largest and finest theatre, that motion pictures were being booked at his theatre for the summer.

Trade Notes

A RECENT patent issued in Great Britain covers an invention which prevents the spread of fire in cinematographs, by providing means for lowering the support for the film-carrying devices into a liquid container, when a fire occurs.

The well-known British inventor, W. Fries-Greene, has recently filed a patent for an apparatus for coloring cinematograph films.

Walter Hillier Anderson lately filed a group of patents relating to cinematography in Great Britain.

Paul Melville Pierson and Frederick Wilhelm Hochstetter, both of New York, have recently filed patents in Great Britain for various motion picture devices and processes for restoring pictures on film.

The well-known German firm, Carl Zeiss, of Jena, Germany, recently filed a patent for a film to be used for projection of cinematographic color pictures.

Dufay Gets German Patent

Dufay, the French inventor of a new system of color cinematography, has recently obtained the German patent corresponding to his French patents of 1912 for the same subject. The Dufay process is also known under the name of "Disptichrome."

Eastman Interested in "Non-Flam" Film

A patent filed by the Eastman Kodak Company in 1909 has recently been issued. This patent covers a solution of acetyl-cellulose intended for non-inflammable films. When will they be on the market?

It Has Been Done

In an article in a New York daily newspaper Garrett P. Serviss suggests various scientific scenarios, which according to the author should be very interesting. It must be said that most of the ideas suggested by Mr. Serviss have already been produced on film, but the negatives are still in the manufacturers’ safes, the reason for this being unknown to the writer.

Cleaning Films

We read in a trade paper a suggestion about benzol which is recommended as an excellent film cleaner. We must therefore, in the interest of all the trade, call the reader’s attention to the fact that benzol has been in use for years in Europe and finally abandoned by the best factories in view of the product being so dangerous.

In the issue of April 25, we suggested trichlorethylene instead of benzol, and we take this opportunity to again remind our readers of the already well-known superiority of trichlorethylene to benzol as a film cleaner.

Why Not Also in Trade Papers?

"The Inventive Age" (May issue) contains a two-page article on the new Kinemacolor apparatus, which is signed by Frank C. Perkins.

In view of the fact that the author assumes no responsibility, but simply uses the words "it is stated" or "it is claimed," etc., when he advances something of interest, we hesitate to criticize it, as we are unwise might. It is to be regretted, however, that such communications should not also be submitted to the cinematographic newspapers, which are, or "claim to be," in direct touch with exhibitions and others interested in the industry.

MORE OPERATORS PROTEST

May 7, 1914.

New York City

Dear Sir—It has recently been called to my attention that the Young Men's Christian Association has inaugurated a school for the instruction of motion picture machine operators.

The opening of this school was extensively advertised and apparently has the approval of the city. Mr. Wyanko, the electrical engineer, was present at the above-mentioned school as a matter of fact, the principal speaker on this occasion.

Mr. John Donnermiller, the undersigned, was present as a member of the Examining Board before whom all applicants for motion picture operators were examined. As a matter of fact, the undersigned, also grasped the opening with his presence. (It is understood that Mr. Donnermiller will be the instructor of the class, so I naturally offer my services to his school.)

The undersigned is further connected with the City Examining Board, as I believe a clause in the city charter provides for cases of this kind.

However, the question of most vital importance present engaged in this craft is as to what is to be the result of placing unlicensed men in the field that is already overcrowded.

As Mr. Wyanko stated in his remarks at the opening of this school, there are about nine hundred and fifty (950) motion picture theatres in the Greater City, and approximately two thousand five hundred (2,500) licensed operators. As you can see from the above statement, the undersigned is speaking very conservatively where he places on the unlicensed list an estimate of six hundred (600) moving picture operators.

From all I can discover, no prospect of student of this class, be it current or future, is expected to remain in this craft for more than a few months. As the common prediction is that many of them that do will not remain in the craft for more than a few months. As the common prediction is that many of them that do will not remain in the craft for more than a few months. As the common prediction is that many of them that do will not remain in the craft for more than a few months. Furthermore, if the Young Men's Christian Association do more for their students than is being done by the present money-making institutions that claim to turn out competent operators over night, it would be well for all concerned to light sky before they get their fingers burned.

There were at one time several motion picture operators' schools in Boston, but the authorities put them out of business on the charge of obtaining money under false pretenses.

The great showman, P. T. Barnum, has been dead a few years, but the saying made famous by him lives on, and the prevailing state of affairs only goes to prove that even he did not know how true it was.

The undersigned is aware of the fact that the present two thousand five hundred licensed operators are really division, competent and thoroughly reliable operators—you can see how much chance the so-called "school of a day" has of coming up to their remains promises.

The undersigned will give this communication publicity with a view to disillusioning young men and others as to the life and death of an operator is "all beer and skittles," as I remain yours for better possibilities.

Olympic Ordinance Stays in Committee

Owners of New Buffalo Theatre Protest in Vain Against Delay in Reporting New Legislation—Opening Is Postponed

BUFFALO, N. Y., May 14.

The owners of the new Olympic Theatre on Lafayette Square, over which there has been a great deal of trouble with regard to building ordinances, as regards safety to patrons, told the individual members of the board of councilmen last Thursday that they were losing $500 a week in interest alone that the ordinance held up the proposed new ordinance legalizing the construction of the building which, as it stands now, is in violation of the ordinance. Sufficient votes, however, could not be mustered to put the ordinance through the aldermen.

The owners of the theatre have gone along with the construction of the building in violation of the safety ordinances adopted just after the Iroquois Theatre horror in Chicago.

A move was made to get the matter out of the committee of nine after the Olympic representatives had promised to rent space for a court at an annual rental of $6,500 a year from the German Insurance Company.

This, it was said, would give a court on but one side of the building and not on both sides, as prescribed by the ordinance, and the attempt was made outside the committee to get action on Thursday.

It is said the Olympic management proposed to open the theatre on May 15, but this move on the part of the councilmen was probably any possibility of such action. The new group talk of the councilmen refusing to take action on the Olympic proposition until the Mayor's "safety first" committee reports.

“LUCEILLE LOVE: THE GIRL OF MYSTERY”
(Gold Seal—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

The fifth of the series, released May 12. As the plot is unfolded, chapter by chapter, the picture improves. The advancement is very apparent in this chapter, and makes us desirous of seeing just what will happen to Lucille when she boards the Chinese “junk ship, as we are informed she will do in the next picture to be released in a week’s time.

Adding to her already long list of adventures, Lucille gets herself into many different varieties of trouble from all of which, as might be expected, she extricates herself. In falling into a subterranean city she meets with a tribe of man monkeys, and has difficulty in eluding them. During an upheaval of the ground she is thrown into a fissure and on landing arrives in the buried city. The fire scenes in this are very well worked out. The view of the city itself, all ruins, is also an impressive one.

A number of very beautiful natural scenes were introduced through various parts of the picture. Lucille is required, in order to avoid the “wild” animals, to climb over a long trellis work, hand over hand. This she does with her usual grace. Both Francis Ford and Grace Cunard are working very hard to make this series unusually good and they are succeeding.

Yet with all its merits, there are several small things that ought to be left out for the good of the film. The animals were quite tame, looking as though they were harmless. One or two other inconsistencies, in comparing this with the previous reels, were apparent. But, as predicted in the first chapter, the pictures get more and more exciting each issue, and the work improves. They are now far past average.

AN OMAHA JUDGE’S WARNING
Special to The Motion Picture News
Omaha, Neb., May 13.

Police Magistrate Charles E. Foster, of Omaha, voiced a decisive opinion from his bench the other morning condemning proprietors of motion picture theatres who permit “hams” in their places. He had just fined Albert Rose $5 for making obscene remarks while sitting behind Mrs. J. C. Brown, 602 North Seventeenth street, in a motion picture show at Seventeenth and California streets.

“The suburban theatres, which I attend more than the others, are community centers,” he said, “where I know half of the people who are seeing the pictures with me. These theatres are the highest class. In the downtown district the proprietors of shows are indifferent as to whom they admit. A man who is drinking should be excluded because his breath is obnoxious. A vile wretch such as this Rose should be thrown out. It would raise the standard of the attendance in a number of the theatres if the proprietors would throw out such people.

“I am almost impressed enough to advocate separate rows of seats for such people—such as the ‘Jim Crow’ cars of the South.”

“THE SOUTHERNERS”
(Edison)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A three-reel drama of the Civil War, a subject that never fails to please the public; just the feature for this time of the year and very appropriate for any Memorial Day program.

The outside scenes of the old Southern mansions and their spacious grounds were taken in Florida under the direction of Mr. Ridgely. They were well laid and it is obvious that great care has been taken in producing them.

The drama closes with an incident in the battle of Mobile Bay, showing the scenes on Admiral Farragut’s flag ship, the Hartford, while he is bombarding Fort Morgan. These scenes were taken in the Edison studio, New York City.

Mr. Collins, the director of this end of the picture, had the whole ship set for the camera, when the recent fire broke out and destroyed all his first efforts, but the scene was laid again and this time was successfully filmed. The photo-drama is taken from Cyrus Townsend Brady’s famous novel.

The drama is not crammed full of terrible battles, as is usually the case in war pictures, but is more of a love story with the terrific struggle as a side issue. Despite this, it holds one’s interest through to the last scene, where Peyton is restored to his sweetheart, Mary, after the war is over.

The photography is of the highest grade, all the scenes showing exceptionally clear and bright. The scene in which the Hartford is bombarding Fort Morgan in the gray of the dawn, is especially well shown on the screen.

The story: Peyton, a Southerner by birth, casts his lot with the North at the beginning of the war. His father and brother, both broken-hearted at his choice, stand by the South. Mary Anan, Peyton’s sweetheart, is also for the South. She deserts Peyton and promises to wait for Darrow, another Southerner, to return, but he is killed in the battle of Chickamunga, which is vividly shown on the screen.

Mary, relenting, welcomes Peyton home after the war. He and his father clasp hands like true gentlemen. The story closes with a beautiful scene, in which Mary, Peyton, his father and mother are shown in quiet happiness.
“THE LIGHTNING CONDUCTOR”
(Sawyer, Inc.)
REVIEWED BY LESLEY MASON

HERE is a play—or better, a photostory—in which all the charms of a lively, laughable romance and all the charms of a fine “scenic” meet and are happily blended into an entertaining whole. It is a travelogue and a tale in one, a modern “Sentimental Journey Through France and Italy,” with Cupid for your guide instead of Thomas Cook.

Every reader of modern fiction knows the Williamson novel to which this picture owes its plot and title—a delightfully whimsical story of modern chivalry, in which the knight-errant is a wealthy bachelor in a motor-car, not on a charger, with duster instead of armor and goggles in place of helmet and visor, and his “lady de grace” the prodigal daughter of a New York banker who has fallen afoul of an ancient automobile and a rascally chauffeur.

The twentieth-century Bayard, who is our hero, goes to the rescue of “beauty in distress,” disguised as his own chauffeur. Before he is through he has given the French villain a ducking, fought and captured a band of Apaches and been arrested by his American rival as his own murderer, besides being continually reminded by his “goddess” and all her companions that he is not a gentleman, but only a chauffeur. In the end, however, he proves that he is as good a gentleman as he had been a “Lightning Conductor,” and “you know the rest from the books you have read.”

Given a story of such ingenuity, where comedy and romance are tripping over each other all the time, embellished with some of the most inspiring scenery France and Northern Italy have to offer, and with Dustin Farnum, Walter Hale and William Elliott steering the play and the automobiles in it to their destination, and you have entertainment fit to offer any audience that ever sat in a motion picture theatre.

The route of the picture lies south from Normandy by way of Paris, through Orleans and the chateaux country, Gascony and Provence to Biarritz, thence eastward through Carcassonne and Toulon into the Riviera, with a pause at Monte Carlo before scaling the heights of the Maritime Alps to reach Como, the end of the picture and the culminating scene of the romance.

Numerous scenes along the route are incorporated into the narrative, but these are introduced with rare discretion and are always as welcome as they are appropriate. The temptation to spend a few hundred feet on the sights of Paris is admirably overcome. Instead, the producer was wise enough to wait for less familiar scenes. Magnificent glimpses of some of the finest of the chateaux are granted, and stretches of the flawless French roads are brought into the story.

But all these earlier views were eclipsed by the panoramas afforded of the Maritime Alps, where the roads wind from the summits of the passes down to the valleys for miles, and the spectator watches the automobiles appear and disappear and reappear along the gleaming white highway until it is lost in the distance. Considered as a novelty, the spirited views of the French naval crews racing on the harbor of Toulon are the finest in the series.

By a feat of artistic strategy the postal-card inserts are transformed into an actual source of comedy, and some of the heartiest laughs of the afternoon at the Comedy Theatre exhibition were awarded to the master of ceremonies (John Winston’s) epigrammatic and ludicrous accounts of his predication to his friend Lord Lane, at Aix.

“The Lightning Conductor” was seen under auspicious circumstances, for the Comedy Theatre has never been invaded by a projection machine before, and the audience were prepared to make many allowances for defects in the presentation. But though it was an extemore exhibition in that respect, the presentation of the picture was, on the whole, clearer and smoother than many which have occurred in theatres, dedicated to motion pictures and, by consequence, equipped to give the finest possible results—a fact which speaks volumes for the superior character of the picture itself.

Farnum, Hale and Elliott are a trio well met, and their acting will prove a continual source of delight and merriement to an audience.

“PETROF THE VASSAL”
(Features Ideal)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS picture is an accurate dramatic adaptation of Ivan Turgeneff’s famous Russian novel, “The Bread of Campions.” While the action of the master for the most part is in some places, if one is looking for good photography, pretty scenes and fine acting of its kind, then this is the drama to have; but in thrilling and rapid action it is somewhat deficient. A character like Petrof is not often delineated on the screen, and it is interesting to follow his course through life. One doesn’t know whether to admire, pity or condemn him, but surely his career will interest the average man and woman. The ending of the story is rather disappointing, but it is the ending of the book, and under the circumstances no other would fit as well with the whole story.

Petrof, once rich, seeks employment, and becomes the servant in the house of a Prince who shamefully neglects his wife. Petrof falls in love with her, and after her husband’s death a child is born to her. All think that she is the daughter of the Prince, except Petrof who knows that he is the child’s father.

Twenty years later, Petrof, while under the influence of liquor, tells his daughter’s husband and friends of her rightful parentage. When sober he says that he lied to save his daughter’s name. He is discharged from the household and goes forth in sorrow.

Photographically the picture is deserving of the greatest praise. The exteriors, especially the forest scenes, are beautiful; the few interiors that appear are well laid. The lighting is good and pleasing to the eye. No fault can be found with the entire production in regard to these points.

MILWAUKEE WILL SEND BIG DELEGATION

Milwaukee, Wis., May 12.

Milwaukee will send a big delegation headed by President Charles H. Phillips, of the International Motion Picture Association, to the convention in New York City, if the plans laid recently are carried out. Great enthusiasm was displayed and many members promised to go even if not appointed as a delegate.

Here Are a Few Opinions on
The Perils of Pauline

Ditmas Theatre, Perth Amboy, N. J.
We have found the drawing powers of this picture to be tremendous. We are more than pleased with the results we have had.

Gustav Barrer
M. & S. Amusement Co., Newark, N. J.
"The Perils of Pauline" has been doing a business far beyond all expectations. We have more than tripled our business on the nights we show Pauline.

M. H. Mark, Inc.
Wm. Fox Circuit, New York.
We wish to congratulate you on the big scoop you have made with "The Perils of Pauline." It is the biggest feature picture ever produced.

A. C. Bell
The Grand Theatre, Batavia, N. Y.
"The Perils of Pauline" scored one of the biggest successes ever known to this theatre. The box-office receipts are far beyond my expectations.

W. H. Heltne
The Amuse-U, Charlotte, N. C.
When I signed up for "The Perils of Pauline" I was naturally anxious. Now I must say that it is the biggest drawing-card and the biggest money-getter I have ever shown.

E. H. Davis
Griffin Amusement Co., Griffin, Ga.
The only fault my patrons find with "The Perils of Pauline" is that it does not come every week. It certainly is a money-getter and the crowds are getting bigger every week.

Crystal Theatre, Greenville, Texas.
Of all the drawing-cards yet produced I have never seen anything that equals "The Perils of Pauline."

W. A. Johnson
Southern Amusement Co., Jacksonville, Fla.
We are showing this feature on Monday, which has usually been a dull day with us. Now our Monday receipts are more than $50 greater than they were before we started to show "The Perils of Pauline." It is a great picture, and we are naturally much pleased.

Rooster Theatre Co., Rochester, N. Y.
We consider "The Perils of Pauline" an excellent drawing card. We can gladly recommend it to any exhibitor as absolutely the best of the serial films we have ever used.

E. J. James
Smyo Theatre, Sarasota, N. Y.
I have run three releases of "The Perils of Pauline," and have turned people away at each showing.

T. Lardine
Diamond Theatre Co., Tuscaloosa, Ala.
We ran the first two episodes on rainy days and played to capacity audiences on each occasion. The third episode came on a beautiful day, and we moved it to our new theatre, which seats five hundred people, and there played to capacity.

It's Just About Time YOU Booked

The Perils of Pauline

You Are Losing Money

every day you neglect to get in your order for this great series that is coming money for the exhibitors who have been showing it. Did you read what the wise men say? They are the men who were alive and recognized an opportunity to make money when they saw it. Some of them signed in fear and trembling, but they are the happiest men in the business to-day.

You Can Get The Money

in your town by booking Pauline right away. Get the first episode and all the others. If you wish, do as one big exhibitor in New York City did, run the episodes once a week till you catch up to the schedule, and then keep on running the future episodes as they are released. It sure means money to you.

Heavy Bookings

"The Perils of Pauline" is the biggest drawing-card we ever put out. The bookings are a record-breaker. We put on the market more prints of this great feature than most firms make of half a dozen put together. And we are prepared to put out more, so that every exhibitor will be assured of an early run. We can take care of you on every episode in good shape.

The Board of Censors

You wouldn't look for much enthusiasm from the Board of Censors, who have to look at all kinds of pictures from morning to night. When they were in the office looking over "The Perils of Pauline" their comments were wonderfully enthusiastic. One member said: "I hadn't paid much attention to this film, but I must find out where they can be seen, so I can take the children. They are the best pictures I have ever seen."

And there you are.

THE HAND OF DESTINY
(4 PARTS)

This great four-part feature is an old story in a new dress. It tells the tale of a man falsely accused of a crime he did not commit. His wife and small daughter are left to shift as best they may. The son of the real criminal in the meantime lives on the fat of the land. Fate throws the son and daughter together finally. The son only knows that the girl is the daughter of a criminal and tries to bend her to his will. Not succeeding, he tries to have her fiancé throw him over by telling him of her father's disgrace. However, his father's partner in crime, to whom the girl has been kind, finally tells all and clears her father's name.

"The Hand of Destiny" is a strong film from beginning to end. It is clean, yet intensely dramatic. The situations are thrilling. Taken all round it is a wonderful feature.

"The Cream of American and European Studios"
Welcome by a poem from the pen of Hugh d’Arcy and the cordial greetings of his small army of employees and associates, Sieg mund Lubin returned to his office in Philadelphia on May 11, after an absence of more than six weeks in Europe.

As a special surprise the manufacturer found upon his return that General Manager Ira M. Lowry had ordered rushed to completion a new office building, two stories in height, which was entirely constructed during Mr. Lubin’s absence abroad.

Since Mr. Lubin’s absence, General Manager Lowry has also opened the new Betzwood factory, and this enormous plant, with three times the capacity of the Philadelphia institution, is available for producing 6,000,000 feet of film every week in the year.

Harold M. Shaw, the director of “The House of Temperly,” which played during the week of May 11 at the Strand, New York, with marked success, is a comparatively young man to have registered such an achievement as his photo-dramatizaplayed with Amelia Bingham, Joseph Jefferson and other famous stars. After joining the Edison Company he became one of its producers, then went to the Imp Universal, and finally the position of chief producer with the London Film Company. In this capacity, audiences on both sides of the water are bound to become acquainted ere long with the Shaw methods and Shaw standards as exemplified in a series of successes, of which “The House of Temperly” is but the first.

Fritzi Brunette recently turned down a very flattering offer to accompany a well-known star feature producing company to Europe.

Miss Brunette, who formerly appeared in a prominent brand of pictures released by the Universal Film Company, says she prefers to remain in the United States even if this country does go to war with Mexico. “No matter how hard the times may become as the result of a great or long-protracted war,” commented Miss Brunette, “I do not believe the demand for motion picture entertainment will fall off even a tiny bit.”

Now that Miss Brunette has announced her intention to return to motion pictures, she will doubtless have many offers to choose from, as she is a highly talented actress and very popular with the fans everywhere. She is considering one already.

Ned E. Depinet, assistant general manager of the Consolidated Film Exchange, of Dallas, Texas, is now in Atlanta, spending a quiet honeymoon.

Francis Ford, the director of the Universal’s “Lucille Love” series, is said to have recently vaccinated three hundred South Sea Islanders. These negroes, who have been playing parts in the “Lucille” series, are very susceptible to smallpox, and it was by way of a precaution that the operations were performed.

It is now said that the natives have a great veneration for Mr. Ford’s surgical abilities. At the completion of the series these natives will be returned to the Society Islands.

George DuBois Proctor, who has been connected with the publicity department of the Mutual Film Corporation for some time, has resigned his position, to accept the position of advertising manager of the Popular Plays and Players, Inc., at 1600 Broadway, New York.

W. Bob Holland, formerly managing editor of the American Press Association, and more recently editorial director of the Newspaper Feature Syndicate, has become associated with the Mutual, as a member of Phil Mindil’s staff. Big things are ahead for Holland, his friends hope.
Milton E. Hoffman, who has been attending to the publicity and advertising of the World Film Corporation for some time, has resigned from that company. His plans for the future have not been made public.

Mr. Hoffman is well known for his years of experience in the amusement game. He was connected for some time with William Morris as treasurer of the American Theatre and was considered to be his right-hand man. The World Film Corporation are losing a valuable asset, Charles D. Sh który has been engaged to take his place.

Lew Dockstader, the minstrel, will appear in the production "Dan" for the All-Star Feature Corporation. A number of his black-face men will be with him under the guidance of Augustus Thomas.

A Wurlitzer organ has been installed in Proctor's Fifth Avenue Theatre, New York.

John B. Rock, of the Vitagraph Company, showed "A Million Bid" and "Goodness Gracious!" to a number of exhibitors in St. Louis recently. It is said they were very enthusiastic over the productions.

The Zenith Feature Film Company, of Duluth, Minn., have completed arrangements with Herbert Blache, whereby the complete output of the Blache studios will be handled by them for Minnesota, Wisconsin and North Dakota.

The forthcoming production of "Damon and Pythias" will be directed by Otis Turner. Anna Little, Herbert Rawlinson and William Worthington will play the principal parts.

Warner's Features, Inc., have transferred their Buffalo, N. Y., office to Syracuse and have opened sub-offices in Buffalo and Albany.

Francis Ford and Grace Gunard are now making the seventh picture of the series of "Lucille Love" stories. Most of the action takes place on a yacht at sea.

Enid Markey, one of the leading women for the New York Motion Picture Company, who was badly injured in the taking of the five-reel picture, "The Wrath of the Gods," has now nearly recovered.

Webb's electrical pictures have just finished a picture showing De Wolfe Hopper reciting "Casey at the Bat" which will soon be on the bill at the Fulton Theatre, New York.

Beefsteak to Famous Players Directors

TWO THIRTY-THREE members of the Famous Players Film Company's organization gathered at a beefsteak dinner in Reisenweber's, New York City, on the evening of May 6, given as a farewell tribute to Edwin S. Porter, technical director of the Famous Players, and Hugh Ford, who sailed May 7 for a tour of Europe, during which they will produce a series of spectacular feature films.

Those present, besides the guests of the evening, were President Adolph Zukor, Daniel Frohman, who was toastmaster; Directors J. Searle Dawley, Francis Powers, Thomas N. Hefron, Frederick A. Thomson and James Kirkwood; Richard Murphy, Jack Stricker, August Kramer, William Reilly; representing the scenic and mechanical departments; camera men, William Marshall, William Martinetti, Lyman H. Broening, and Emmet Williams; Al Lichtman, sales manager; Al Kaufman, studio manager; Frank Meyer, laboratory manager; Arthur Lehing, and B. P. Schulberg.

The gathering, on the eve of the inception of one of the greatest international tours ever undertaken for film purposes, was a unique one. The subjects selected for production abroad are some of the most notable plays ever secured for the screen.

Al Lichtman's recollection is that after the dinner, or as soon after as he can remember, the entire party, escorted by Messrs. Porter and Ford to the boat, but Schulberg told his wife that the reason he stayed out until five o'clock was because the subway was flooded.

It is announced by the All-Star Feature Corporation that the production of "The Jungle" will be ready for release May 25th. George Nash, Gail Kane, Clarence Handysides, Ernest Evers, Julia R. Hurley, Maxine Hodges, Mary McCabe, and Upton Sinclair are the principals.

Seven hundred feet of film, depicting the memorial ceremonies at the Brooklyn Navy Yard in honor of the nineteen sailors and marines who fell at Vera Cruz, are being marketed through the William L. Sherry Feature Film Company. The picture was shown at the Strand Theatre, New York, on the evening of the day the ceremonies were held.

"The Littlest Rebel" company, which has been in Augusta, Ga., in the making of that picture, were given many honors during their stay. The town declared a holiday on their arrival and the Mayor and other officials participated in the actual work.

Contracts have been signed between the Broadway Picture Producing Company and Thomas E. Shea to present Shea in his stage success, "The Man-o'-warsman," in five reels.
"CABIRIA," A SUPER-SPECTACLE

First Presentation in This Country of the Long-Heralded, Mammoth Production from the Pen of Gabriel d'Annunzio Picturing the Overthrow of Carthage by Rome—Will Probably Be Shown at the Metropolitan Opera House

A NEW meaning was given to the words, "motion picture," and a new definition to the possibilities of the Cine-matographic art when "Cabiria," the Itala Film Company's mammoth production of Gabriel d'Annunzio's drama written around the overthrow of Carthage by Rome in the second century before Christ, was displayed in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Astor on Saturday, May 9.

The picture well-sigh beggars description. Words are feeble in their capacity to convey the impressions created by the series of stupendous spectacles which are here welded together into one gigantic photodrama by the shrewdest craftsmen of Italy's motion picture world.

Suffice it to say that there was no one in the large audience so sophisticated in the art as to be able to maintain a professional indifference to the marvels that were continually materializing on the screen before him. Veterans vied in the fervency of their praise with novices to whom a lesser picture would have seemed wonderful.

It is a foregone conclusion, of course, that "Cabiria" will be seen at only the largest theatres in the country. The scale on which it must be exhibited, and the reputed plans of the management for its musical accomplishment, preclude anything else. Indeed, word has already gone forth that the super-spectacle will be witnessed by New Yorkers in the Metropolitan Opera House.

The sensitive, whose feelings of artistic propriety might be shocked by witnessing the invasion of the precincts of grand opera by a "mere" motion picture, may console themselves with the knowledge that "Cabiria" was produced on a scale commensurate with anything achieved in the American operatic field, and that if d'Annunzio, the world's most fastidious and esthetic poet, thought well enough of the motion picture to devote his powers to it, they can afford to condone the offense (?)?

ITALY has seemed, during the last twelve months, with productions rivalling each other in their enormous dimensions and cost. Cines, Pasquale, Gloria, Itala and Ambrosio have been engaged in a feverish competition for the distinction of giving to the world the greatest motion picture drama of the age. Ambrosio, indeed, has already on the market a picture on the same subject as "Cabiria."

The Itala film, however, is the first to reach this country, and until it is equaled or eclipsed by a greater must be conceded to be the "derier cri" in cinematography. When "Nero and Agrippina" arrives, as eventually it will, it may be a case of "times change and our opinions with them." But "Cabiria" has revealed new possibilities where all seemed known before.

Two years were spent in the production of the picture, it is said. The estimated cost, according to figures from abroad, was between $150,000 and $300,000. "Cabiria" is ten reels in length, and occupies three hours in the presentation. In this respect it is some thousands of feet shorter than "Nero," which is declared to run through 16,000 feet of film.

In England the picture will be presented with an orchestra of eighty pieces and a choir of fifty voices. If "Cabiria" is seen at the Metropolitan it will undoubtedly be given the same musical setting.

"Cabiria" is pre-eminently an example of what the motion picture can accomplish in bringing back to life races, nations and civilizations long dead, in making history live for those whose imaginations are not quick enough to vivify printed records and documents, in revealing human nature the same from age to age. The brilliance and scope of d'Annunzio's imaginative genius created a scenario which formed a terrific standard for the producing company to attain; the picture is a testimonial to the fact that they have succeeded.

Thomas Bedding, whose authoritative knowledge of the photographic art pre-eminently qualifies him to speak on this subject with authority, has this to say of the production: "I do not think you could have better production, acting and photoplay than this film of 'Cabiria' manifests. Hypocriticism might concern itself with the titling, the length and maybe the superabundance of minute incidental action in the film, but these are not faults: they are evidences of scrupulous Italian attention to detail, and as such should be respected.

"There is one important respect in which this great picture transcends all others. It is the first film to be truly stereoscopic, and as such deserves the highest esteem. I long doubted the possibility of getting a stereoscopic effect in a motion picture. But you have it in 'Cabiria,' and the makers of the picture deserve credit for this advance in the science of the subject.

"The reception accorded to 'Cabiria' in the United States should act as an incentive to other motion picture makers to emulate the efforts of their Italian confreres. Great though this picture is, there is room for many productions of equal calibre. A young, receptive, assimilative and progressive people like that of this country has all the capacity and potentiality of profiting by this valuable object-lesson in the art of the motion picture."
"THE HOUSE OF TEMPERLEY"
(Cosmofotofilm—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY LESLEY MASON

To discuss this picture without seeming to exaggerate is difficult; yet, without seeming to exaggerate it is impossible to do justice to its manifold merits. In photography, it is superb. The lighting is without an appreciable flaw. The acting is characterized by rare ease and spontaneity. The story is told with rapidity and continuity, and the sequence of scenes is adroitly manipulated so as to forward, not retard, the action at every point. Unnecessary scenes are conspicuously absent.

But, after all, the most substantial praise that can be bestowed upon "The House of Temperley" is that it is a finely balanced, elegantly wrought example of the motion picture producer's art, a thoroughly unified photodrama that cannot be taken apart by the critic without injustice to the excellences of the work.

Harold M. Shaw, whose work was familiar to American exhibitors while he was with the Edison and the Imp companies, directed the production, the first of the London Film Company, for which Paul H. Cromelin, of 130 West Forty-Second street, New York, is the American agent. Conan Doyle's novel, "Rodney Stone," known on the stage as "The House of Temperley," offers the ambitious director a fertile field in which to exercise his resources, and Mr. Shaw has used to marvelously good advantage his screen generalship in this production.

He has accomplished the double result of weaving a series of pictures into a single, telling drama, and at the same time of making each scene complete in itself, so that every moment contributes its share of dramatic significance to the total power of the picture.

Shaw's handling of the two fights, the impromptu set-to at the sportsmen's dinner, and the ten-thousand-pound contest on Crawley's Downs is nothing less than masterly. For the dramatic intensity of the encounters between Sir Charles Temperley and Hawker, in which Captain Jack plays a prominent part, equal credit is due Shaw and his company. In this company, indeed, are some names and none of note.

Ben Webster, one of England's finest character actors, portrays the venerable, yet gay-blooded head of the house of Temperley with such skill that while his failings are evident, the winsomeness of his nature and his inherent nobility make him irresistible. Charles Maude, of the famous English theatrical family, is Captain Jack, and a captivating figure of a hero he makes. Charles Rock, as Hawker, is a thoroughgoing villain, all in one piece and all villainy.

These men make you feel the limitations of the word "actor," even though they are such as have given the title its honors and glories. They live their parts, not merely act them; they not only impersonate them, but bring the figures to life and carry their audience back to the bare-knuckle days of the English prize-ring with them.

"The House of Temperley" appeals at once as a "period" play and as a drama of human nature. Sir Charles Temperley, a patronian with a pathetic fondness for gambling, falls an easy prey to the unscrupulous Sir John Hawker, and after being induced to foreswear his favorite vice, is persuaded to back his own ring favorite against Hawker's "dark horse" for ten thousand pounds. The amount of the wager is fixed by Captain Jack, who induces Ginger Stubbs, a retired fighter and a Temperley tenant, to fight for the honor of the house.

Hawker's spies report to him the prowess of Stubbs and Sir John, foreseeing defeat, resolves to kidnap Stubbs and take the purse by forfeit. The kidnapping is carried out, but Captain Jack holds the enemy's hand in the ring to save the wager, and defeating Hawker's man, Sir Charles, suspecting the knavery of his adversary and realizing that in wooing the young heiress he has courted he is interfering with Jack's happiness, deliberately challenges Hawker to a duel. Hawker, a dead shot, wounds Sir Charles fatally by a foul, but he is brought down a second later by a bullet from the wounded man's revolver.

Sir Charles's last act is to unite the lovers' hands across his own prostrate form, and as he breathes his last, the eyes of his friends and family are wet with tears, as will be those of many an audience that watches this culminating scene.

"THE BATTLE OF TORREON" AND "THE LIFE OF GENERAL VILLA" (Mutual—Seven Reels)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

Although properly speaking these are really two pictures, the connection between them is such that they are projected as one, only a sub-title separating them. "The Battle of Torreon," which was photographed by the Mutual photographer in Mexico, is shown first, and is not very long. Scenes from the actual battle are worked into the drama "The Life of General Villa," which was made by the Reliance and Majestic companies under the supervision of D. W. Griffith, and W. Christy Cabanne.

Very little of the actual battle of Torreon is shown. There are several scenes showing the discharging of heavy guns, the snipers picking off the soldiers as they advance and the burning of saturated corpses after the battle. Knowing that many of the scenes are theatrical only, it is hard to distinguish which are the real fight and which are not.

Considering the difficulties under which the camera man labored, the photography is unusually good. The alkali dust and the smoke from the guns injured the clearness, but not sufficiently to ruin the effect.

The drama, "The Life of General Villa," may or may not have any foundation of truth, but the fact remains that it makes very interesting entertainment. The plot is unravelled in a competent manner by a good company of players. It tells of Villa, still a young man, and his aspirations. His sister is ruined by some Federal officers, and his home wrecked. Later he becomes the leader in a revolution which grows to the proportions of the present Constitutionalist army. A few glimpses of Villa are seen.

"THE GENTLEMAN CROOK"
(Entable—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

This picture was originally made in six reels. At the last moment it was decided to cut it down to four, which accounts for the inconsistencies appearing in several places. The plot is melodramatic and contains a plentiful number of thrills.

Jack Connern, a gentleman gang leader, has invented a number of bombs which foreign governments are trying to buy. His son, who hates his father's mode of life, meets Nell, a detective, and becomes her friend. The father again gets hold of the boy, but Dan is rescued by Nell. Through many adventures Nell and her mother go in order to arrest the crook, finally succeeded. Jack, the crook, is killed by the premature explosion of one of his own bombs.
"HEARTS OF OAK"
(Mohawk Film Company—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

A VIVID visualization of the drama by James A. Herne, played by a capable cast headed by Ralph Stuart and Violet Horner in the parts of Terry Dennison and Crystal, respectively. The others in the cast are Wilbur Hudson as Owen, George Middleton as David, Frederick Roland as Ned, Del De Lewis as Old Luke, James Fitzgerald as the Stranger, Ardine Stark as little Crystal, and Joseph Moore as little Ned. Wray Physioc directed the production.

The story is very pretty, somewhat along the lines of "Way Down East," not in point of plot, but in similarity of characters. The rudimentary foundation of the plot probably comes from the old poem "Enoch Arden," although, of course, the story deals with different angles of the same subject. There is no pretense of having a new idea pictured. The beauty of the film is the fact that the story is old, that it has been seen on the stage in almost every hamlet in the country as well as Broadway. It is the popularity it enjoyed that will draw the people to the box office to see the screen version.

The picture was made along the Coast of Maine, for the most part in the identical scenes originally described. This, of course, gives the picture an undeniable atmosphere. The wreck scene, of which much has been said, was well done.

Ned and Crystal, two orphan children, are adopted by Terry, a miller. Years later their friendship ripens into love and they become engaged. Ned goes away on a trip and Terry, being led to believe the girl loves him, proposes to his ward Crystal, in gratitude for what he has done for her, accepts his offer and they are married.

Some time later Ned returns and coaxes Crystal to go away with him. She refuses. Terry overhears this and, knowing that his "children" love each other, makes the sacrifice and goes away. In a note he tells them that if he should not return in five years they are free to marry.

At the expiration of that time Ned and Crystal marry. Nothing has been heard from Terry. Some time later, however, he returns, blinded by an explosion. He meets all his old friends and then peacefully dies.

CALIFORNIA SHRINERS MAKE MONSTER FILM

Buffalo, N. Y., May 14

Last Wednesday was a great day for local Shriners. It was the occasion of the visit of the four temples from California on their way to the annual convention at Atlanta. There was a lot of fun that lasted all day and night, but one of the most interesting things that was disclosed during the visit was the motion picture that is being taken of this great trip of the California temples.

Already 5,000 feet of the "stuff that made Rochester famous" has been exposed to events along the trip from coast to council, and in the fourteen remaining days of the excursion the Golden Staters expect to multiply that quantity by five. The result will be a respectable film record of everything that happened going and coming in, say, twenty reels.

E. R. Freeman, representing the Panama-Pacific Exposition and who is official motion picture operator with the Nobles of the Red Fez, rolled up 1,000 feet on Buffalo's part in the entertainment of the visitors. The completed film will be shown throughout the country at the cities visited and throughout the state of California. It will also be exhibited at the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

"A WOMAN'S TRIUMPH"
(Famous Players—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

AFTER the famous story, "The Heart of Midlothian," from the pen of Sir Walter Scott. The Famous Players may be said to be specialists in introducing a story. In this film, following the opening titles, Sir Walter is seen visualizing the story that has been told to him by gossips. Finally dipping his pen in the ink he strikes out and the scene fades, and Jeanie, the girl who would not lie to save her sister, is dissolved in and out of the scene. The remainder of the characters are introduced in a likeable manner.

The settings throughout are especially apropos. The scene representing Scott's library in which he wrote all his works is authentic, as are other sets. The exteriors were taken in Cuba. The atmosphere is remarkably good, considering the facts as here presented. Laura Sawyer in the part of Jeanie renders some very good work and is well suited for the part. Betty Harte, as her sister, has a vehicle that will make her friends proud. She does the best emotional acting of the production. Others in the cast are thoroughly competent and agreeable in their parts.

"The Heart of Midlothian" has also been produced by the Hepworth Company in England, a review of which appears in this issue. The story as told by the Famous Players differs somewhat from their English contemporaries, both of course holding to the main facts throughout. Parts which Scott did not explain or describe fully are left to the directors to arrange. Consequently the moods of the two differed in some of the minor details.

The story itself is most beautiful, it need hardly be said. The suffering a woman goes through because she will not lie even to save her sister's life is sufficient to make many strong dramatic scenes. There is no turn of melodrama.

“Westerns” for the West
Both Drama and Comedy Are in Demand in Nebraska, Iowa and South Dakota, Report Omaha Bookers

Omaha, Neb., May 13.

WESTERN drama and comedy, with plenty of large, attractive posters to draw attention to the entrance of the theatre, is the demand of motion picture exhibitors in Nebraska, Iowa and South Dakota, according to local bookers. That the demand is increasing and becoming more stable every day, is a noticeable fact in their business, they add.

“It used to be that exhibitors thought the bookers took delight in handing them something,” said Fred Thiele, of the General Film Company, a booker who has been acquainted with the Nebraska trade since it started. “Now the exhibitors believe in team-work, and we are with them. We know our fields now until we can tell in a minute just what an exhibitor at a certain place wants.

“We seldom make mistakes, but when we don’t, we follow the plan of booking a week in advance, which gives us a chance to correct mistakes when one is found.”

“The parcel post has helped us,” said Henry Kaufman, another booker. “We cannot send films by parcel post, of course, but the government system has resulted in much better service being furnished by the express companies.”

“The rough-neck element in our field of exhibitors has gone,” said Charles W. Stombaugh, another local booker. “The exhibitor to-day is a clean, business-like man and he deals in a business-like way. He studies his people, watches them, and finds what kind of pictures they want, then he tells me. Every exhibitor in my territory has an understanding with me until I can tell in an instant just what kind of a picture he wants.”

WICHITA FOR FEATURES

Wichita, Kan., May 12.

A stupendous production of the great drama, “Parsifal,” was the opening attraction of photoplay at Philharmony on Friday and Saturday, May 8 and 9.

The management of Philharmony, No. 217-19 North Lawrence avenue, expect to feature only the great feature pictures now in the market, as well as to present the great dramas and photoplays to be released from time to time.

FILM COMPANIES SUFFER LOSS IN $150,000 FIRE

Colonial Hall at 101st street and Columbus avenue, New York City, in which the studios of Ramo, Inc., and the Life Photo Film Corporation, and the laboratories and storerooms of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company are located, was badly damaged by fire early in the morning of May 14.

Many of the Universal positives and negatives were destroyed and the laboratories gutted. A dozen Universal employees barely escaped with their lives.

Ramo’s damage was chiefly by water and all their negatives were saved. Will S. Davis, the director, was blown downstairs by an explosion, but was not seriously hurt.

Detective Slaughter is supposed to have started the fire. Joe Brandt, of the Universal, could not estimate the amount of damage the morning after the fire. Fire Chief Kenlon declared it would not exceed $150,000.

Several changes in the Universal program have been made necessary by the fire.

The Powers release planned for Friday, May 22, will be “Sisters,” instead of “Pearl of the Sea.” The Victor of the same date will be “A Dis-enchantment” instead of “The Bride.” The Joker for Saturday, May 23, will be “A Strenuous Life” instead of “Mike Searches for His Long-Lost Brother.” The Rex for Sunday, May 24, will be “Avenged” instead of “The Woman in Black.”

"THE HORRORS OF WAR"
(Leading Players Film Corporation—Three Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

It is doubtful whether General Sherman's well-known definition of war has not been used in describing nearly every picture dealing with its horrors, but to use it in describing this production would hardly do the picture justice. If any person can think of a phrase worse than Sherman's, this picture exemplifies it. It forcibly conveys to the mind what a terrible thing war is, and not only war but its dire and unavoidable results.

This wonderful picture deals largely with the tragedy brought on one home through the result of strife. In the actual battle two sons are killed, and this drives the father to drink; later he goes crazy and dies. His death is materially due to his favorite daughter's desertion. Slowly the mother pines away, and at the end there is but one daughter left of the once happy family. This large list of fatalities, together with other general misery, makes the picture sad and gruesome, yet intense and interesting.

Mlle. Renee Sylvain plays the part of Cecile Pernier, the faithful daughter of the family. She is by all odds the star. M. Duquene, M. Bose, M. Mardor, Mlle. Madeleine, Grandjean and Mlle. Marise Dauvray are her main supports. The story is adapted from "The Apprentice," a famous historical novel by Gustave Geffroy. The scene of action is Paris, the time the winter of 1870 and ten years following.

The first reel is devoted entirely to the war. The camp and battle scene are vividly realistic, a large number of soldiers appearing. In their attack on Paris the rebels are worsted. Some of them gain the city, but the regulars then turn the guns on them. The dreadful results, the wrecking of entire houses, the pursuits through the devastated streets, and the wilful murder spread by the victors, can hardly be described by words, but by the camera nothing is left to the imagination.

The rest of the story is pathetic to the extreme and portrays the terrible results that follow on the heels of war. The last reel closes with the lesson that war is a thing to be avoided and peace a thing to be desired.

"COUNTESS HOLGSKA, THE NORWEGIAN SPY"
(Charlot Film Corporation—Three Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

It is seldom that a picture of any sort is entirely taken up with a chase as is the case with this production. Scarcely have one hundred feet of film passed through the machine when the chase starts, nor does it stop until practically the last scene! It begins in automobiles, but before it is over special trains, special steamers, and even an aeroplane have figured prominently.

The picture was taken in Norway and Denmark, and the beautiful scenery afforded by these two countries makes an admirable background for the story. The last scene is especially beautiful and thrilling. Burnes and his ally have been thrown into a heavy sea, and as they near the shore they are seen battling for life against the mountainous waves. From beginning to end the photography and lighting is perfect.

Wanda Treuman plays the principal role. This is the first picture acted by her and her own company; heretofore she has played with other companies in less prominent parts. Her part is hardly deserving of her, in fact none of the characters have considerable roles, for individual acting counts for very little; the success of the picture depends solely on the sensational chase.

Countess Holgska has stolen some valuable papers which belong to the Norwegian ambassador in Berlin. Detective Burnes is employed to regain them, and the picture is all the more exciting as he only has twenty-four hours in which to do it. Numerous times he is bailed by the wit and daring of the Countess, but he finally succeeds in possessing himself of the papers and returning them to their rightful owner.

"THE MASTER OF DEATH"
(I. S. P.—Four Parts)
REVIEWED BY A. DANSON MICHELL

A GERMAN picture which will be found to be excellent entertainment. The feature of the story is a thrilling dive made three times by one of the characters during the course of the story. There are a number of pretty love scenes. The plot is unfolded by a clever cast. Hugo Flink, who plays the principal part, does some excellent dramatic work. His dive is accomplished by sliding down a precipitate incline on his hands and jumping from the end to another slope far below. The cut shows the inventor explaining his plan to the young soldier.

Being discharged unfairly from the army, Peter comes to America. Things get worse and worse and finally he at-temps suicide. He is rescued by a professor, who explains to him that if he has so little use for life, he has a plan that will make him rich. Explaining his hazardous idea to Peter, the latter agrees to do the work.

Sometime later he becomes famous through his dare-devil work and returns to his home town. Here he deceives his mother as to his actual occupation. He resigns from the circus agreeing to make one more dive. This last performance kills him.

FILMING WAR SCENES

Abe Steinberg and A. F. Salomon, camera men of the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation, of Chicago, together with a number of assistants, are now in Vera Cruz, Mexico, securing some real war pictures which they will market in this country.

Proper papers have been obtained for the party from the authorities, and they should have no trouble in getting through. Pictures of the United States fleet in action will be taken.

"MICHAEL STROGOFF" BRINGS ADLER TO SCREEN

The first production of the newly organized feature producers, Popular Plays and Players Company, of which Harry J. Cohen is general manager, will be "Michael Strogoff," with the eminent dramatic actor, Jacob P. Adler, in the role of the courier to the Czar.

The initial production of this company promises a number of novel surprises, one of which will be the introduction of the ten Tartar soldiers now located at the Russian Embassy, Washington, who are being used in several of the scenes, and which necessitates their making the trip from Washington to the Lubin plant at Philadelphia several times a week.

"Michael Strogoff," with Mr. Adler in his original role, will be produced by the Lubin Manufacturing Company with the best of Lubin's stars in support of Mr. Adler. June 1 is the date of release.

I. M. P. A. Directors Appeal to Manufacturers

MEETING of the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York was held Wednesday morning, May 13th, at the Hotel Imperial, New York City, the entire board being present. S. H. Trigger presiding.

Mr. Elliott, secretary of the Safety First Society, was introduced and outlined the work of the Safety First Society, commenting on the assistance that the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York could lend in conjunction with the work of this society. A motion was carried to the effect that the exhibitors lend their cooperation and assistance in the distribution of the Safety First slides in the various picture theatres. William Brandt was appointed chairman.

Mr. Hollaman, the consulting expert of the forthcoming Second International Exposition of the Motion Picture Art, to be held in conjunction with the Convention of the International Motion Picture Association and the Independent Exhibitors of America, at Grand Central Palace, June 8th to the 12th, was then introduced.

A committee representing the Tercentenary Celebration, with A. J. Wells acting as spokesman, outlined the purpose and the action of the Tercentenary Committee.

The following up-State exhibitors were then appointed on the New York State Reception Committee, to act in conjunction with the local committee during the Exposition and Convention: Albany, Harry Weidman; John A. Sucknow, Emil Deiches; Utica, William A. Douque, Joseph Karl, Thomas A. Beckett; Saratoga Springs, J. E. Reardon, Edward Kilhample, H. J. Lux; Syracuse, B. E. Cornell, W. A. Lowery, Thomas Gibbons; Buffalo, R. C. Gettel, J. A. Fierd, P. Holmeister, Harry Mersey, Charles Bowe, John F. Miller; Elmira, M. D. Gibson; Oswego, J. E. Cordingly; Saugerties, John C. Davis; Binghamton, K. M. Davidson, Irving L. Davis; Schenectady, L. C. Smith; Yonkers, May 16th, which was also decided to have a meeting of the Ladies' Entertainment Committee on Sunday afternoon, at 3 p.m., at the Hotel Imperial, to make the preliminary arrangements relative to the entertainment of the visiting exhibitors and their wives and friends of the visiting exhibitors.

The following letter was read by the Chairmen for the approval of the Board of Directors who acted as Advisory Board for the Convention and Exposition Committees:

To the Manufacturers and Tradesmen:

Gentlemen: As you are probably aware, a Convention is to be held at Grand Central Palace, June 8th to 13th, at which, from all indications, FULLY FIVE THOUSAND (5,000) PICTURE THEATRES in the United States and Canada will be represented.

It is a misfortune (not too late to remedy) that the motion-picture exhibitors as a class regarded the manufacturers and distributors with distrust, therefore did not allow them to take part in the conferences. This attitude has given way to an appreciation of the importance in having the manufacturers and distributors join in our consultations. There is a keen desire on our part to have you assist the exhibitors in the solution of vexatious problems. With this end in view, we ask you to attend our Convention every day if you so desire, and more particularly Tuesday and Wednesday, which will be known as "Trades and Talks."

We want to learn something—we want to gain a wide and sound knowledge of our business so as to enable us to see, seize and use our opportunities for the benefit of the whole trade. MAY WE RELY ON YOUR PRESENCE? We believe it will be mutually beneficial.

Hoping to receive a favorable reply, we remain, Yours very truly,

The Committee.

The motion was carried that a copy of the above letter be forwarded to every manufacturer and distributor.
General Film Program

"Max's Vacation." (Pathé, May 19.)—An unusual comedy that contains many gags. The photography is of a high class. Max Linder is as good as ever, and his comedy goes to help him in his part. This makes a lot of trouble before matters are straightened out.

"Under the Skin." (Biograph, May 9.)—Pathetic from start to finish and teaching a good lesson. A variety of scenes are shown, all well told. A woman, who intends to desert her husband, is kept from doing so by hearing the sad story of another woman who had done the same thing.

"The Antique Engagement Ring." (Vitagraph. Two reels. May 9.)—Dorothy Kelly, James Kelly and Mabel Logan play a team of con artists, who in the absorbing feature. Everything in the picture is done by one of the leading companies, except the lighting, which is rather bad in some places. Darrel presents his talky Helen, with an antique engagement ring of great value. They quarrel over Brower, a friend of Helen's, and Darrel leaves for the West. Later Brower and Helen are married. Brower sinks low in life and finally commits suicide. Darrel has prospered in the West, and in the end we find he and Helen are reunited in a novel manner, really due to the engagement ring.

"Two Girls." (Selig. May 9.)—One has brain fever, the other is restrained. The former is happily married and the latter goes wrong. This is a new idea in the film, and makes a serious story of a simple idea. It is slightly exaggerated and may displease some.

"Broccho Billy's Sermon." (Essanay. May 9.)—Comedy to start with, but the reel ends in a pretty lesson. Billy takes the minister's place, first as a joke, but he at last converts all the bad men in Snakeville.

"Building a Fire." (Lubin. Split reel. May 9.)—On the same reel with "With the Burglar's Help." Lubin's man of the house tries to build a fire when the maid persists in sleeping late; his efforts are untimely.

"With the Burglar's Help." (Lubin. Split reel. May 9.)—On the same reel with "Building a Fire." Lubin's man of the house tries to build a fire, but comes near the end. The wife's blow intended for her husband lands on the poor burglar's head, to the great glee of the husband.

Hearts-Selig News Pictorial No. 21. (Selig. May 11.)—Views of the scenes of the recent strike in Colorado open the number. The fashion session and a few serious events follow, and then come some fine scenes of Vera Cruz.

"Miser Murray's Wedding Present." (Vitagraph. May 11.)—An inexpensive and pleasing comedy-drama. The lighting is a little dark in spots. Murray is a kliegotham as well as a miser. His wedding present to his daughter is the breaking off of the two habits, which comes about in a comical manner. Nora Tatum and Mr. Beeson play the principals.

"On the Minute." (Selig. Two reels. May 11.)—A fine drama of love and politics, that contains a number of scenes that are both tense and comical. Murray is somewhat overacted, but will appeal to all. The stenographer of the future is shown in the personages of the various plans of the bosses. The last reel closes with a parade and the stenographer in each other's arms.

"Doc Yak's Temperance Lecture." (Selig. Split reel. May 31.)—On the last portion of the last reel of "On the Minute." A few comical animated cartoons, not as funny as usual.

"In Fate's Cycle." (Biograph. May 12.)—Rather involved and a large number of subplots, but the drama is appealing as a whole. A hot and cold theme, conveyed with conviction of assault, is at length freed and made happy by a clever couple. A drama that will interest the feminine part of the audience.

"Conscientious Caroline." (Edison.)—A fair comedy in which Caroline gets her employer into a lot of trouble and causes herself to be discharged and returned to her agency. To do right, no matter what is hurt.

"Seraphina's Love Affair." (Edison. Split reel. May 12.)—Another good comedy with "Three Knives and a Heathen Chinee." A comedy drama that is rather slow. Seraphina plans to take her father's money and elope with a city man. A lucky mishap causes her to reconsider.

"Three Knives and a Heathen Chinee." (Edison. Split reel. May 20.)—On the same reel with "Seraphina's Love Affair." Three small town cut-up plans to "do" a Chinee. He, however, turns the trick on them. Good comedy.

"Mr. Bunny In Disguise." (Vitagraph. May 14.)—A well-acted comedy of a very funny laugh in this comedy. Bunny assumes the disguise of a Turkish woman to escape from Flora, and he finally succeeds.

"Vengeance Is Mine." (Lubin. May 8.)—An awe-inspiring release, full of dramatic situations and a few comical scenes. The drama illustrates in a pathetic manner the well-known words of the title.

"A Tight Squeeze." (Edison. May 23.)—Another fine comedy serial in which Dolly is the principal factor in rounding up a bunch of criminals.

"The Adventure of the Counterfeit Money." (Edison. May 18.)—The fifth of the comical adventures of Octavius, Amateur Detective. Octavius's good missions are taken for bad, and he at first is mistaken for the counterfeiter, but he clears himself, finds the real one and the story ends in a comical scene.

"The Vengeance of the Vaquero." (Kalem. May 25.)—Ludlow Phillips and Billy Rhodes are the principals. The Mexican atmosphere is good, but the acting is slow. So does Alviso, his aide. Jose secretly hates the Don and, awaiting the right time, he advises Alviso to take the blame, thinking that Delores is the murderer, but Jose confesses in time to save Alviso. The story is well acted and has some good humorous parts.

"The Fringe on the Glove." (Kalem. Two reels. May 18.)—A thrilling drama of the Northwest featuring Carl Blckwell, Jack's brother. The plot is well constructed, and the story ends in a comical scene.

"The Evil She Did." (Selig. May 6.)—A disagreeable drama if the number of fatalities are considered. A flirt causes the death of two men when they start to fight for her, but she still goes on, and meets an end that is both unhappy and disagreeable.

"Tight Shoes." (Kalem. Split reel. May 22.)—On the same reel with "Advance Styles for Fall and Winter 1914-15." Funny John B. Brennan plays the lead. The picture is comical, but could be improved in parts. Bennett has a lot of fun when he goes to a wedding in a pair of borrowed shoes.

"A Meddler with Fate." (Pathé. Two reels. May 7.)—A clever drama, but not desirable reading work in every way. While Anderson is away, his wife marries away another. Her husband finds out and commands her to leave him. Child, but when he sees her actually going he relents, follows her, and is just in time to save her from jumping into fire.

"Advance Styles for Fall and Winter 1914-15." (Kalem. Split reel. May 22.)—On the same reel with "Tight Shoes." A series of comic advertisements that will interest the feminine part of the audience.

"The Broken Chain." (Kleine-Cine. Two reels. May 28.)—Not preserving the two reels; the action drags toward the end. The plot is not a pleasing one to see, for the plot is drawn out and the ending unpleasant. Van gas, a poor artist, marries a woman solely for her wealth, he is deserted and is engaged to a wealthy widow. In the mean time the widow's niece falls in love with him. His first wife warns both of them off and when he finally dies. Vargas becomes insane, and then the reel is dimmed.

"Marrying Gretchen." (Selig. Split reel. May 5.)—On the same reel with "Doc Yak, Bowling." A tawdry comedy, hard to understand, due to the fact that there is no plot, and not giving the spectator many a laugh.

"Making Him Over—For Minnie." (Essanay. May 6.)—With Hennessey, Beverly Reid, Cind Law. A comedy poor comedy showing how a maniac experimented a mechanic in the ways of a gentleman.

"Sandy and Shorty Start Something." (Vitagraph. May 6.)—Robert T. Thorby and J. Easton play the parts of Sandy and Shorty are the holoes; they are exceedingly comical, but the production is a successful one. In fact, there are many antics, they seek solace in horse liniment.

"His Last Call." (Vitagraph. May 7.)—Impossible, but pathetic and appealing from beginning to end. An old actor, long out of work, responds to a call to star again in his one-time bit. After the performance the strain has proved too much for him and he passively passes away.

"Maniacs Three." (Biograph. Split reel. May 7.)—On the same reel with "Gilligan's Accident Policy." A humorous offering in parts, but dry as a whisk. The plot is a combination of two greatly used ones.

"Gilligan's Accident Policy." (Biograph. Split reel. May 7.)—An antiquated comedy furnishing a few laughs. Gilligan takes out a policy and attempts to get hurt; he fails, gets his money back, and is then knocked unconscious by one of his daughter's biscuits. On the same reel with "Maniacs Three."

Hearts-Selig News Pictorial No. 20. (Selig. May 7.)—The news is of a general nature, none of which is worth special mention. Too much Mexican news near the end.

"Batty Bill and the Suicide Club." (Melies. May 7.)—A disgusting comedy. The subtles are barely discernible. The ending is quite vulgar.

"A Snakeville Epidemic." (Essanay. May 7.)—Victor Potel and Margaret Joslin play the parts of a snake and his neighbor's donkey. Prescriptions get mixed and comic results follow, but the invalids are cured.

Universal Program

"Their Vacation." (Joker. May 20.)—Generally the same as usual, is the author of the scenario. An amusing comedy. A waitress and a clerk on their vacation, each working for a different company. Their meeting later proves a revelation.

"Mike Martin's Lost Hotel Brothel." (Edison. May 23.)—A true satire on the society world and the good life. The burlesque of the common brand of "Western," a man and a woman meet in the West and rob one another. A good "Joker."
"The Cure." (Joker. May 29.)—William Wolflord, playing the lead, does some excellent work in the role of an invalid who "gets acute." Feathers and soap, the rule is told, will wash the stains when he is cured. The man who said this fails all Willie Wallace uses the cure.

"Could You Blame Her?" (Nestor, May 28.)—Two Indians; little young certain; novel dancing; good girl; railroad, run; musician, severe; freed smoker; girl flirt. A comedy telling mostly on the antics of a drunken man for humor.

"The Man Within." (Nestor, May 28.)—The bandits who hold up a man to get his money, but make out he is a woman. They are in love, but both are broke. Finally he has the good fortune to win a lottery prize, with a happy result.

"Johnnie from Jonesboro." (Frontier. May 28.)—Poor comedy with absolutely no possible story.

"The Sheriff's Story." (Frontier, May 28.)—A clever which shows the sort of cases a sheriff has captured. In one the man is a young man who turns against his father and makes his life a ruin.

"A Pearl of the Sea." (Powery, May 28.)—An unusual plot that should please. Benson breaks the gaming laws and gets in a rapid way through the use of the wife of a freed by her daughter's son.

"The Siren." (Rex, May 28.)—A Wallace Reid and Dorothy Davenport drama that is very worth. The daughter of a disappeared woman, becomes a "siren" whose love does not change it to make one man pay for every tear her mother shed. She succeeds until she meets "the man." He throws her aside, as she had done with others.

"A Booth There Was." (Rex, May 17.)—Played by Robert Leonard and Hazel Buck. The plot is strong, and follows a boy to buy an "automobile," to compete with the salesman for the hand of the girl. He wins her and the game.

"The Dancing Crank." (Crystal. Split reel. May 19.)—Pearl White in the leading role. The dance appears to be a dancing school kept by an old maid.

"The Master." (Crystal. Split reel. May 19.)—A sheriffs catch and fines a number of "muggers" by sending out a girl to flirt. Rather a good stunt, which should work.

"Universal Ike Has an Elephant on His Hands." (Universal Ike. May 19.)—A laugh throughout. Ike undertakes to run a hotel. The elephant is a side issue.

"In a Persian Garden." (Eclair. Two reels. May 28.)—An allegorical story, dealing with the relationship between baby and mind fantasies. Mildred Bright, who plays the lead, registers some excellent work. Raimond does not marry a woman unless she runs away and kills, contrary to his wish. The story, and the actors in excruciating condition. For the baby's sake she goes back, and the boy hoy takes his wife again and a tender reconciliation follows. The action becomes stereotyped in some scenes.

"Her Heritage." (Beauty. May 19.)—A new plot and some novel ideas help this otherwise pleasant picture. It is likely to appear suggestive to some. Margaretta Fischer and Harry Pollard are the principals. Their heroine, who can't throw her problem before matters are straightened out.

"The Scene of His Crime." (Komic. Split reel. May 16.)—On the same reel with "A Race for a Bride." It is a comedy, and the acting is below the average Western drama. It is cleverly produced and will strike all as comical.

"A Race for a Bride." (Komic. Split reel. May 16.)—On the same reel with "The Scene of His Crime." A comedy, but some good automobile scenes. Together with a few famous drivers. Two crazy gentleman race for a girl; neither wins her, as it happens.

"Two Hungry Tramps." (Royal. Split reel, April 26.)—The tramps are clever, but not at times a little disgusting. Their antics are in the way the try to get a meal as novel as it is funny. On the same reel with "The Tale of a Coat.

"The Tale of a Coat." (Royal. Split reel. April 26.)—On the same reel with "Two Hungry Tramps." Poor comedy in which comedy are mistaken for bears because of their fur coats.

"Mike Joins the Forces." (Royal. May 9.)—A good laugh in almost every scene. The plot is fairy novel. White slice is asleep, a trap steals his uniform, his experiences in it are rare. Made entirely from the chief, but it was only a dream.

"Politeness Pays." (Princess. May 8.)—A fine comedy, inoffensive and with a good moral—the comedy fairly fast running and the reel ends in an uproarious way.

"Our Mutual Girl. No. 17." (Reliance. May 11.)—In this chapter Margaret visits her country home and meets an old sweetheart. Pretty rural scenes make this one of the best of the series.

"In Her Sleep." (Princess. May 15.)—Rarer plot introduced at the idea conveyed is good. An adopted child is accused of stealing her benefactor's necklace, but she is innocent. A man had walked in her sleep and hidden it.

"The Mohammedan Conspiracy." (Thanhouser. Two reels. May 15.)—Id may be lack of subtitles, or poor production, but this drama is certainly vague, so vague that even at the end the observer doesn't know what it's all about. The settings are excellent, and the scenes taken separately are highly interesting, but the plot is not clearly expressed, and this mars the whole thing.

"The Deputy Sheriff's Star." (Reliance. Two reels. Western, May 15.)—A comedy, not containing enough action to warrant two reels. The plot is completed by rescuing his successor from bandits.

"The Somnambulist." (Thanhouser, May 17.)—This picture is nothing like that released by another company some six months ago with the title of the same. A cure is a cure, and is cured of night walking by a sign on his back. There is some sleepwalking of a mild kind.

"Alzy's Aibi." (Thanhouser, May 24.)—Alzy's experiences are usually good, but this one is poor. He goes out to a smoker and tries to produce an all for his wife, but fails. The ending is weak.

"The Legend of Snow White." (Thanhouser, May 23.)—A beautiful drama taken from Hansel and Gretel same name. An aged couple are blessed with a little girl, coming to live in house. In the snow storm as the spring draws near the child weakens and dies. The effect given of the girl melting in the sun is poor, but this is the only fault.

"The Social Ghost." (Kay-Beo, Two reels. May 25.)—A pathetic drama appealing to all, as it touches the tender heart of all. A regretful husband is brought back to his wife, due to his wife's greed for a little rich girl, who is saved from drowning by a dog, belonging to the boy of the family.

"Zahel's Nerve." (Keystone, May 16.)—An excellent comedy, in which is played by Mayer Normand. Here she does some clever riding, in such a way as to appear most daring and skillful. It keeps the audience in a continual laugh.

"Footprints of Mozart." (American. Two reels. May 15.)—A pretty story is the subject of this offering, and the acting is below the American standard, but the dancing has been saved from suicide by the smart life of the Mozart before him. He is well rewarded.

"Beyond the City." (American. May 26.)—Pretty coloring and forest scenes add to the charm which features W. S. Wood and Vivian Rich. A young country girl gets a job at the Western city, returns home to her father and loves her for the work she has done.

"Warner's Features." (American. Three reels.)—Dorothy Farley stars in this drama, which is rather involved, but the plot is novel and new throughout. The photography is good, but the acting is in some places. There are a few sub-titles and they confuse the story perfectly. Jeanne, while yet a child, is left with a found by her parents, both her parents. The Chief takes her to a rancher's home where he leaves her, but still remains her friend and a father. Twelve years later the rancher wants her to marry his oldest son, but she is in love with the foremost cowboy. A number of experiences she and Eric are united. A cattle rancher riding adds greatly to the picture.

"The Mysterious Club." (Film Releasing of America. Three reels.)—Sensation marks every scene. The photography is beautiful and some of the scenes are colored and picturesque as well as sensational. But the plot of the drama is too deeply involved under so many disconnected points of view to be a laborious task to extricate it and will take more than the average mind to do so.

"A Woman's Heart." (C. and J. Two reels. Western) The scene of the release of this release, but a number of them appear to be well thought out. The story is happening in life, but its lesson is hardly what is to be expected. The list of fatalities that some to be taken in place of others. An unhappy marriage and the events that follow it are the main points of the theme.

Public Clamor Balks Bosses' Plans to Perpetuate Ohio Censors

"It's unconstitutional and she's not an elector," was the reply of Cassidy, who is a right arm, legally, of the Cox administration and who has 'saved the life' of the machine full many times and oft.

"She will serve, all right," said Burba, and he turned away.

We conferred with Governor Cox. He asked me my idea of censorship, and I told him that the idea was not very popular, but that as a board was determined upon, students of the motion picture art were essential as members. He expressed his pleasure at my views and asked me to appear before the Industrial Commission.

Over to the State Industrial Commission Mr. Cassidy and I journeyed. There we were quizzed for quite a while and satisfaction was expressed.

The writer left Columbus satisfied, even if he did not land the appointment, that good seed had been sown and that men educated in cinematography would be appointed. But the political powers ruled elsewhere.

The League President's Coup

Now Mr. Neff had been resting comfortably in the Queen City and organizing an occasional branch of the Exhibitors' League. Some one had in the Ohio "State Journal," some weeks previously, rather intimated that Mr. Maddox was a good man and several other inspired boosters for Mr. Maddox had appeared in the "Evening Dispatch."

All looked serene for Maddox for third member until a political wireless was sent to Neff that the writer was about to land on the board.

What! Odd Tutkins, likewise Gazooks!

Mr. Neff, we are reliably informed, hurried to Columbus. He was seen coming out of the State House. He carried some magazines in with him, it is said.

They were old copies of The Motion Picture News. The author had edited a department and the policy of A. H. Saunders, the editor at that time, was anti-state censorship. I had written anti-state censorship, and had never denied it.

Some of these articles, notably one or two in which I paid my respects to the pending bill in Ohio, were marked with pencil and shown Gov. Cox as one very strong argument why Miller, Vestal and Maddox should serve as board members and no one else whatsoever.

Then there came personal pleadings. I was informed the moment the opposition turned the trick and was urged to make the political situation known at that time.

However, I had accomplished all I could for our friends and for those who wanted a fair deal and the game was not further considered worth the candle by us.

Mr. Maddox was then named, and he proved efficient, and was the only member on the board that did not have one or two other irons in the fire.

Later he resigned to manage a new theatre in Columbus. He made a mistake not to follow out the policy of the other two members, for Mr. Maddox could manage his theatre, censor pictures and have time for other odd jobs.

But he's not that kind.
